One word further. I had hoped that we might have been spared by the learned gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBINSON] a dissertation on Ireland at this time. No man can more deeply feel than I do the wrongs of Ireland, and the necessity that something should be done to right those wrongs. But let me say to him, respectfully, that the way to get Ireland to have any protection from this Government is not to drag before us in season and out of season, at any and every turn, an amendment as a rider to everybody's proposition. It simply trails her in the dust.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] to allow me a single word, simply to say that I have never dragged Ireland in as a rider on any measure. The gentleman, I know, does not mean to be unjust, but he is extremely so in saying what he does. Ireland is suffering, and our citizens want protection there, and I ought to drag her in oftener, but I have refrained, because I do not want to obtrude myself too frequently upon the attention of the House.

Mr. DELANO. Mr. Speaker, the proposition now before the House in the resolution submitted by the honorable chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs is in itself so grave and so extraordinary that I desire as a part of my remarks the reading of the resolution, for the purpose of having the House distinctly understand and duly comprehend its import, its magnitude, its importance, its novelty. Will the Clerk do me the favor to read the resolution?

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and hereby is, authorized to extend to the Governments and people of the republics of Hayti and San Domingo the protection of the United States, for the purpose of assisting them to establish permanent republican institutions whenever those Governments, or either of them, shall apply to the United States for its protection, or whenever the President shall be satisfied that the Government and people of those republics desire or voluntarily consent to the protection of this Government: Provided, That the President shall communicate to the two Houses of Congress immediate information of any action which the Government of the United States may take upon this subject: And provided also, That no action which may call or require any appropriation of money from the Treasury of the United States shall be authorized or commenced under the authority of this resolution without the previous consent of Congress.

Mr. DELANO. Now, Mr. Speaker, what is it? That the President of the United States at pleasure may extend to the Governments of Hayti and San Domingo the protection of the United States in the establishment of Governments in those States, if said Governments, or either of them, apply for protection. That is the first part of it. The next part of it is that he may go there with protection, suo sponte, provided the Governments or the people in his opinion are willing to submit to it. Now, sir, is the Congress of the United States prepared to invest the Executive of this Government with such powers as are proposed by this resolution? It is not simply that he may give protection when called upon. That would not answer, I apprehend, the purpose and desire of those who favor this measure. But it is to enable him on his own judgment to go there with protection if he thinks these feeble Governments or the people therein will yield to it. I say, sir, that the analysis of this resolution is such as to convince everybody who listens to it that what I have said of it is correct. It is momentous, it is extraordinary, and before it receives the sanction of the American people it certainly ought to be understood in all its scope and bearing.

I observed just now that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] rose. Does he desire to ask me a question?

Mr. BANKS. No. I rose to say that if that which has been stated by the gentleman from Ohio is the only objection he has to the resolution, that the President is to determine whether he will do this or not upon what he may suppose to be the facts, I am perfectly content that that proposition shall be stricken from the resolution. It proceeds upon the fact which I have stated, that the people of these republics appeal for this protection.

Mr. DELANO. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have a proposition in writing before me. On that I speak, and about that I must vote. Whenever the phraseology of the proposition shall be changed, then, as a lawyer ought to do and as a member of this House respecting his duty will do, I will speak to the changed proposition. I now speak to the thing as it is.

Mr. BANKS. I reply to the gentleman's interpretation, not to the language of the resolution, because he has not cited it to sustain him. The interpretation which the gentleman gives to the resolution I do not think is the right one.

Mr. DELANO. Then I understand that the gentleman denies my construction of the resolution?

Mr. BANKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. DELANO. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it due to the House and to the country that it should be known exactly how such a proposition as this comes before the House. I therefore desire to say that this proposition has never had the sanction or approbation of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and to my knowledge it has not the sanction or approbation of a single member of that committee save the chairman. There was barely a quorum present when it was agreed in the committee that the chairman should have leave to report it, and that leave was given last Friday under the apprehension that the committee would be called on that day, and for the last time during this session, and that the proposition could not be made to the House unless the committee consented to let it be made in the manner I have stated.

I think this statement is due to the nation, because this is a grave and momentous proposition, proposing to reverse the policy of this Government in its foreign relations from the foundation of the Government up to the present time. It seems to me that the Committee on Foreign Affairs ought to have given the proposition its sanction before it became a subject of agitation in the Congress of the United States.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I understand what "manifest destiny" means. The eyes of a prophet have never to my knowledge been conferred upon me, and I do not know how much of this planet this Government will ultimately embrace within its control. All I do know is that I shall not prevent this progress so long as in making this extension we fail to violate any of the laws of good morals and are careful not to involve ourselves in a practice that will be disastrous to the future of this country, for which I hope I can see as glorious a prospect as those who are most eloquent on the subject of "manifest destiny." But, sir, if we have any manifest destiny worthy of approbation it is in obeying the laws of honor and justice, in showing to the world that we have a just and righteous Government that respects the rights of nations and of peoples; that will do no wrong itself and will submit to no wrong from others, and the Father of his Country and the founders of this Government, acting upon this definition of destiny, and believing, as I do, that the progress of our institutions would be best promoted by strict obedience to the laws of justice and of right, set at once and in the outset of the Government the example that we should not attempt to interfere with or control the affairs of other nations. I want to know now, sir, what you mean by protection?

Do you mean good offices in words, and to end there? Is that what this resolution means when it proposes that the President may at the invitation of these Governments or of his own free will offer them protection? Is it simply that he may go and give them good advice? I want to hear from the gentleman if that is the protection that they intend. Well, sir, silence gives consent, they say, in some places. I do not know whether it does in the House of Representatives or not.

Mr. BANKS. Not here at all. The gentleman alone has the right to speak now. If he gives me the floor I will answer him.

Mr. DELANO. I will yield to the gentleman for any reasonable length of time.

Mr. BANKS. I do not ask it now, but I will reply to the gentleman's question when my time comes.

Mr. DELANO. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Eight minutes.

Mr. DELANO. Then I must hasten on. I know very well, as was intimated in the pregnant questions put by my colleague, [Mr. BINGHAM,] that this protection is meaningless unless it means that if necessary it shall be protection by war, protection by force, protection by power. We can give, as the Government of Great Britain gave to the rebels in our severe and serious conflict, a sort of protection which would bring down upon us the execration of mankind, as it brought down our indignation against the Government of Great Britain. Such a protection as that might or might not end in war, but in my opinion it would certainly end in dishonor and in disgrace. I am, sir, therefore opposed to this Government departing from its solid, honest, long-standing policy, which is, that it will not interfere in the affairs of other Governments. Especially am I opposed to this Government departing from that policy at this time. When these islands are ready to come to us let us take them, not by purchase at forty times the amount they are worth, with all the evils that may grow out of the policy of paying for land. When we find a people ripe for our institutions and ready for our plan of government let us incorporate them and then protect them afterward. But to go out as a protector of other nations who are struggling among themselves for self-government is to adopt a policy which will end in the overthrow of our institutions and in ruin to our nation.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure I do not know why this plan of protection by this Government is forced upon our consideration at this time. As I understand it, the Haytian Government is now in an unsettled condition, with a chronic rebellion still pervading its territory. I see it reported in the newspapers that certain parties in some of the eastern cities have been advancing money to the rebels of Hayti to carry on their rebellion against the Government de facto. I do not know that this fact has come to the knowledge and attention of the honorable and distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. BANKS. It has not.

Mr. DELANO. I supposed it had not, and therefore I now call his attention to it. But the fact has been stated in the newspapers. Now, suppose the statement to be true; suppose that some of the people of New York and of Boston, the filibusters and the adventurers, there are at work to foment and continue the rebellion in Hayti, and have invested money in it, then it would be a glorious thing for them if the Government of the United States would now come to their relief in this unlawful and dishonorable purpose, and in some form or other enable them to recover back at least their money.

Mr. BANKS. A moment.

Mr. DELANO. Certainly.

Mr. BANKS. The gentleman will allow me to say that this is for the protection of the Governments of those islands, not for the rebels.

Mr. DELANO. And what or who is the Government?

Mr. BANKS. The people make the Government.

Mr. DELANO. Yes, sir; and two parties of the people are trying to make it. Which party is right? I suppose your President is to say.

Mr. BANKS. The gentleman will allow me to say, inasmuch as he has referred in this regard to my constituents—

Mr. DELANO. Oh, no.

Mr. BANKS. If they have contributed money to weaken or overthrow the Government of Hayti then we are against them with all the power of this Government, and with all its influence, if it be needed, to sustain the Government there.

Mr. DELANO. I did not refer to the constituents of the gentleman. I hope that the old Bay State has no filibusters in it who would be guilty of any such enterprise as that. But if any such persons are engaged in that enterprise, and they get any relief from me or from this House, I shall be very much disappointed. No, sir; I have no idea that any of the constituents of the gentleman are engaged in that way, or that the gentleman knows anything about it if they are so engaged. Nor do I know that the newspaper article to which I have adverted has any foundation in fact. But I know that there is a chronic rebellion in Hayti, and I have seen those reports in the newspapers. And I say that if those reports be true then I can see in this proposition only an opportunity of perhaps benefiting the parties engaged in it if you confer upon the President this unprecedented and dangerous power.

Mr. Speaker, I pray this House to deliberate well before it inaugurates this new policy. Let us stand by the old landmarks of the Government. Let us strengthen ourselves here at home. Let us pay the debt of honor, burdened some in the extreme, that now rests upon us as the price of the life of our nation. Let us act justly, and show the world that this country of ours is a place where human rights are protected and secured to all. And then, by this high example, let us propagate our institutions; but let us not attempt to propagate them directly or indirectly by the physical power of the Government. Let us not go out and voluntarily, as we might under this resolution, interfere in a conflict for the possession of a Government in one of these islands. Let us wait till the people of those islands desire to come to us; and then, if we are ready to take them, let us take them and protect them as a part of ourselves. I should greatly regret to see such a proposition as this, with all its dangerous consequences, entailed upon the incoming Administration. I should much dislike to trust this power with the present Administration during its remaining days. I shall therefore move to lay this whole subject on the table, unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WOODWARD,] who is about to take the floor, will agree to make that motion.

Mr. WOODWARD. I will make that motion; it was my intention to conclude my remarks with that motion. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that I am entitled to the floor for an hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to one hour.

Mr. WOODWARD. Then I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] for ten minutes.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised that the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] in view of the manifest sentiment of the House upon this subject, should undertake to press us to a vote upon the resolution which he has presented. I am not surprised, however, that the other gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] should propose to add the Antilles to the proposition of his colleague with reference to Hayti and San Domingo. Nor am I at all surprised that the honorable gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] should propose to add not only the Sandwich Islands, but all the innumerable islands of the Pacific ocean, including Japan, which may possibly be embraced in any future annexation or protectoration, if I may be allowed to coin a word. Nor was I at all surprised when my colleague from the Brooklyn district [Mr. ROBINSON] proposed to include Ireland in this contemplated protectorate. Nor shall I be surprised if in the progress of this discussion other gentlemen on this floor rise and propose to put the whole world under the protectorate of the United States, so that in the end all other countries may come under our control, thus making one united nation. I shall be especially surprised if some gentleman does not propose to extend the protectorate of the United States over the whole population of Africa.

But what surprises me most is that the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] while proposing to embrace within the protectorate of the United States eleven British islands, should hesitate for one moment to extend a like protectorate over Ireland. That gentleman, who indulges in so magnificent a eulogium upon the omnipotence of the millions of soldiers of the United States of America, certainly ought not to hesitate to face Great Britain by advocating the annexation or protectorate of Ireland, when he proposes to take under the protection of the United States such little islands as the three Caymans; Barbadoes, an important island; Grenada, another important island; Grenadines, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Trinidad, Tobago, and the very important Island of Jamaica, which are all included in the greater or lesser Antilles, and to which the gentleman proposes to extend the protectorate contemplated in this resolution.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Never without the consent of the Governments concerned.

Mr. BROOKS. Why, sir, a large majority—nine tenths at least—of the people of Ireland would to-day, but for the strong arm of Great Britain's military and naval power, demand the protectorate of the United States if they were allowed by the House of Representatives to indulge the hope that such a protectorate might be given. There is no earthly doubt that nine tenths of the population of Ireland are to-day hostile to the Government of Great Britain and pant for annexation to the United States, or even a protectorate by our Government. If a protectorate means a vote of the people of Ireland or the will of a government of that people a government already exists there, although in a secret form, in the Fenian organization, which would in a moment demand a protectorate of the United States if it could do so with hope of success. Why hesitate if our power is so omnipotent? The people of Ireland are a kindred people to ourselves. The blood of half the population of the United States is more or less mixed with that of Ireland; and yet to these Indian and African communities in the Antilles, not one drop of whose blood courses in our veins, you propose to extend your protection, while you hesitate to extend it to that little island from which so large a proportion of our own blood is derived. Sir, if this proposition is to pass I desire Ireland to be included. If that is done I shall be disposed to give it my vote; but if not, I am opposed to the whole proposition, and I trust it will receive but a small vote in the House.

Mr. WOODWARD. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, believing as I do that the people of the United States have the power and the right for their own defense to intervene, under the authority of their own law and with their Army and Navy, in the affairs of any other people on this continent or adjacent thereto whenever it may be essential to their own safety so to do, and of the necessity of which intervention they are themselves the judges, responsible always for the exercise of that judgment to the nations of the world—because of this conviction, Mr. Speaker, I felt it my duty to listen to the proposition for the protection of the people and Governments of the Antilles, as it came from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I was desirous to know what the condition of things was that so affected the interests of the people of the United States as to require our intervention. I have listened, Mr. Speaker, but have listened in vain, for any suggestion from any quarter intimating any condition of things in any of the islands of the Antilles that involves, to any considerable extent at least, the interests of the people of this country, much less their interest to such an extent as to require the intervention by the people of the United States, through the law-making authority, of the whole power of this nation in the internal affairs of that people.

Mr. Speaker, what I desire to say to the House here, and what I attempted to suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs yesterday, when he was kind enough to allow me a moment to interrupt him, is that whatever the relations of things may be between the people of the United States and any other people upon this continent or adjacent thereto requiring intervention it is all-important that that intervention be made in accordance with the requirement of the Constitution of this country. I listened with much interest to what was said by my honorable colleague [Mr. SHELLABARGER] founded upon the early legislation of this Government touching our neutrality laws, and upon the suggestion of that very profound and wonderful State paper, known as the Farewell Address of the Father of our Country; and I must say that I heard with something of surprise the remark of the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] in reply thereto, almost partaking of the language of sneer, when he intimated that he was not willing to consent that political wisdom had died with the author of the Farewell Address of Washington. Sir, nobody claims that; but intelligent men in this land and in all lands know right well that the accredited author of that paper, Mr. Hamilton, and the great man who accepted it and made it his own, are entitled not only to the respectful consideration, but to the profoundest gratitude of the living generations of men.

Passing, however, out of the text of the Farewell Address and into the text of the Constitution of the country I come to the discussion of this measure. I say here, for myself, that in my judgment it is not within the compass of human wisdom to frame any bill of any kind or on any subject more directly in conflict with the express limitation of the Constitution of the country than this. That instrument is not to be disposed of by a sneer here or anywhere else. Through it and by it we came to be a people; through it and by it we must continue to be one people if we continue to be one people at all. The war-making power of this country, which is involved in this resolution, is in my judgment, by the express terms of the Constitution, not by mere construction, but by its express, solemn words, restricted to the legislative department of this Government. Congress alone, by the terms of the instrument, is authorized "to declare war," and Congress cannot delegate that authority. It is an old time principle of the common law, known and accepted among intelligent men everywhere all over the globe, that a delegated power never can be transferred by the agent without the consent of the principal. The people are the principal in this matter, and they delegated this great power, which involves the issue of life and death to all the people of this country, to the legislative department of this Government, and to that legislative department alone; Congress cannot authorize the President of the United States, therefore, at his pleasure, and, in the language of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] when he may "deem it expedient," to make war either among the people of the Antilles or among the peoples allied to them upon continental Europe.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Allow me a single explanation?

Mr. BINGHAM. I can yield for a moment only, as my time is limited.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Permit me to say that I have not advocated that he should make war, because making war is in contravention of the laws of nations.

Mr. BINGHAM. I understand that the gentleman has not advocated it; he is too shrewd an advocate so to damage his proposition. But he will allow me to say that while he has not advocated it by speech he has advocated it much more potentially than by speech in presenting this substitute, and that is exactly the point I was coming to when the gentleman interrupted me. I submit to the candid judgment, not only of the members of the House but of the people of this country, that the very terms of the gentleman's substitute do vest in the President, if you pass the substitute and give it the effect of law, the power to make war. Why, the gentleman puts into his substitute a provision that the President shall exercise this power as he may deem it expedient in such way as shall not be "inconsistent with the laws of nations." I submit that it is hardly inconsistent with the laws of nations to make war. Our Constitution is not a part of the laws of nations.

It is not in the substitute provided that the President is to exercise this power as he may deem expedient, so as not to be inconsistent with the Constitution. That is precisely what was involved in the suggestion which I made yesterday, that as they were appending provisos to the resolution they might as well provide further that the President under it and by it shall do no act whatever which will involve a conflict of arms with anybody. It was my judgment that when you had put that proviso into the resolution there would be nothing left in it. In the words of my honorable colleague, [Mr. DELANO,] the whole thing would become meaningless; it would become an empty pretense, unworthy of the representatives of the people. But the language of the proposed substitute is that the President shall extend protection to such people of the Antilles as may request it when he may deem expedient, or to such Governments as may request it. I find the latter words, "the people," interlined in the manuscript text, and I suppose that is what is meant—either the people or the Government may request intervention. The President is first to decide what is the Government of one or all of these islands in our western archipelago; or he is first to decide who are "the people" in one or all of these islands; and having decided that, he is then to decide upon the expediency of protection; and having decided upon the expediency of protection, he is to extend protection; and when he extends protection, he is to extend it without limitation other than that named in the gentleman's substitute, to wit, that it shall not be "inconsistent with the laws of nations." This is the first time I have ever heard it intimated anywhere in the exigencies of debate that it is inconsistent with the laws of nations to make wars in order to give authorized protection. Instead of being inconsistent with the laws of nations, I hold that it is entirely consistent, not only with the laws of nations, but with the laws of the God of nations, to extend protection by all the powers and instrumentalities of war, when that protection is authorized and just and proper.

Now, if we are going to extend a protectorate over these islands, I propose to extend it according to law and with a due regard to the exigencies of the case.

Mr. WOODWARD. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. ROBINSON.]

Mr. ROBINSON. I have asked for five minutes to say a word upon this subject, in addition to what I have already had an opportunity of saying. The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] against whom, on this subject, I will not say a single word, because I know his heart is right in the movement I have proposed, and the only sensible movement in the whole proceeding—the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts has said some things to which I desire to reply. Sir, I have an utter scorn and contempt for the party or the man who could go mousing around among the nations, with the powers of a nation whose tread to-day shakes the world, whose power is feared all over the earth; the leading Power of the world, who goes mousing around for some half-breed and weak and insignificant Government upon which to hurl the strength of its military and naval power. I want to go at the large game first; and then if we are compelled to come down to small game I will go with gentlemen as far as I can.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] has asked me why I bring in Ireland as a rider upon every proposition before this House. I say to him, through you, Mr. Speaker, and I say to the public, as far as my voice can reach, that I have said nothing at all upon Ireland since I have taken my seat here, but, with the help of God, and with the permission of the House, if I can get the eye of the Speaker I intend to say a few words before I close my term of service here. When have I brought in this subject before? Upon what occasion have I mentioned Ireland here? But once, at the suggestion of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, [Mr. BANKS,] who requested me to make a few remarks upon the subject when a resolution of sympathy was introduced here. We then put Crete and Ireland together in the resolution; that resolution went over to the Senate, and there they struck out Ireland, because Ireland was under a great power. I have said nothing upon the subject of Ireland here, nor have I brought it in as a rider upon any subject.

I have tried to arouse the sleeping attention of this House to the fact that Ireland is to-day but an English Bastille for the imprisonment of American citizens; I have done that without being able to wake up the latent energies of this country, without being able to summon up from the depths of the hearts of the Representatives of the people on this floor a blush of shame for their conduct in this respect. To-day at least two men—and I might mention others, but I refer to the two, Warren and Costello—are pining in British prisons, having been sentenced for fifteen years. They are to serve out that sentence for words spoken and acts done in the United States, and the man who contradicts that statement has not given any attention to this subject, and has not read the official reports which for twelve months past have been lying upon the desks of members here. For no acts done in Ireland have they been imprisoned. They did not even kick a stone in Ireland; they did not even spit upon the soil of Ireland. Whatever they did was done in New York and in Boston. And yet those men lie there in prison, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] blames me for bringing this subject before the House, saying that I am always putting Ireland as a rider upon subjects here.

I am trying to arouse gentlemen to what the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] said, that if it is true it involves not only the peace but the honor of the Commonwealth. I told him then, as I tell the House now, that it does involve the honor of the Commonwealth. We will have no war with Great Britain; we cannot go to war for Ireland. We ask no protection farther than that you shall give Ireland fair play. Ireland alone is able to meet any Power upon the globe; she has more soldiers than any other nation except the United States; she has more brains and more disciplined troops to put in the field than Great Britain can oppose to her.

The SPEAKER. The five minutes of the gentleman have expired.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am sorry I have no more time.

Mr. WOODWARD. I now yield the floor for ten minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Speaker, I cannot quite agree with the declaration of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, made in reply to the question proposed to him, that we had no precedent for a proceeding like this. With deference, certainly, to his superior information, I think we have had more than one precedent, and that of no small importance. The Monroe doctrine is the protectorate by this Government over all the Governments upon the American continent; and when my friend from Ohio stands upon the outposts of the Constitution, and challenges the production of any authority under that instrument for the measure that is here proposed, I reply by the same authority which has authorized us to assert the Monroe doctrine in every possible form except by force of arms and the expenditure of money to enforce it—by executive rescripts, by the action of our Legislature, by the action of our national conventions, and, more than all, by the imperial authority of the ballot-box more than once announced.

One example, sir, is Mexico, menaced as she was during our late war of the rebellion. We established a protectorate over her which found its way into our legislation in the form of "the republic of Mexico," and in the adoption of a resolution by this body, offered by my deceased friend, then a Representative from Maryland, in which we declared that the empire of Maximilian should not be established in Mexico, such being the sense of this body, reflecting the judgment of the people. That was a protectorate of a higher kind than that of arms. It showed the high moral purpose which was in force in this world at the close of the nineteenth century, more powerful than the prowess of your arms.

In all the republics established or attempted to be established in the colonies of Spain, Portugal, or France there has been a power, an influence, a spirit, by whatever name we may choose to designate it, that is hostile and averse to a republican form of government. It is in accord with a foreign Power and allied to it that has its seat upon the banks of the Tiber. That influence has been at work from the beginning to undermine and overturn every one of these South American republics. It is that Power which has created disturbances in all the South American republics. It is that Power which sent Maximilian across here and attempted to put him upon the throne of the Montezumas. It is that Power, sir, which, as soon as war succeeded the breaking out of our Revolution, created disturbances in this unfortunate Island of San Domingo. The people understand it there as well as we do here. At this juncture of their affairs the people of that island find themselves at last disentangled from other nations. The ill influence of the Power to which I have referred has been felt in that beautiful and heaven-adorned island as it has been in the neighboring republic of Mexico. It has been the cause of their agony for years. Now in their distress they turn to us and ask us to introduce the same influence among them that we have established so beneficently in Mexico. That I understand, from the reading of the resolution and the exposition of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to be the action that is proposed on our part. It is to that extent and no more. I am ready, as my colleague has expressed it with so much force, to extend that moral influence to the people of that island or any other island when they come here like San Domingo and ask us for it.

I think, Mr. Speaker, with all deference to the distinguished gentleman from the Brooklyn district of New York, [Mr. ROBINSON,] that he had better bring in his proposition by itself and not insist upon it as an amendment to this resolution. The condition of the people of Ireland presents no analogy to that of the people of San Domingo. Ireland lies under the guns of a mighty Power which claims jurisdiction over it to-day, and which, according to his declaration, is exercising it in a high-handed manner. But there is no power on earth to take jurisdiction over these people. They stand as free among the nationalities of this world as any other people who exist. They come to us—and that is the declaration upon which this proceeding is based—and they say that owing to the malign influence brought upon them, and which is still operating, they have been unable to establish—and by establishing I mean not merely organization—a republican form of government. They ask us to do for that island what we have been doing substantially for the whole American continent, and what we did during the late war in the case of Mexico.

I am satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that the people of the United States have a mission upon this continent higher and broader and loftier than to sit down and make money to put into our pockets. God Almighty did not plant this nation here to live for itself and itself alone. Our mission is coextensive with the continent upon which we are placed. It has been our instinctive feeling, and our perhaps not always conscious action since our beginning, and in adopting this resolution we are doing nothing different in kind or character from what we have been doing in numberless instances in this House by acts of legislation and every other form of expression of our opinion.

Mr. WOODWARD. Mr. Speaker, ever since Christopher Columbus discovered this continent these islands have been for some purposes considered as a part of it. Geographically they ought, perhaps, to be considered as a part of this continent. I am told by those who know more about such subjects than I do that the commerce of this country needs one or more West India ports. I know that the relations existing between these islands and ourselves are from time to time subject to disturbance. I know that more than once in the history of this nation there have been propositions to purchase Cuba, and perhaps other islands in the West Indies. Now, sir, speaking only for myself and according to the information I now possess, I regard these islands as a part of the American continent. I believe they naturally belong to us, and if I am in public position when any reasonable measure is brought forward for the acquisition and annexation of those islands I shall support it according to the best of my ability. I believe that we need them, and that we shall need them more in the future than we have in the past. I believe that the fathers of our country, who have been fortunately alluded to in this debate, considered them as part of our continent, and when they spoke of a continental congress and a continental army, and called their money continental money, and when everything they said or thought of seemed to be continental, I suppose they embraced these islands in their thoughts as possibly belonging in the future to our political system.

I have spent my life in endeavoring to carry out the ideas and principles of the fathers of this Republic, and what remains of it, Mr. Speaker, shall be devoted to the same end. I believe they included these islands in their thoughts of a continental government. I include them in my thought of a continental government. But, sir, I would acquire them in a manner worthy of ourselves. I would either buy them by open and fair negotiations or I would conquer them by our military power. I would not steal them, sir, as this resolution proposes; and by just so much as I approve of the ultimate acquisition of these islands in a fair, honorable, manly mode I am opposed to the proposition reported by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, of acquiring them by indirection, which his resolution certainly contemplates.

Mr. Speaker, what is this resolution? He calls it a protection, and cheapens that down to a moral protection. If I understood him yesterday, this moral protection is to be enforced by our men of war in those seas. I do not know whether we can enforce it in San Domingo in any other way than by the use of our military power. Well, sir, the history of modern attempts at protection show in what manner they usually end. Russia undertook to protect the "sick man" Turkey, and brought upon herself a great war. France undertook to protect the empire of Mexico, and look at the deplorable consequences which followed that act. When we undertake protection of feeble Governments as yet foreign to us we shall attract and invite assault from every powerful nation of Europe. They will understand instantly that it will disturb the balance of power. We will then have upon our hands a war, a constitutional war, according to the views of my friend from Ohio, because it would be a war forced upon us by powerful nations which we have provoked to war by our folly. What is the motive for this, sir, at this time? If these islands are unable to govern themselves let them be annexed to this country and we will govern them, and govern them badly if we govern them as we now govern the people of the southern States. Indeed, it is a marvel to me that the gentleman from Massachusetts should want more negroes brought within our limits in view of the actual condition of things in this country at this time. It seems to me that it would be time enough to annex San Domingo and involve ourselves in an attempt more or less sensible to govern them after we had settled our own disturbed affairs in the southern States.

Sir, I think that the gentleman from Ohio hit this measure exactly when he said there was a speculation in it. If I understand the proposed substitute for the resolution of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, it includes Alta Vela as well as all the other outlying pigeon-roosts in those seas, and we know from what we have heard this winter that there is considerable speculation in Alta Vela. I hold that the Government ought to intervene in regard to Alta Vela so far as to protect the vested rights of our own citizens. I believe there are living in Maryland some honest men who own Alta Vela and who are good loyal citizens of the country, and the power of this Government ought to secure to these citizens their rights. But this is not the mode of doing it, nor is that object in the original contemplation of the resolution from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

This proposition, sir, to engage the Government in a military protectorate which is most likely to involve us in a general European war seems to me to be ill-timed in all of its aspects, and especially while we have a national debt like that which is oppressing us at this moment. Why, sir, we have a war debt now which is far from being provided for. Gentlemen are not well agreed as to what should be done with it. Do they propose to increase it by bringing on another war, and that for the purpose of adjusting our relations with islands which will ultimately gravitate to us and become a part of this country? This is no time for such a policy, and the gentleman's resolution if otherwise unobjectionable would be exceedingly objectionable in point of time. I think the entire energies of this country ought to be directed to the paying of our national debt. I say the paying of it, and not the funding of it. You may change the form of our public debt as much as you please, but still it will exist as a burden and incumbrance upon us until it is paid. I am not, therefore, for any measure which will withdraw the country from that great central point and destroy those energies and abilities which should be directed to the extinguishment of that debt.

Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that unless we get rid of the debt we will have no Republic of our own in the future to maintain. I believe that every monarchy in the world has been built upon a national debt, and that a great debt hanging over any people is inconsistent with republican institutions. If we would maintain our republican institutions, therefore, we must put ourselves back upon the principles of the fathers of the country, avoid all entangling alliances with all foreign Governments, and concentrate all our energies toward a redemption of our own country from the great burden of a national debt. If there was any one principle of George Washington and the other founders of the Republic better defined in their minds than another, it was that this should be a nation out of debt—a free and independent people, untaxed, and such a people we cannot be with such a debt as that which oppresses us at this time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, without going further into this debate, I will move that the resolution and the pending amendments be laid upon the table.

Mr. BANKS. I trust the gentleman will allow me a word.

Mr. WOODWARD. I withdraw my motion for that purpose.

Mr. BANKS. This is a question which cannot be evaded. It cannot be laid upon the table. By the providence of God and the movements of great nations it has been forced upon us, and must be decided. I trust that the House will allow the discussion to be continued for a reasonable time. I will not ask much. In order that we may act upon this question affirmatively or negatively, let us have a reasonable time for discussion. I do not ask unreasonable attention to it, but I do ask the House will discuss the question so that it may be understood fairly and fully, and we may have a decision in the affirmative or negative, and not evade it by the motion to lay upon the table.

Mr. WOODWARD. With every disposition to accommodate the gentleman from Massachusetts, I cannot with deference to the opinions of those around me withdraw my motion, and I must therefore insist upon it.

Mr. BANKS. Then I trust it will be voted down.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. CULLOM. If the motion to lay upon the table is voted down, will it not be then in order to move that the resolution and pending amendments be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Affairs?

The SPEAKER. That motion would then be in order.

Mr. CULLOM. I give notice that I shall make that motion if the motion to lay upon the table does not prevail.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 126, nays 86, not voting 60; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Archer, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Baker, Baldwin, Barnes, Barnum, Beaman, Beatty, Beck, Benjamin, Benton, Bingham, Boyden, Boyer, Bromwell, Brooks, Broome, Buckland, Burr, Calkins, Cary, Churchill, Cleader, W. Clarke, Coburn, Cook, Corley, Cornell, Covode, Cullom, Delano, Dockery, Dodge, Eckley, Ela, Ferriss, Fields, Fox, Gots, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Goss, Gravelly, Griswold, Grover, Haight, Halsey, Harding, Hawkins, Heaton, Hill, Holman, Hopkins, Johnson, Alexander H. Jones, Thomas L. Jones, Judd, Kelley, Kerr, Kitchen, Koontz, Lash, George V. Lawrence, Lincoln, Loughridge, Marshall, Marvin, McCarthy, McCormick, McKee, Mercer, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Morrell, Mungen, Newcomb, Newsham, Niblack, Nichols, Norris, O'Neill, Perham, Peters, Pettis, Phelps, Pierce, Pike, Poland, Polesley, Randall, Seofield, Shaubs, Shellabarger, Smith, Starkweather, Stevens, Stokes, Stone, Stover, Taber, Taffe, Thomas, Tift, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Auken, Burt Van Horn, Van Trump, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Welker, William Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodward—126.

NAYS—Messrs. Banks, Blair, Boies, Boutwell, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick L. Butler, Chanler, Sidney Clarke, Clift, Cobb, Deweese, Driggs, Thomas D. Eliot, James T. Elliott, French, Garfield, Gove, Higby, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Ingersoll, Maynard, Mullins, Plants, Price, Prince, Sawyer, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Sypher, Twichell, Vidal, Henry D. Washburne, Whittemore, Windom, and Young—36.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Blackburn, Blaine, Bowen, Buckley, Dwyer, Diegel, Dixon, Donnelly, Edwards, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Ferry, Hamilton, Haughey, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Julian, Kellogg, Kelsey, Ketcham, Knott, Laffin, William Lawrence, Loan, Logan, Lynch, Mallory, McCullough, Morrissey, Myers, Nunn, Orth,

So the resolution and amendments were laid on the table.

Mr. WOODWARD moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LOUISIANA ELECTION.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the resolution of the House, the return of the vote by which the late James Mann was elected to Congress from the second district of Louisiana; which was referred to the Committee of Elections.

L. ALCAN.

On motion of Mr. WINDOM, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of L. Alcan.

WINCHESTER AND ALABAMA RAILROAD.

On motion of Mr. ARNELL, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of papers in the case of the Winchester and Alabama railroad.

Mr. GARFIELD. Of course copies are to be left of these papers?

The SPEAKER. That must be done, unless otherwise ordered by special action of the House, and such action has not been provided for in either of these cases.

RESTRICTION OF FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. FARNSWORTH, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported back House bill No. 1549, to restrict and regulate the franking privilege; which was ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the same committee.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I wish to enter a motion to reconsider its recommittal. If I could do so I would insist that it should now be put upon its passage. It restricts the franking privilege, doing away entirely with fac-simile stamps, which the Postmaster General reports to us is the cause of a large deficiency in the revenue of the Post Office Department.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider will be entered upon the Journal.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. HAMLIN, one of its clerks, which announced that that body had passed without amendment House bill No. 967, to provide for the removal of the remains of Hon. W. T. Coggeshall, late minister of the United States at Ecuador, to the United States.

It also announced that the Senate had passed House bill No. 1261, amendatory of an act entitled "An act relating to habeas corpus, and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases," with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

It announced, in conclusion, that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 194) authorizing the transfer of certain appropriations heretofore made for the public printing, binding, and engraving; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ALASKA.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, from the Committee on Territories, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1681) to provide a temporary government for the territory of Alaska; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Let the bill be read.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I will state to the House that there are but two provisions in this bill differing from those contained in the ordinary territorial bills; and unless the House wants the whole bill read I will ask the Clerk to read only those two provisions.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask the whole bill may be read. This is just what I expected when we went into this Alaska business.

The bill was read.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. This is a simple territorial bill, and contains the same provisions, with the exception of those to which I have referred, contained in previous territorial bills. The territory of Alaska having been acquired, the question now is, whether it shall have a civil or military government. The committee have instructed me to report this bill, and unless some gentleman desires to move an amendment I shall call for the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Will not the gentleman allow any discussion of this bill?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. How long does the gentleman want?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Ten minutes.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman for ten minutes.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The Committee on the Territories, Mr. Speaker, has sprung upon us this morning this bill providing for a temporary government for the territory of Alaska in such a way that I do not know what will come next. We have just had before us the question of a protectorate over some of the islands in the West Indies, and all sorts of things in that direction down among the earthquakes, and now my friend from Ohio proposes to go up among the icebergs and establish a territorial government where, I am advised, outside of the Army there are not fifty white men living. He proposes to establish this territorial government there for this small number of white persons, and to impose upon the United States an annual expense of, I take it, not less than $50,000. Before I vote upon this bill I desire that the gentleman from Ohio, instead of calling the previous question, shall submit to the House some observations showing, if he can, the absolute necessity for the establishment of this government. For one, sir, I can see no such necessity. All that we want in that territory is the military government which we have there at present. This military government affords full and ample protection to all our interests there, and involves us in no expense beyond the ordinary cost for the maintenance of the Army.

I have not had time, Mr. Speaker, to go over this bill in detail; but I was surprised at the statement of the gentleman from Ohio when he said that this is but the ordinary bill for the establishment of a territorial government. Sir, I find upon the eighth page of the printed bill an extraordinary section—section seven—and I undertake to say that this whole bill had its inception—of course without the knowledge of my distinguished friend—in that section. Now, sir, it is known that if there be any value at all in this territory of Alaska it is in the seal fisheries. The island of St. Paul, which is embraced in the Alaska purchase, is the only home of the fur-bearing seal in the world. The House will recollect that at the close of the last session, when this subject was brought to our attention by the Secretary of the Treasury and was referred to the Committee on Commerce, we passed an act making an appropriation of $60,000, and providing that no seal should be killed until further legislation by Congress on the subject. At that time the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury and the opinion of this House was that it was our duty to protect those seal fisheries, which, as I contend, are the only valuable part of that purchase. What do we now find? While the Committee on Commerce, under the lead of its chairman, the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT,] is, as I understand, considering this subject, and endeavoring to devise such regulations that the United States may derive a revenue from those seal fisheries, the gentleman from Ohio, in his bill for the establishment of this territory, incorporates this extraordinary section, which I will read:

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the Legislative Assembly of the territory shall at its first session provide by law for the preservation of the valuable furs in said territory, especially the sea otter, the seal, and the beaver.

Thus the jurisdiction of the United States over this subject is taken away, and the whole question is put under the control of the Legislative Assembly of that territory. Half a dozen speculators going up there may get into the territorial legislature, and by making such laws as they please may take possession of this whole seal fishery. That, I undertake to say, was one of the controlling considerations which induced the bringing in of this bill. Sir, I know what attempts have been made before the Committee on Commerce—my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] will state the facts more distinctly—to obtain the monopoly of those seal fisheries. Certain companies are endeavoring to obtain for a mere song the exclusive right of carrying on those fisheries.

But, sir, independently of the proposition embraced in this seventh section, which, I take it, the gentleman from Ohio will not undertake to press upon the House, my great objection to this bill is that there is no earthly necessity for the establishment of this territorial government; that such a measure is not demanded of us for the protection of any rights of American citizens there. If there be no necessity of this kind I ask why should this House embark in this scheme for the expenditure of the public money? Why is it necessary to establish this government in that territory when we have no people there requiring protection except those who can be protected by the military force already there? The accounts which we receive from that territory of the sickness and suffering of the people who are sent there show conclusively that it never will be inhabited to any considerable extent by white people. Why, sir, it was but the other day I saw that one of our Army officers there had committed suicide from sheer home-sickness in consequence of being driven there into banishment by the Government which placed him on duty in that territory. We shall have a small force there, and the smaller the better; and probably, as my friend from Massachusetts suggests, we shall have a bill brought in by my colleague [Mr. CULLOM] to bring home the body of this distinguished military officer who has sacrificed his life in the service of his country in the territory of Alaska.

Now, sir, I desire gentlemen should look over this bill; look at the machinery; look at your future delegate in Congress who will have to come a distance of five thousand miles, for which he will be entitled to mileage, to say nothing of his salary. And I presume he will be elected by a mass meeting at that. Look at your court and legislature, with all the paraphernalia of a government for fifty white people outside of your military force. I trust the House will vote down the bill, and that we shall hear no more of this expenditure for that territory.

Mr. MUNGEN. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman has no right, after the passage of the fourteenth article of amendment to the Constitution, to make any distinction on account of color. He talks about white people. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. FERRISS. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to allow me to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I will allow it to be read.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the President be authorized to bind the United States by treaty to pay the sum of $7,200,000 to any respectable European, Asiatic, or African Power which will accept a cession of the territory of Alaska.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I decline to allow that amendment to be offered.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I would like to have a vote upon it.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts. I rise for the purpose of offering an amendment to the bill by striking out the seventh section:

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. That motion may be entered.

The Clerk read the section proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

That the Legislative Assembly of the territory shall at its first session provide by law for the preservation of the valuable furs in said territory, especially the sea otter, the seal, and the beaver.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. PRICE. I wish to say that I think before passing this bill organizing the territory of Alaska we ought to know how many people there are there to be governed, and to know whether the expense we are proposing to incur is justified by the necessities of the case. I tried all I could when the question of the purchase of that territory was before Congress to prevent it. One reason why I opposed it was because I knew from the natural course of things that it would not be long before we would be asked to spend money to keep that which we were purchasing. And now if it be true, as I believe, that there are very few persons there, and as I believe the military forces in the territory can keep it in a better condition and at less expense than in any other way, I think we had better refuse to establish a territorial government there.

Look at the expense to be incurred—six dollars day for every member of the Legislature and six dollars for every twenty miles travel. The delegate to Congress will receive $5,000 a year salary, and how many thousand dollars for mileage I cannot tell, not knowing the distance. It is almost to us a foreign country. I shall be surprised if this House, without knowing that there is a necessity for this measure, shall undertake to incur this expense and encourage this kind of thing. I hope, therefore, that it will refuse to organize the territory. Now that we have got it and cannot give it away or lose it, I hope we will keep it under military rule and get along with as little expense as possible. It is a dead loss to us any way, and the more expense we incur for it the worse it is for the country and the people. I hope, therefore, that the bill will not pass. If I had the floor to make a motion I would move to lay it on the table; but as I have not, the only thing I can now do is to vote against the bill.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. The argument of the gentleman who has just addressed the House would be very good as against the acquisition of this territory. But it having been purchased, and the sovereignty of the United States having extended over it under the obligation of the treaty made with the emperor of Russia, in my judgment, we are bound in good faith to extend to every citizen of Russia, made by that treaty a citizen of the United States, and to every citizen of the United States who now is or may hereafter be a resident of that territory, the benefit of a civil government.

Mr. MILLER. I desire to ask the gentleman what is the number of inhabitants in that territory exclusive of Indians?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Exclusive of Indians there are several thousands. It was stated at the time the treaty was under consideration in the Senate that a large number of foreigners, several thousands, not only Russians but other foreigners, had settled and were resident there.

Mr. WILSON, of Pennsylvania. I desire to ask the gentleman whether he designs by this bill to establish female suffrage in the territory of Alaska?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. No, sir.

Mr. WILSON, of Pennsylvania. As I understand the fifth section of the bill it allows female suffrage there. And I desire to ask the gentleman whether a female may be appointed governor of the territory?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. The fifth section of the bill, as reported by the committee, reads that "every male citizen of the United States above the age of twenty-one years" shall be an elector.

Mr. WILSON, of Pennsylvania. That is not in the printed bill I have before me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio stated that there were some changes in the printed bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Pennsylvania. The explanation is satisfactory.

Mr. PAINE. I wish to ask the gentleman who reported this bill whether it is not a fact, as I have been informed, that every single Russian has left that country?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Upon that point I have no authoritative information—none that I can communicate to the gentleman.

A MEMBER. It is so stated in the newspapers.

Mr. FERRISS. Will the gentleman vouch of his own knowledge, or have the committee any knowledge, that there are a hundred persons in that territory now who speak the English language?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Oh, yes, sir; more than that have gone there from California alone.

Mr. FERRISS. I mean outside of the military.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. And I mean outside of the military.

Mr. FERRISS. Do you know it?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Yes, sir. As chairman of the Committee on the Territories I am entirely indifferent whether the House orders this government to be established or not, but as a member of this House I feel it to be my duty to vote for the establishment of a civil government of some kind in this territory; and I believe that a government, such as has been established in all the Territories and has been tried by practical working, is the best form of government for people in a distant and sparsely populated country.

Now, I desire to say a single word with regard to the section which my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] proposes to strike out. My friend from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] supposes that that section has been interpolated into the bill by some scheming individuals who have been mousing around the Capitol. I want to say to him that that section was put into the bill without any suggestion from any person except a Senator, and that it had the unanimous approval of the committee. So far from this section authorizing the Legislature to grant any special privileges to anybody, it expressly provides that they shall enact at their first session stringent penal laws for the protection of the valuable fur-bearing animals of the territory, and especially the sea otter, the seal, and the beaver. The committee having no knowledge as to the proper months in which those animals might be killed, or the number of them which might be safely and properly killed, they proposed to leave that matter to the territorial Legislature representing the interests of the people of that country. We provide specially in the bill that the Legislative Assembly shall not grant private charters or special privileges to any persons, but they may by general incorporation act authorize persons to associate themselves together as bodies-corporate for "mining, manufacturing, and other industrial pursuits." "Other industrial pursuits," I take it, covers the whole ground. They could pass a general incorporation law, and any number of persons who chose—whether one company or ten companies—could organize under that law and engage in the seal fishery, or in hunting for fur-bearing animals, or in mining, or any other industrial pursuit. I believe that when the House considers this matter they will see that that provision is to guard and protect the interests in the territory, and that to strike it out is but to invite men there without the restraints of local law to destroy these animals until such time as Congress may in its wisdom devise an act which shall comprehend and cover this whole question, which may be four or five years hence.

Now, sir, I hope this section will not be stricken out. I propose to call the previous question upon this bill; but before doing so I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ELIOT,] that he may speak upon his proposition.

Mr. LOGAN. Before the gentleman does that will he yield to me for a question?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. I find in section six of this bill the following proviso:

Provided, That the Legislative Assembly shall not grant private charters or special privileges for any purpose, but they may, by general incorporation acts, authorize persons to associate themselves together as bodies-corporate for mining, manufacturing, and other industrial pursuits.

The seventh section of this bill provides—

That the Legislative Assembly of the territory shall at its first session provide by law for the preservation of the valuable furs in said territory, especially the sea otter, the seal, and the beaver.

Now, I would inquire of the gentleman whether a company could not be organized under a general law, and then be authorized by the Legislature, under the provisions of the seventh section, to take possession of the whole fur trade, with full power and authority under the general clause of "preservation of the valuable furs in said territory," depriving the Government of all control over the subject?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I think my friend from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] is too good a lawyer to have any doubt upon that point. I have provided in the most stringent manner possible that the territorial Legislature shall not grant any special privilege whatever.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand that. But the reason I asked the question is this: that the words "industrial pursuits" may by construction be made to cover all things of this character, where they are not in the nature of manufactures and things of that kind.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Let me answer my friend by asking him, if he was called upon as a member of the Legislature to pass a general corporation act to authorize men to organize under it for any purpose, could he possibly organize any special corporation to exercise any exclusive right in any water or any part of the land of the territory? They must all be under a general law; and not only one but five hundred organizations may be made if there are people enough there and industrial pursuits enough there to justify them. Gentlemen will find this proposition substantially in the constitutions of all our western States. It is in the constitution of Ohio, providing that the Legislature shall not grant any special charters.

Mr. LOGAN. I will answer the question of the gentleman. I would understand the law to be this: section six, providing that no special privileges shall be granted, will apply to special legislation alone. Therefore the Legislature could provide specially for the organization of a company to pursue any particular pursuit. But it is also provided in the same section that the Legislature may provide for corporations under general law. Hence they may provide by general law for associations being formed by persons coming together and filing a certain instrument, or writing, or something of the kind, when they would become an organized company to all intents and purposes, as much so as though there was special legislation for the purpose. That is the manner in which I would construe that clause, and the gentleman will find that it will be so construed by almost anybody.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Suppose this provision is in the constitution of Massachusetts; and I trust they have a provision like it. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] contend that the Legislature of Massachusetts could pass a law granting the exclusive right to any corporation to fish in the waters of that State? Of course, they could not. But under a general incorporation law one company or ten companies might be organized to fish in the waters of Massachusetts wherever they may have the right on the shore to draw their nets.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If the gentleman will indulge me for a moment, I will say what I think would be the operation of these two sections taken together. The sixth section provides that companies shall be incorporated under general law. Suppose that this bill becomes a law. The Legislature meets, and parties appear there who desire to get hold of the seal fisheries. I do not know who was the astute Senator who suggested this provision. But we will suppose that there are parties who desire to get control of the seal fisheries. The Legislature passes a general incorporation law, and those parties organize under it. What is the next thing to be done? You propose to confer upon that Legislature the right to pass laws for the preservation of seals and other fur-bearing animals. Here is a company that is organized; here is a power to preserve these seals; and so the Legislature proceeds to enact that the seal fisheries shall be preserved by this company and by no other. It gives the exclusive right to this company as it would have power to do under the authority conferred by this bill. That will be the operation of the provision.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I utterly deny—and I am surprised that the gentleman from Illinois should make such a declaration on this floor—that the Legislature under this grant of power would have the right to preserve the fisheries by giving a monopoly of the whole fur trade and fish trade of the territory to one corporation.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The Legislature, Mr. Speaker, would say, "We believe that the only way in which the seal fisheries can be preserved is to confer the exclusive right upon this company. Congress has placed no restriction upon us, and we can use our own judgment as to the best means of accomplishing the object."

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will answer all that by saying that no act of a territorial Legislature is valid if Congress chooses to nullify it; and if the Legislature of this territory should pass any law in contravention of the territorial act or of its true purpose Congress may annul such law. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ELIOT.]

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on the Territories [Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio] has thus far failed to indicate to the House any reason for the passage of this bill except the general one that here is a tract of land over which there is now no civil government. He has not shown to the House why civil government should at this time be extended over Alaska. If there are not more white men there than have been stated the gentleman will, of course, admit that in order to fill up the offices which the bill proposes to create there would have to be emigration from the States into Alaska; and thus gentlemen who have been in any way left without positions will find an opportunity under this bill to fill very respectable offices in that territory.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. And blow their brains out. [Laughter.]

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts. And blow their brains out, if they choose to follow the example of the military officer mentioned by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN.]

But I want to say a word as to this seventh section. The House will remember that at this moment, under the law now in force, the killing of the fur-bearing seal in Alaska is prohibited. If the existing law should be continued in force during the next year the destruction of these animals would cease during that time, and they would have an opportunity to increase. The Secretary of the Treasury has under the existing law the power to regulate the taking of all other fur-bearing animals—the otter, the beaver, &c., the killing of the seal being altogether prohibited. Now, let me state to the House what would be the effect of passing this bill in the shape in which it stands. In the first place, it would impose upon the Treasury of the United States the large expense of conducting civil government in Alaska. It may be that that is right; it is not that point I am considering. But the bill will not only impose upon the Treasury that expense—

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I trust the gentleman will give way for a moment. The hour is nearly out, and I desire to call the previous question before it expires. When the previous question has been seconded the discussion can go on and the gentleman can resume the floor.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts. Let me finish my sentence. The passage of this bill will not only impose upon the Treasury of the United States the expense of civil government in Alaska, but it will deprive the Treasury of a sum not less, in my opinion, than $200,000 annually. This is the amount which will go into the Treasury every year if the killing of the fur-bearing seal be properly regulated by law.

Mr. CHANLER. I move the following as an additional section:

And it is made the duty of the Legislature of the territory organized under this act, as soon as practicable, to colonize a portion of said territory by transporting thither from the United States all persons convicted in any of the States or Territories thereof of crime and condemned to hard labor for a term exceeding two years.

Mr. BROOMALL. Would not that make the territory Democratic?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I cannot yield for any such amendment.

Mr. CHANLER. What objection can there be to it?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I cannot reply now. I demand the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the bill and amendments be laid on the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 95, yeas 26.

So the bill and amendments were laid on the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill and amendments were laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 967) to provide for the removal of the remains of Hon. W. T. Coggeshall, late minister of the United States at Ecuador, to the United States; when the Speaker signed the same.

RESUMPTION OF SPECIE PAYMENTS.

The SPEAKER stated that the morning hour had expired, and the first business in order was House bill No. 1364, to provide for the gradual resumption of specie payments, reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency by Mr. LYNCH, and made the special order for the first Wednesday in January, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. LYNCH] is absent on account of sickness, and at his request I move that its further consideration be postponed until next Friday after the morning hour.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Make it Saturday.

Mr. KELLEY. If the House should adjourn from Friday to Monday and this special order should be postponed until Saturday, what would be the effect on this bill?

The SPEAKER. It would come up after the morning hour as the special order, as it is the special order from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. PRICE. I demand the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Digest says that a question of postponement does not bring up the merits of a bill, and therefore the gentleman cannot demand the reading of the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I think that it should be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, and will move that its further consideration be postponed until Saturday next.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I hope that will be agreed to, as the gentleman from Maine is absent on account of sickness.

The motion was agreed to.

REPEAL OF TENURE-OF-OFFICE ACT.

The SPEAKER stated that Mr. ARCHER, having been absent when the vote was taken on the repeal of the tenure-of-office act, would, if he had been present, have voted for it, and Mr. BROOMALL, and Mr. WILLIAMS of Pennsylvania, would have voted against it.

UTE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with an estimate of appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various bands of Ute Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

NIAGARA SHIP-CANAL.

The SPEAKER stated that the next business in order was House bill No. 1202, to provide for the construction of a ship-canal around the falls of Niagara; which was made the special order for the second Tuesday of January after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York, took the floor.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I hope the gentleman from New York will yield to me to move that the House go into the Committee of the Whole, as I desire to submit some remarks in reference to the public lands.

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. I do not object if it be the understanding that this bill will come up to-morrow after the morning hour and that I shall be entitled to the floor.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object to that.

The bill was read.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I ask unanimous consent that an amendment which I propose to move to this bill shall be ordered to be printed.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that, by unanimous consent, this bill shall go over till to-morrow with the gentleman from New York entitled to the floor, and that we shall go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to let the gentleman from Kansas submit some remarks, with the understanding that no further business shall be done this evening.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ORTH was granted indefinite leave of absence.

JAMES A. DREW.

On motion of Mr. PETERS, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of James A. Drew.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BENJAMIN. What has become of my motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The House has, by unanimous consent, agreed to resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole. The Chair asked if there was objection, and he heard none.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I did not consent to that.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair will entertain the motion to adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, it was disagreed to.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the President's message of 1867.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. VAN HORN, of New York, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the President's annual message of 1867.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, our public-land system is one of the best safeguards of the Republic. Whoever owns the land of a country, be they many or few, will in the end control its politics. It is the appreciation of this fact that has been the motive of many of the agrarian struggles and agitations in the past history of the world. Where the masses of the people own the soil, that country is strong to resist all external foes and to overcome much of internal dissension. Where the land is controlled by a minority, poverty will surely abound and the national vitality will be destroyed. France and England are good illustrations of this fact. If 1703, with all its terrors, accomplished no more than to take the land from the oligarchy it overthrew and divide the same among the democracy it created, it gave to France a power which the banded armies of Europe could do no more than temporarily defeat. It found France a land of serfs and left it a nation of landholders. The transfer of the soil from the nobility to the people was the foundation of social equality.

Take Great Britain as an example of an opposite condition. Vast forces have cohered to hold her empire strong, in spite of the fatal malady which at home eats out its vitals. The capacity for colonization possessed by the English people has alone saved the English system from downfall. Land, denied at home, has been won by the Englishman abroad. Just in proportion as its occupation there has been untrammelled the colonies of England have grown great.

But the landed monopoly, increasing at so fearful a rate during the last century, is the Nemesis which pursues the haughty oligarchy that still controls England and hastens the fate that sooner or later overtakes all governments and peoples who build injustice and rapacity into systems. All students of modern politics know, that in Europe, Great Britain has descended from a controlling to a second rate position. Were it not for her broad colonies, with their rich and free lands to lift teeming millions from poverty into comfort, affording markets for the products of the busy workshops at home, the crash, in my judgment, would have come long since. Twenty-five years before our war of independence the soil of England was in the possession of over three hundred and fifty thousand persons. To-day the land of Great Britain, with its thirty odd millions of inhabitants, is outside of its cities owned by about thirty-two thousand persons. The yeomanry of the mother country were transferred to these shores, and brought with them that grand ideal of the Anglo-Saxon brain, a free government upheld by willing obedience to law—a land in which each family could own its own home, and where the soil should be in the possession of those who cultivated it.

Sir, in our own midst we have had fearful examples of land monopoly. No portion of our country has escaped its destructive influences. North and South the great evil has appeared to bar the public prosperity and to crush the unfortunate and the poor. Just in proportion in each of the States that the soil has been opened to the tiller, just so far as labor has been able to possess its fruits, security has been stable and progress assured. The old slaveholders understood well the truth of this political axiom. They therefore steadily sought to obtain entire control of the soil in their own States, and as persistently hindered the development of that homestead policy into which the genius of our free institutions has molded our land system. At this moment the owners of the land in the South are striving, under the most fearful disadvantages, to maintain their control of the soil, confident if they can do so they will in the end resume a large share of the political power of this country. But they will fail. The land, like the slaves, will pass from their grasp. It will become the home of freemen, and the land oligarchy, which is only a remnant of the slave system, will pass away forever.

To insure the success of democratic institutions we need not only general intelligence but conditions of life conducive to the comfort of all who live under them. The elder Napoleon once said, sententiously, "that an army traveled on its belly," meaning that it needed a good commissariat. So do free institutions. Civilization wins continued growth more by its capacity for securing the means of living well than by all else that it produces. Make labor honored and you are certain to make it intelligent. Out of such conditions true democracy, the normal type of all untrammelled political aspirations, asserts itself. It is an understanding of these conditions which makes intelligent our admiration of our beneficent homestead policy and enables us to comprehend clearly the absolute necessity of guarding with jealous care its wise provisions from encroachment and overthrow. Sir, as it now stands, it is a proud monument of the liberality and sagacity of this great Republic. It is not only that, but, as cannot be too often repeated or too deeply impressed upon the public mind, especially upon those of us who are called to legislate on the subject, this homestead policy is one of the Republic's strongest safeguards.

And let it not be forgotten, Mr. Chairman, that to the Republican party, of which we have the honor in common with the large majority of this House to be members, belongs the honor of passing upon and almost perfecting the grand system of laws by which the public domains was wedded forever to the free homestead idea. Look for a moment at these two great facts: the gun at Fort Sumter had hardly woke a continent to arms ere their Representatives passed the acts by which the nation pledged itself to span the continent by the Pacific railroad and bind two oceans together in bonds that should never be severed. Within the eventful year that followed the Republican party passed the first homestead bill, and thus sealed the Republic forever, as with blood, to its highest hope and best ideal.

Mr. Chairman, it will be worth while briefly to note the path by which we traveled to this result. We shall see, in spite of the teachings of history, that we moved but slowly to that intelligent acceptance of an idea which has found so far one of its best embodiments in that homestead policy.

Our public-land system dates from the cession to the General Government by the State of Virginia of the great northwest territory. From that date we can really declare that the American Union began its continental destiny, even though the first act of the General Government was a restrictive one; so far, at least, as related to the occupation of the public domain. I refer to the proclamation by Congress in 1785, forbidding settlement thereon. But the crude and wrong ideas that then prevailed on the subject could not resist the influence of that beneficent condition which was fundamental to the acceptance of this great territory. The Jeffersonian ordinance by which slavery was forever excluded from its borders rendered inevitable another great and desirable result, the possession of the soil by the people thereof. The six great States which have since been carved out of that two hundred and ninety thousand square miles of free territory, have now at least eight million inhabitants, all free, possessed of the means of education, and with ready access to the proper rewards of honest industry and intelligent enterprise.

We began our land system by forbidding settlement. We marked it about by sales of at least two huge tracts to private individuals and companies—I refer to the "Ohio Company" and the Symmes tracts, both in Ohio—and we followed this up in 1804 by the passage of an act that, like the proclamation of 1785, virtually forbade settlement. Nevertheless it went on. In 1807 the President was empowered to remove such persons until settlements were authorized by law. From that time until 1830, when the first general preemption law was passed, the legislation of the country recognized the principle involved, that the land belongs to the settler, by the adoption of special acts of preemption in individual cases. In 1830, in 1832, and 1834, laws were passed, general in their character but retrospective in action, giving to those who were already on the land and had labored there the right to preempt the same on certain conditions. The price was named and the quantity limited that any one head of a family could obtain. Before this the disposal of our public lands was altogether effected by public and private sales, without limitations of price or quantity, though land remaining unsold after a number of years was as now offered for sale at very small prices. In September, 1841, the first genuine step in the homestead policy was inaugurated by the passage of a preemption act prospective in its character. This wise law laid bonds on the future. When the Republic needed aid, out of the society this principle had nurtured, came the sturdy regiments that captured Fort Donelson, stood granite-like amid the bloody surges of Pittsburg Landing, dashed themselves invincibly against the ramparts of Vicksburg, opened the great river from the Falls of St. Anthony to the New Orleans delta, poured their blood like water at Stone river and Chickamauga, rose above the clouds and stormed the rebel works on Lookout mountain, fought like Titans from Chattanooga to Atlanta, marched with Sherman to the sea, drove Hood back from Nashville, swept through the Carolinas to where their great leader granted no respite to treason, and then, greatest wonder of all, marching homeward and melting away as they came into the great body of peaceful citizenship, graver, sterner, surer of a country, prouder of its fame, ready as before to die for it if need be, better citizens, and more faithful than ever to its laws and traditions.

From the passage of the act referred to in 1841, our legislation has been chiefly in one direction—that of a broader and more liberal recognition of occupation and labor and of limitation of quantity as the true basis of land-ownership. The preemption acts of 1853-54 made stable that policy and corrected most of its errors and abuses. From the quarter of a century which followed the passage of the law of 1841 the discussion over a proposed homestead law grew more interesting, year by year attracting more and more of the public attention. Those who led in the fight for that beneficent measure against the resistance of southern oligarchy and northern speculators are still with us, and are entitled to the continued gratitude of the American people.

The homestead act was passed by the Thirty-Seventh Congress, at its first regular session. Since the war closed, and as a part of our reconstruction system, Congress has passed two others, by which about fifty million acres of public land, situated within the rebel States—long since left a prey to the land speculator—was placed under the operations of the homestead system, the limit of each farm being in this section wisely placed at eighty acres.

Mr. Chairman, the result of the homestead policy "whoso runs may read," in rapidly-growing communities, in populated States where a few years since the buffalo fled before the Indian, in increased wealth, and the laying deep the foundations of a wide-spread prosperity. From 1862, when the first homestead law went into operation, down to June 30, 1867, the entries under the various acts have covered 7,000,000 acres, making a total of 43,750 farms of 160 acres each; supporting, according to the average rate of five persons to a family, a population of 218,750 souls. Within the late insurrectionary States the homestead entries, in less than two years, under the act passed for that section, have reached 3,764, an average of 225,840 acres, with a population planted on the soil of 18,820 persons.

Sir, these results enable the merest tyro in political economy to understand the advantages of the homestead policy, so far as it affects the general prosperity and consequent stability of society. They show what might have been had the system been adopted earlier. They enable us to understand what is the true value of that domain we have given and are still proposing to give in such munificent grants. Let us look for a moment at what would or might have resulted had our public lands been from the beginning disposed of only to actual occupants of the soil. The entire area of the "public land" States and Territories, beginning with Ohio and ending with Alaska, is estimated at 1,834,938,400 acres, of which over 435,000,000 acres are surveyed, and therefore open to legal settlement. Of this vast body the Government since its organization has sold over 154,000,000 acres. Thirty million acres of this land are still in the hands of those who hold them for speculative purposes. If it had been placed under the homestead or preemption system, it would have given us 187,500 homesteads of 160 acres each. It can hardly be a matter of doubt that if the circumstances had favored, as they now do, the whole would have been reduced to occupancy as farms.

Besides the 30,000,000 thus passed into the hands of monopolists, the Government has granted to Pacific railroads 124,000,000 acres; for other railroads, west and south, 57,000,000 acres; for canals, 17,000,000 acres; to the States, and already selected as "swamp and overflowed land," over 60,000,000 acres. To these must be added the 9,600,000 acres granted to the States in aid of establishing agricultural colleges, most of which has been or will be sold by scrip, and thus pass into the hands of the land speculators. If we take these figures we shall find that the total amount of our public lands disposed of since the organization of the Government reaches the enormous aggregate of more than 420,000,000 acres, to which amount we must add that granted for military and naval services. Their aggregate reaches 71,716,555 acres, making the total disposed of 493,816,555. According to the able commissioner of the General Land Office of the surveyed public lands there remain undisposed of 64,880,952 acres.

Of the nearly five hundred million acres thus disposed of, we can safely say that the enormous aggregate of at least 225,000,000 acres, is in the hands of railroad companies and private speculators and monopolists. This probably considerably underestimates the total area so locked up. Properly settled under the homestead acts it would give a total of nearly one and a half million farms of 160 acres each. Beside the various grants already named, by means of which so much of the public domain has been and is in process of being absorbed by speculators and monopolists, we are saddled with claims growing out of the Spanish system of land grants, which we have been obliged to recognize in our acquisitions of territory formerly held by Spain or Mexico. In California alone the recognized claims cover 5,690,500 acres, divided among 367 cases, giving an average of nearly 15,520 acres to each case. In New Mexico there are seventy claims allowed, of which only thirty-six are surveyed. These contain an area of 1,406,944 acres, or nearly 39,082 acres for each claim.

These startling figures, covering already one sixth of the entire public domain, show the necessity of pausing in our land-grant policy.

It is probable that the amount already asked for under various Pacific railroad enterprises will far more than double the figures I have given.

Sir, there are many cogent reasons why the public domain should be made to contribute, by just processes, to the aid of great internal improvements, by means of which much of the vast territory of the Republic has been opened to industry and enterprise, but there can be none given to justify the disposal of those lands—a trust we hold for the world's poor—at private sale for private speculation. Still less justice is there in permitting, under the pretentious guise of the treaty-making power, the despoiling of the people's right in that portion of the public domain now occupied by Indians. That, however, has been done in my own State and elsewhere. At the last session of this Congress this House placed on that policy a mark of emphatic condemnation. Great tracts of valuable lands, fertile, accessible, and well located, have under the treaty system been ceded to speculators. It has been done in the secrecy of executive action at the other end of this Capitol, and clothes itself in the robes of a sovereign attribute of the Government.

Look for a moment at the pretense raised by such action, and wonder, Mr. Chairman, at the presumption of those who claim the exercise of such power to be legitimate. No Indian tribe has ever been admitted by this nation to have anything but a possessory title to lands in their occupancy. They have never had a power of sale conceded to them, nor could they make a treaty with any foreign nation or even sell their lands to private individuals. The reason is plain. The right of eminent domain rests in the Republic, and not in the Indians who may occupy a portion of the soil. The control of the public lands, by express terms of the Constitution, is delegated to Congress; not the treaty-making power, which consists of the President and Senate only. The Constitution says:

"The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property belonging to the United States."

During the debate to which I have already referred as occurring at the last session it will be remembered that the honorable gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] presented a very clear argument against this abuse of the treaty power, and with the valuable aid of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] submitted a striking array of legal authorities in support of this position.

As a proof of the injury which this system inflicts, let me mention the fact that already about one fortieth of the area of the State of Kansas has been ceded away to a few corporations and individuals by treaty, and there are treaties now pending which, if successful, will dispose of over one ninth of the entire area of the State. In proof of the character of these immense land speculations, as indorsed by the Senate, let me submit here a table carefully prepared at the Interior Department, showing the amount of lands thus wrongly disposed of:

* Now before the Senate.

By this schedule it appears that 1,771,350 acres of Indian land have been disposed of in Kansas in eighteen different divisions, a large proportion being to private individuals and not at all coupled with any pretense of benefiting the State by public improvements. A further examination of the table will show that of over one and three quarter million acres disposed of under this abuse of the treaty power, nearly eight hundred thousand acres have passed into the hands of three individuals. But, sir, this is but a trifle beside a proposition to the character of which I called the attention of the House at its last session. I refer to the proposed Osage treaty.

The Osage lands in Kansas, ceded by the treaty of September 29, 1865, amounted in all to 3,222,402 acres. The diminished reserve now occupied by the Osage tribe, which, however, is to be included under the operations of the proposed railroad treaty, covers an area of 7,470 square miles, or 4,780,800 acres; making a total area proposed to pass into the hands of speculators of not less than 8,003,203 acres of valuable lands. There is sufficient to make, under the operations of the preemption laws, not less than 50,020 homesteads of 160 acres each. Allowing these to be occupied within the term the law allows for settlement, by families averaging five persons each, and we shall have a population of 250,100 souls on a tract it is now proposed to throw into the hands of a few men. About six million acres of these lands are arable, and nearly all is valuable for stock raising.

If we take the 1,771,350 acres already sold under this wrong interpretation of the treaty power and add thereto this last gigantic attempt to plunder the public domain, we shall find that within the State of Kansas alone, under this system, there has been actually or prospectively transferred from under the feet of the settler and farmer to the hands of the speculator and monopolist an aggregate area of 9,774,566 acres of land, fertile and valuable, all of it located in the most desirable situations in the State, whether we regard the fertility of soil, proximity to the principal water courses, or the present and prospective lines of railroad communication.

The whole amount of land thus passed or proposed to be into few hands would make 61,091 farms, of 160 acres each, thus affording homes to at least 300,000 persons. If we take the total amount paid or proposed to be, for this great body of lands we shall only have a total of $3,664,154, or an average price per acre of about thirty-six cents. The highest price paid under any of these treaty sales has been but $2 50 per acre—this, too, for lands worth in the market an average of ten dollars—while the lowest offer yet made has been but twenty cents an acre. Every acre of this nearly ten millions could have been, within a reasonable period, sold to actual settlers at the regular preemption price, who would have eagerly sought, as they have done under disadvantageous circumstances, to have obtained farms so favorably situated.

These lands were not needed for the construction of our railroads, the munificence of Congress having given to Kansas ample franchises to aid the construction of a system of roads commensurate with the importance of her position in the great interior continental railroad development of our day and generation. I say this deliberately, fully aware of the fact that I have in some degree contributed to the bestowal of these lands. The evil effect of this misuse of the treaty power has not been seen all at once. It needed that the speculators, grown reckless by success, should make the last bold attempt.

The loss to the Indians as well as to the Government which this system has entailed is apparent. The total area of 9,774,566 acres which now has or will have an average of about thirty-six cents per acre, would under the preemption system have netted, all expenses of survey, Land Office system, &c., included, not less than $12,661,747.

genuine value of their occupation by the people. Putting the population they would have had within a reasonable time at three hundred thousand and the average productive value of each individual to the community at $300 each, we should have had an accession in value of $30,000,000. Instead of this we have vast areas withdrawn from production and held for speculative purposes, while the few are enriched and the many are kept poor by the heavy taxation necessary to sustain civil society. There is another element in this count which needs consideration. Under the beneficent system adopted by the General Government our public lands are made to sustain, as they should do, the people's schools. We give, and have for over thirty years, to every western State, the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections in every township of the surveyed public lands for this purpose. Out of every six miles square there are given two square miles as an endowment to the public schools. Under the system of ceding lands by treaty, of which my State has been made so preeminently the victim, no provision has been made for school reservations. Like the slave and land oligarchy of the South, the cupidity of the speculator and railroad monopolist could not see, and does not desire to do so, the inestimable advantages of this endowment of our school system. If we examine the total area of the school lands out of that already ceded into private hands, and that proposed to be by pending treaties, we shall have a total of 2,179 sections, or 1,304,560 acres, which, retained until population had somewhat enhanced its value, would net at least $5,000,000 to the school fund of the State of Kansas.

But, sir, this is not all. The evils engendered by the policy to which I have referred has another lamentable illustration in the unhappy condition of that large body of settlers located within the two counties of Neosho and Iabette, in southern Kansas, upon a tract of land relinquished to the United States by the Great and Little Osage Indians by a treaty known as the Osage treaty of September 25, 1865, (proclaimed January 21, 1867,) and embracing thirty by fifty miles off the east end of the Osage lands.

By the terms of this treaty it was agreed that this tract should be surveyed and sold as other public lands are surveyed and sold under existing laws, (excepting, however, preemption claims and homestead settlement) in trust for certain beneficial and philanthropic objects. Attracted by the tempting character of the fertile valley which traverses the entire length of these relinquished lands and contemplating the speedy extinguishment of the Indian title, hundreds of families had entered there and opened up thrifty and beautiful farms. The treaty was finally promulgated January 21, 1867, after a meaningless amendment had been inserted by the Senate in the first article of the treaty, attaching to the proviso for the sale of these lands, "under existing laws," the words "including any act granting lands to the State of Kansas in aid of the construction of a railroad through said lands."

Inasmuch as the treaty provides for the sale of all this land in trust for the Osage Indians, and also on account of the general civilization fund, it is not easy to see upon what principles of law or justice a large proportion of them have been withdrawn from sale. It is claimed by certain interested parties that an act of Congress passed March 8, 1863, four years before the date of this treaty, granting the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston Railroad Company every alternate section of land designated by odd numbers, for ten sections in width on each side of said road, from the city of Lawrence, Kansas, to the southern line of the State in the direction of Galveston bay, Texas, entitles that company to the alternate sections along the line projected by them through these lands.

This claim was repudiated by Hon. Joseph S. Wilson, Commissioner of the General Land Office, by his decision rendered May 17, 1867. Meanwhile settlement rapidly increased until upward of three thousand families were located on the lands and opened farms in confident expectation of being able to secure their homes from the United States. A more thrifty, intelligent, and valuable class of immigration never crossed the borders of the State I have the honor to represent.

I call attention to the fact that no attempt was made by the Department of the Interior to undeceive these people in regard to the construction placed by them, by the Commissioner of the Land Office, and by the general public upon this treaty until November 8, 1867, more than nine months after its promulgation, when the Secretary of the Interior, upon the appeal taken by Senator E. G. Ross from the ruling of Commissioner Wilson, reversed that just, sound, and humane decision. Following this remarkable judgment, the lands were withdrawn from sale; and, without relief from Congress, this portion of my constituents are left to the cupidity of the railway company, which claims title to their homes.

It will be remembered that early during the last session a resolution unanimously passed this House providing for the sale of these lands to actual settlers at $1 25 per acre, payable in four annual installments. That resolution went to the Senate, where it was referred to a committee, but, though the committee approves it, no action has yet been had by the Senate. As a consequence, doubt and uncertainty cloud the future of these people, at least 15,000 in number, and their every interest is being sacrificed. It cannot be doubted that any intelligent and just legislator, before whose attention the facts of this case are fairly placed, will say that the settler ought to get his lands and his title at $1 25 per acre, as is provided by the resolution to which I have referred.

But, Mr. Chairman, these facts, alarming as they are, are not all. The monopolies created, the wrongs inflicted, and the enriching of the few at the expense of the many, do not stop here, so far as Kansas is concerned. In order to exhibit to this House and to the country the enormity of the land speculations sanctioned by the Senate, and for the purpose of resisting, as best I can, the great wrongs perpetrated by this treaty policy upon my constituents, I will present here the following statement in reference to the Cherokee neutral lands, which I have carefully prepared, and to which I invoke the serious attention of the House and of the country:

CHEROKEE NEUTRAL LANDS.

Statement showing actual areas, population, claimants, values, improvements, and school lands; together with a statement of the profits of the purchaser as shown by the Commissioner's synopsis and the actual total profits, including mineral values:

Actual acres.
Total area of lands occupied by actual settlers.....	480,000 00
Total area of unoccupied lands.....	319,614 72
Total area of Cherokee neutral lands.....	799,614 72
Population and claimants.
Population of Cherokee neutral lands.....	15,000
Number of actual claimants.....	3,000
Number of claimants to whom appraisers issued certificates.....	1,003
*Number of claimants whose certificates are valueless because on coal lands or on claims transferred since August 11, 1866.....	603
Number of claimants actually protected by treaty only.....	400
Number of claimants unprotected.....	2,600
Values.
Total value of lands occupied by actual settlers (as appraised).....	$720,000 00
Total value of lands unoccupied (as appraised).....	$479,422 08
Value of coal beds per acre (as estimated by experts).....	$175 00
Value of coal per ton in bank.....	10
Total value of coal fields in Cherokee neutral lands, estimated at 80,000 acres.....	$14,000,000 00
Total value of Cherokee neutral lands, including coal beds.....	$15,199,422 08

* Proviso in seventeenth article of treaty of August 11, 1866—"Lands not being mineral." Also, extract from Joy's letter of July 6, 1868—"a reservation will be made also of land where coal shall be found to exist capable of being worked to advantage."

Improvements.

Total area of improved lands in acres.....	120,000
Total value of improvements.....	$1,800,000

School lands.

Number of acres in sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections to which Kansas is entitled by act of admission.....	44,423
Value of said school lands to the State of Kansas at $5 per acre.....	$222,115

Profits as shown by Commissioner's synopsis.

Total value of unoccupied lands as shown by Commissioner's synopsis.....	$892,668 30†
Total amount required to be paid by purchaser under treaty.....	640,199 69

Profit of purchaser as shown by Commissioner's synopsis.....	$252,468 61‡
--	---------------

Actual profits, including mineral values.

Actual values of "unoccupied" lands, not including mineral values, if sold to settlers at $5 per acre.....	$3,200,998 45
Actual value of coal beds as above shown.....	14,000,000 00
Total value.....	17,200,998 45
Deduct amount required to be paid under treaty.....	640,199 69
Actual profits to purchaser under treaty.....	$16,560,798 76

I have prepared this statement from information derived from official sources and from personal knowledge, and I have no doubt but what it is substantially correct. My estimate of the extent and value of the coal fields is far below the estimates of the geologist and other scientific authorities, and is less than one half as much as made by residents on the land. I know, sir, it will be charged by the land speculators that I am extravagant in my estimate of mineral values. To this I answer that I have taken no note of other minerals besides coal, though it is confidently believed that lead exists in large quantities, as gentlemen will remember is the case in the adjacent counties in Missouri; and it is to be said, also, that much of the surrounding country is deficient in coal resources, and for all time must be supplied from the inexhaustible coal deposits of the neutral lands. Though undeveloped to-day, the greedy speculators, watching the secret sessions of the Senate from which these schemes of public plunder emanate, see in these vast natural resources colossal fortunes which are easily secured through the cunning and corrupt chicanery of this treaty system.

In the case in hand, the simple words "lands not being mineral" cheat the people, monopolize fuel for four million population for all time, and enrich the few at the expense of the many. The homestead law, the preemption laws, educational interests, the rights of the citizen, equality of taxation, and all just principles of policy relating to the title and occupancy of the public domain, have been trampled down by the Senate, as one after another it has sanctioned the fraudulent Indian treaties transferring the land to the rapacious monopolists. Fifty thousand people in Kansas have been robbed directly or indirectly by these gigantic speculations thus officially indorsed, and have thus far appealed in vain to the Senate for relief. This House has passed measures of relief, allowing these brave and suffering pioneers to purchase their homes at $1 25 per acre by authority of law, but the land monopolist only has yet been heard at the other end of this Capitol.

How long, Mr. Chairman, will the free people of this country thus submit to such flagrant outrages upon their most sacred rights? Let them continue, however, to demand justice of their public servants, and let them insist that the veil of secrecy be removed from the consideration of Indian treaties, so that if these outrages are to be still continued it may be done in the presence of the people whose rights are trampled down and whose homes are sacrificed on the altar of remorseless speculation.

It will thus be seen, sir, that the people of Kansas are deeply interested in the right disposition of this important question. It involves the homes of fifty thousand people already on the Osage, Cherokee, and other lands. It involves the proper equalization of the burdens of State and local taxation. It involves the prosperity, present and prospective, of the common schools of my State. It is of vast importance even to the Territories west of Kansas. It is essential to the proper relations of the coordinate branches of the Government, of the right exercise of the functions that belong to each, and it may even affect the territorial integrity of the Union itself. This abuse of the treaty power once granted, and allowed to grow unchecked into precedent, may be but the stepping-stone to more dangerous assumptions.

Sir, the Republican party of the State of Kansas has expressed itself in an unmistakable manner as to the policy it sustains upon this question. At its last State convention the following was adopted almost unanimously:

"5. In the distribution of public lands and Indian reserves we demand the full protection of the rights of settlers, and the reservation of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections to which the State is entitled for educational purposes. Wholesale grants of territory to speculation and foreign corporations are unfavorable to the interests of the community, and inconsistent with the objects for which the national domain should be distributed. We especially condemn the policy of the disposing of Indian reservations to railroads or land monopolies, and insist that such lands be undeniably opened to actual settlement at not more than $1 25 per acre. We demand, in the name of our frontier settlers, that the uncivilized Indians be driven from the State, and the civilized tribes be speedily removed to the Indian country."

The same convention did me the honor, in the face of a determined opposition made on account of the position I had taken in this House on the Osage treaty, and similar matters, to renominate me by a large majority. I went before my constituents on the issues raised by the Republican party, both in nation and State, and after canvassing the State, speaking at length and frequently on this question, among others, was reelected by a majority of over sixteen thousand in a vote of over forty-five thousand. It is my intention, therefore, as it is my duty, to be true to the trust which the people of Kansas have confided to my hands, as their only representative upon this floor, and especially to be faithful to the principles and purposes of the great party of freedom with which all the days of my political life have been associated; and, sir, one of the most cherished and cardinal of those principles is that of free homesteads—the preservation of the public domain for the occupation of the bona fide settler.

It shall be my purpose hereafter to resist every encroachment upon that principle. I shall continue to oppose that abuse of the treaty power which this House has already condemned, but which has not yet received its death-blow. It will be my purpose to vote hereafter in favor of only such measures as will increase the security and value of the homestead system. I shall oppose the direct granting of more lands to railroad schemes without conditions being previously annexed allowing settlement and purchase by the pioneer farmer at stated prices. I shall vote for all measures which make railroads already in possession of land subsidies throw open the same at the same rates and rules as this House has already indicated shall be required whenever any more land grants are bestowed.

In short, Mr. Chairman, whatever measures may be necessary to maintain the homestead policy unbroken and to keep the great bulk of the public domain as the Republic's best interests demand, for the occupation of the toiling and landless millions, will receive my most cordial support, as I am sure they will that of the people of Kansas.

Mr. CULLOM obtained the floor, but yielded to

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, who moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. PRICE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. VAN HORN, of New York, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly the President's annual message of 1867, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By the SPEAKER: The petition of James W. Johnson, of Berryville, Virginia, for removal of his political disabilities.

Also, the petition of W. S. Andrews, of Whittle's Mills, Virginia, relative to the bankrupt law.

Also, the petition of Albert Sumner, of Alexandria, Virginia, for a grant of lands.

Also, a petition of the Union League of Anderson county, Texas, for the continuance of the Freedmen's Bureau.

By Mr. BECK: The petition and exhibits of James Saffell, of Kentucky, claiming compensation for horses and other property lost while engaged in the mail service of the United States.

By Mr. BROOMALL: A memorial of the yearly meeting of Progressive Friends, held at Longwood, Pennsylvania, praying that the American Indians be protected and treated with justice and humanity.

By Mr. DODGE: A petition of the citizens of Decatur county, Iowa, asking for a grant of land in aid of the Iowa Southern Railroad Company.

Also, a petition of citizens of Council Bluffs and Glenwood City, asking for the repeal of sections seventy-eight and ninety-four of the act imposing taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco.

By Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania: The petition of Captain William Welsh, of the fortieth regiment United States troops, for the antedating of his commission.

By Mr. MOORE: A petition from captains and owners of vessels of Wilmington, Delaware, praying the intervention of Congress to protect all engaged in navigation from illegal exactions by State and municipal corporations.

Also, petitions from owners and masters of vessels of Jersey City, Elizabeth Point, Absecon, Tuckahoe, Somers' Point, and Leeds' Point, New Jersey, praying the intervention of Congress to protect all engaged in navigation from illegal exactions by State and municipal corporations.

Also, petitions from the Vessel Owners' Association of Philadelphia and 200 masters and owners of vessels, praying the intervention of Congress to protect all engaged in navigation from illegal exactions by State and municipal corporations.

By Mr. MUNGEN: The petition of James Porter and others, praying for the extension of mail route No. 9392, in the State of Ohio.

By Mr. PETERS: The petition of Patrick Hickey, for a pension.

By Mr. POLSLEY: The petition of the members of the bar of Kanawha county, West Virginia, against removing the circuit court of the United States from Parkersburg to Wheeling.

Also, a similar petition from the members of the bar of Mason county.

By Mr. RANDALL: A petition of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, favoring a continuance of what is known as the fifty per cent. clause in the bankrupt law, which took effect in January, 1869.

By Mr. VAN TRUMP: The petition of Stephen D. Ford, praying for the passage of a special act granting him a pension for services rendered as a private in company A, one hundred and sixteenth regiment Ohio volunteers, in the war of the rebellion.

Also, the petition of Rachel Conkle, widow of Henry Conkle, praying a pension as such widow of said Henry Conkle, who was a private in company D, seventeenth regiment of Ohio volunteers, in the war of the rebellion.

By Mr. WHITEMORE: A petition from the loyal men of Wilkinson county, State of Mississippi, asking Congress to admit the said State into the Union under the constitution lately ratified by the legal voters of the State, declaring such admission as the only means of protecting the life, peace, and property of loyal men.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 14, 1869.

Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Charles Leigh and others, citizens of the United States, praying that the right of suffrage be extended to women in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the petition of Edwin Booth and others, citizens of the United States, praying that the right of suffrage be extended to women in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of citizens of New Jersey, praying that the right of suffrage be extended to women; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONKLING presented a memorial of the New York, Newfoundland, and London Telegraph Company, signed by Peter Cooper, its president, praying permission to land its cable upon the shores of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WILSON presented a petition of citizens of the United States, praying that the right of suffrage be extended to women in the District of Columbia and in the Territories; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARLAN. I present the memorial of a convention held at Prairie Du Chien, Wisconsin, November 10, 1868, by their committee, Samuel Merrill, Governor of Iowa, B. J. Stevens, of Wisconsin, M. J. Gilechrist, of Iowa, and William J. LaDuc, of Minnesota, praying for an appropriation for the improvement of the Wisconsin and Fox rivers, with a view of securing water communication between the Mississippi river and the lakes. This is a very able document, setting forth the advantages that would result from the establishment of such a line forming a communication between the grain and food-producing States and the other parts of the Union. Perhaps I ought to state that this contemplated work has been surveyed by a board of engineers appointed by the Secretary of War, General Warren being the chief of the board. They ascertained that this improvement can be made by an appropriation of less than five hundred thousand dollars, so as to secure a channel three feet deep throughout the entire length, or four feet in depth by an appropriation of $3,000,000, or five feet in depth by an appropriation of $4,000,000. The memorialists, by the committee, submit also with this memorial a memorandum suggesting an appropriation in the nature of a loan with a regulation requiring tolls to be paid, and the interest on this loan to be paid out of the tolls, and ultimately the principal. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLEY presented the petition of Alpheus C. Gallahue, praying an extension of his patent for an improvement in machines for pegging boots and shoes; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. SPENCER presented a petition of citizens of Mississippi, praying the passage of a permanent bankrupt law independent of any fifty per cent. restriction; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ANTHONY presented a petition of citizens of the United States, praying that the right of suffrage be extended to women in the District of Columbia and in the Territories; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ABBOTT presented the memorial of headmen and people of the North Carolina or Eastern Cherokees, protesting against the ratification of the treaty concluded on the 9th day of July, 1868, between the United States and the Cherokees residing west of the Mississippi river; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Tennessee, presented the petition of delegates of the Cherokee, Creek, and Choctaw Indians, protesting against the passage of the bill to restore the Bureau of Indian Affairs to the Department of War; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SUMNER presented two petitions of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States as will secure to all the citizens of the several States equal political rights, privileges, and immunities, without regard to class, race, or color; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, praying such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States as will secure to all the citizens of the several States equal political rights, privileges, and immunities, without regard to class, race or color; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. WILLEY, it was Ordered, That the papers and petition of Jerome J. Getty be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GRIMES, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of R. W. Meade, captain United States Navy, for restoration to the active list, reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of McKean Buchanan, paymaster in the Navy, praying to be indemnified for certain losses, reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Brevet Brigadier General Orlando Brown, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the message of the President of the United States in relation to a decree of the district court of the United States for the southern district of New York, ordering the payment of certain sums to the defendants in a suit against the English schooner Sybil, libeled as prize of war, and recommending an appropriation for the payment of the same, reported a bill (S. No. 773) to carry into effect the decree of the district court of the United States for the southern district of New York in the case of the English schooner Sybil and her cargo; which was read, and passed to the second reading.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1460.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to introduce a bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let this bill be taken up, and then I will give way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the bill mentioned by him.

Mr. GRIMES. Let the title of the bill be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. No. 1460) regulating the duties on imported copper and copper ores."

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire to have taken up the resolutions of the State of Vermont on the subject of reciprocity treaties instead of that.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope not. There was an understanding yesterday that this bill should be taken up for consideration, and I hope that understanding will be carried out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does any Senator object to taking up this bill at the present time?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I object now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the motion cannot be received, and the morning business must be gone through with.

Mr. WILSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 774) to amend an act entitled "An act regulating the tenure of certain civil offices," passed March 2, 1867; which was read twice by its title, referred to the joint select Committee on Retrenchment, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Tennessee, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 775) for the relief of James H. Willis, of Greenville, Tennessee; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 776) to amend an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad in California to Portland, Oregon," approved July 25, 1866; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 196) for the relief of Mrs. Mary Lincoln, widow of the late President of the United States, who was killed during the war of the rebellion; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORTON. As this resolution is short, I will, with the permission of the Chair, read it myself at length:

Whereas the late President of the United States, Abraham Lincoln, while acting as President and Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the United States was killed in the war of the rebellion by the enemies of the United States; and whereas his widow, Mary Lincoln, is entitled to a pension upon the same principles and for the like reasons with the widow of any other officer who fell in the war: Therefore,

Be it resolved, &c., That Mary Lincoln shall receive a pension at the rate of — dollars per annum, to be computed from the day of the death of her husband, Abraham Lincoln, late President of the United States.

Mr. SUMNER. Do I understand that the Senator leaves the amount blank?

Mr. MORTON. I leave the amount blank at present.

Mr. SUMNER. Would it not be better in introducing the bill to fill the blank?

Mr. MORTON. I hardly know how to fill it myself.

Mr. SUMNER. I would suggest $5,000.

Mr. THAYER. I ask that the bill be read again at length. We could not hear it distinctly in my neighborhood.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. SUMNER. Why not proceed with the consideration of the measure at once?

Mr. MORTON. I have no objection if the Senate desires to proceed to its consideration.

Mr. SUMNER. Will there be any objection to it?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it had better go to a committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to know how much the amount is before I am prepared to act.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I desire, without previous notice, to introduce a joint resolution on the subject of laying telegraphic cables; and as some of these propositions have been referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and some to the Committee on Commerce, as this resolution is a short one I will read it, and then the Senate can determine to what committee it shall go:

Whereas cable telegraph companies organized under the authority of the United States propose to land their cables upon the shores of foreign Powers; and whereas also telegraph companies organized under the laws of foreign Powers propose to land cables upon the shores of the United States, and the consent of those Powers and of the United States are necessary: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to consent to the laying of one or more telegraphic cables from the shores of any foreign Power to the shores of the United States by any company organized under the authority of any foreign Power: Provided, Such Power will also consent to the laying of cables from the United States to the shores of such Power upon reciprocal terms: And provided further, That until such Power consent thereto the consent of the United States is hereby withheld and the laying of any such cable upon the shores of the United States by or under the authority of such foreign Power is declared to be unlawful.

By unanimous consent leave was given to introduce the joint resolution (S. R. No. 197) in relation to laying telegraphic cables.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I suppose it should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, although I understand that some of these measures have been sent to the Committee on Commerce. I move that this resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The joint resolution was read twice by its title.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It is perfectly immaterial to me to which committee it shall go—the Committee on Foreign Relations or the Committee on Commerce. Some of these telegraph-cable questions have gone to the Committee on Commerce. I do not know whether any of them have been referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I ask the honorable Senator from Massachusetts as to that?

Mr. SUMNER. Yes, sir; one of them has been referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MORTON. The first one introduced?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Then I move that this joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move to take up the resolutions of the State of Vermont in relation to a reciprocity of trade with Canada.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I make the motion. The gentleman has the right to vote against it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion can only be entertained by unanimous consent until the morning business is disposed of.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the motion cannot be entertained at the present time.

Mr. SUMNER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 777) to enforce certain provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SUMNER. I will state that that bill has become necessary with reference to certain transactions recently in the State of Kentucky. Persons disqualified by the fourteenth amendment have undertaken to exercise official functions in that State. I understand that this is the case also in Virginia and other States once in rebellion. There must be some legislation on the subject. It seems that the amendment to the Constitution does not, as I had supposed it would, execute itself. It requires some legislation by Congress. I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KELLOGG asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 778) to aid in the construction of a southwestern railroad and telegraph line to the Pacific ocean, with branches and connections; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

TRADE WITH CANADA.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1460, regulating the duties on imported copper and copper ores.

Mr. SUMNER. I thought there was an understanding that we should listen to our friend, the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] to-day on the subject of reciprocity treaties.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. A week ago yesterday I presented resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Vermont on the subject of reciprocity treaties, but not desiring to interfere with the business or convenience of the Senate on that day by addressing the Senate upon them I gave notice that I would a week from that time, that was yesterday, address the Senate upon the subject, and there was no dissent from any quarter. Yesterday I was compelled to give way to the Sue Murphey case; but I gave notice then that I should endeavor to seek the floor this morning. Under such circumstances I must say that since I have been a member of the Senate I have never known such a courtesy to be refused to a Senator. I merely ask for an opportunity to call up the resolutions of my State, which feels a deep interest in the subject, in order to occupy a little time in discussing the general question.

Mr. CONKLING. Allow me to inquire whether the Senator wishes anything more than an opportunity to submit his remarks?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. That is all.

Mr. CONKLING. He proposes no action?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. No, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. And the time spent is to be confined to that occupied by him?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. I hope the Senator from Michigan will give him that opportunity.

Mr. POMEROY. I made some objection yesterday when the Senator from Vermont proposed to call up these resolutions; but I was not aware of the understanding referred to by him. I have no objection at all, and will make none, to the Senator from Vermont proceeding.

Mr. CHANDLER. As I understand the Senator will occupy but about an hour, if he will consent to take up this bill I will then give way and let him make his speech on the other subject.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Michigan will gain nothing by taking up the copper bill in the morning hour. It is a bill that will lead to discussion. I am in favor of the bill, as a matter of course, and shall support it when the time comes. It is a House bill, and can be taken up and passed without danger at this session; but it is a bill that naturally excites a great deal of opposition because there are formidable interests opposed to it, and it is utterly idle to take it up during the morning hour, in my judgment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will state to the Senator from Ohio that there was an understanding yesterday among certain Senators that this bill should come up to-day, and that the discussion should continue until we obtained a vote upon it. I hope to obtain a vote to-day upon it.

Mr. CONKLING. The unfinished business of yesterday would take precedence of it at one o'clock without a vote.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall ask the Senate to continue the consideration of the bill, postponing the unfinished business, until we get a vote upon it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Michigan would gain nothing by taking up his bill now in the morning hour, because at one o'clock the special order would supersede it, and he would have to make another motion to postpone that. I suggest to him that under the circumstances, as the Senator from Vermont gave notice of his intention to submit some remarks upon a subject which he had heretofore introduced, he should be allowed to proceed, according to the uniform courtesy of the Senate, which I hope will not be departed from on the present occasion. Whenever any Senator has desired to address the Senate upon a matter in which he felt an interest, and has given notice of that fact some distance ahead, to which there has been no objection, I think it has always been accorded to him that he should have an opportunity to deliver his remarks. We all know the Senator from Vermont does not occupy a great deal of the time of the Senate in speaking, and I apprehend he will not speak many hours, and probably nothing would be gained by taking up the bill at this moment. I suggest, therefore, that the Senator from Vermont be permitted to go on.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well; but I give notice that at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Vermont I shall then move to take up the bill to which I have referred.

Mr. HOWE. I hope the Senator from Michigan will not make such a motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan withdraws his motion; and the question now is on taking up the resolutions indicated by the Senator from Vermont.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I ask to have the resolutions of the Legislature of Vermont read.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Joint resolution relating to reciprocity of trade with the Dominion of Canada.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, That having an intelligent regard for the best interests of Vermont, it is the duty of our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their influence against the consummation of any treaty relating to reciprocity in trade with the Dominion of Canada, and to insist that the subject of our trade and commercial intercourse with Canada, as well as with all other foreign countries, is not a proper matter of treaty stipulation, but belongs to Congress, and should be wisely regulated by a judicious tariff.

Resolved, That the secretary of State be, and is hereby, directed to transmit a copy of this joint resolution to each of our Senators and Representatives.

GEORGE W. GRANDJEY.

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

STEPHEN THOMAS.

President of the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, the resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Vermont, I believe, only express the opinions of some of the ripest statesmen of the country in times past and the present sentiments of the agriculturists of nearly the entire nation.

I have sought the opportunity to submit some remarks upon the reference of these resolutions for the same reason that most likely induced the action of the Legislature of Vermont, because of a disposition manifested in some quarters—I hope it may be limited—to revive an unfortunate example in our history of negotiating more of that class of treaties, sometimes called reciprocity treaties, whereby our foreign trade is to be regulated by treaty instead of being regulated by the usual and accustomed laws of Congress—believing, as I do, that such treaties are contrary to the practice of the Government, contrary to the Constitution, and contrary to the interests of the whole country. Such a treaty, if made, has to be first considered in secret session of the Senate, and the people at large have no light or knowledge touching the nature of the treaty itself, nor of the facts or arguments which are supposed to control the action of the Senate, until that action becomes irrevocable, and the only debate in public is when the action of both Houses of Congress happens to be required by the treaty to modify the revenue laws according to the terms proposed. At such a late period, the treaty having been made by the Executive and by the consent of the Senate, it is altogether too late to consider its merits exclusively, and to the House only the poor privilege remains of paring and clipping the revenue laws, upon the compulsory argument of necessity, to make them conform to the new treaty. The unbiased opinion of the House is out of the question. It has been forestalled. Upon a subject where the House of Representatives is entitled to have the initiative, or the paramount lead, it is forced to accept of a subordinate position and resign some share of the functions conferred by the Constitution in that provision of article one, section seven, which declares that "all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives." Excluded here from the lead, the claims of the House grow fainter as it is shoved into the background. According to some parties, it is an act of grace to submit an appropriation contained in a treaty to the consideration of the House at all, on the ground that a treaty is a law by its own vigor, and the supreme law, which crushes out the vitality of all other laws, although it would seem to be apparent that a treaty cannot be, and never could have been intended to be, any more supreme than the constitution under which treaties are made, or than the acts of Congress. The supremacy intended scarcely rises above more than State or local laws.

It must be conceded that these are subjects of too great importance to be disposed of in a half hour's secret debate, whether in regard to our organic law or as to the advantages or disadvantages commercially of any particular treaty had in view, and therefore I venture to invoke the judgment of the Senate in open session to the consideration of the general merits of the questions involved.

I remember that the learned Senator now so properly at the head of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in earlier years, but when his voice in the country was hardly less potential than it is to-day, was a robust defender of the rights and privileges of the House in relation to treaties, following in the Senate then the lead of the present astute Secretary of State, and I hope he of all men will not go back upon his record. Let it not be said now, when no longer liable to be charged with belonging to an unhealthy organization of a minority, but holding a commanding position among the majority, that that is a sufficient reason for readjusting constitutional opinions elaborately considered and recorded. Liberals long retained in high official stations in other countries often become what is called conservative, but the Republican Senate of the United States is supposed to be a school not so favorable to the training of that class of statesmen, and the distinguished chairman most unpromising material for such a training.

SPECIAL TREATIES IMPOLITIC.

The exclusive policy so long maintained by the British Government and other nations relative to trade with their colonies having now been greatly modified, though not wholly abandoned, and the policy of granting equal favors to all nations with whom commercial intercourse is maintained having become almost universal among civilized nations, there is no longer inducement to seek by treaties special favors, or to attempt to overreach less enterprising nations by the arts of diplomacy. Secret treaties or partial treaties find little favor, and whatever is granted to one party is practically open at once to all others willing to accept of like terms. If England negotiates a treaty with China it is at once duplicated with the United States. If the United States make a treaty with Japan, equal favors are promptly obtained by England and other nations. It is even reckoned, if not discreditable, somewhat beneath the dignity of independent nations to grasp at any exclusive privileges by means of treaties, and a sure mark of imbecility for any nation to grant them. It has also been growing more and more politically unsafe to hamper the trade of colonies with such badges of inferiority as make them tributary and subservient to the imperial selfishness of the mother country ever since the successful resistance of the United States to the policy of taxation without representation attempted by George III. When a Spanish ambassador represented to Cromwell that the inquisition and colonial trade were his master's two eyes, Cromwell replied, "Then I must trouble your master to put out his two eyes." The inquisition has been blotted out, and, while the language of Cromwell might not be accepted by modern diplomacy, it is questionable whether the world will long quietly tolerate any monopoly in colonial trade. The other eye will be put out. Laws made in the islands of the North sea to operate upon continents in the Indian ocean will at some time become obsolete.

Such favors as promote national interests, enlightened by the liberal policy of the age, are made by general statute laws, not upon the application of suppliants, and are applied universally; but such favors as cannot be open to so wide an application are entirely withheld from any narrower or more exclusive field of operations. Once these favors, secret and precious, are the bribes of offensive and defensive alliances, but such alliances have proved odious, if not unprofitable, to all mankind. Once they were terms extended or withheld by victors to or from the vanquished. But now it must be either a nation conscious of its weakness and desirous of leaning upon a stronger and more opulent power for support, or one sadly lacking spirit to stand toward all the world in the attitude of erect and broad independence, which can stoop even to those exceptional arrangements called reciprocity treaties, although they are in point of fact only reciprocal in words and never reciprocal in effects.

The confutation of opinions is always unwelcome, and more so when calling for a seeming renunciation of power; and I shall ask of Senators, not that they shall accept of my positions, but that they will calmly examine the questions presented for themselves. If there are Senators who hold opinions at variance with mine, as is not unlikely, I am conscious how feeble any effort of mine must be to effect a change, and I shall lament my own deficiencies rather than suspect the strength of the positions attempted to be maintained.

LEGISLATION NOT TO BE DONE BY TREATY.

Specific powers must always be construed to limit general powers. All legislative power, and especially the power to regulate commerce, having been delegated to Congress, the treaty-making power is thereby limited and restrained. I think it may be assumed in the outset, as a sound axiom under the Constitution of the United States, that subjects proper for legislation are not proper for treaties. Manufactures, trade, and agriculture are constant and fit subjects of legislation; and cannot be claimed by the treaty-making power. Reciprocal treaties always interfere with trade, manufactures, and agriculture, and are therefore unwarranted.

Such treaties are comparatively novel, and certainly they were unprecedented at the time of the adoption of our Constitution. Therefore, even if they did not militate against the special privileges of Congress, or of the House of Representatives, not having been originally contemplated, they cannot have been authorized; and what was not authorized must be outside of the limits of the Constitution.

Treaties were intended to embrace foreign objects beyond the reach of ordinary legislation—objects requiring the assent of some foreign Power—and it is a manifest absurdity to claim that tariffs may be made by treaty, yet tariffs must be the chief staple of all reciprocity treaties.

I shall first speak of the want of authority to make such treaties, and second, of their worthless character when made.

EXECUTIVE POWER OUGHT NOT TO BE INCREASED.

The President of the United States is required mainly to see that such laws as are in force are faithfully executed, not to make laws by himself alone nor by himself and the Senate. This is the broadest field of his operations. He may recommend measures, but if Congress does not enact them they do not become laws any more than the recommendations of any private citizen. Treaties under monarchies are royal prerogatives and are made by the executive alone. Under our style of government, treaties being laws when made affecting the whole people and which they must obey, they are not confided alone to executive discretion. Jealousy of executive power is the theory of earnest republicans the world over. By the constitution of the late French republic, overturned by the biographer of Cesar and present ruler of France, the executive was authorized to negotiate and ratify treaties, but no treaty was to be definitive until after it had been approved by the national assembly; and it was also provided that amnesties should only be granted by an express law.

The President of the United States may initiate treaties, but until they receive the constitutional sanction of the Senate they are of no force. The whole legislative body, or both Houses, when appropriations are required, must participate in the office of carrying them into effect, and without the approval of two thirds of the Senate no treaty can be made. It is evident the framers of our Constitution regarded the treaty-making power with extreme jealousy, and had no intention to amplify it.

Presidents, as well as monarchs, however, are not only great sticklers for their legitimate powers, but rarely fail to struggle both overtly and covertly for the extension of executive prerogatives. It may be matter of indifference to the Senate per se whether certain matters are to be considered by them in a legislative or an executive session, as in either case their voice will be potential, but as conservators of a free Government, as a branch of that Government protected by the longest term of service, it should scrupulously guard the rights and privileges of the most numerous and popular branch of the Government. The Senate can have no interest in transferring power from the House of Representatives to the hands of the President. The theory of a republican form of government is that power is safe in the hands of many, and dangerous in the hands of one. The exclusive power of the House to originate revenue bills is one of the most explicit in the Constitution, and it was intended to be so hedged that no plausible pretext could be suggested by which it could be invaded or supplanted. This sole power being confided to the House, it must not be exercised elsewhere, nor can it rightfully be subverted. It should remain in its entirety. Even to allow any other branch to consider and amend revenue bills was reluctantly conceded by the framers of the Constitution. A treaty regulating custom duties, the main source of revenue heretofore and destined to be hereafter, trenches upon a cardinal principle of popular Governments—the right of the immediate representatives of the people to control the purse of the nation. It is obvious that a very limited multiplication of such treaties would soon absorb the whole power to originate revenue bills, so far as they concern the levying of duties upon the importation of foreign goods, and nothing then would be left to Congress except the mere husks of a tariff and excises and direct taxes.

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE.

It has been faintly argued that such reciprocal treaties would still leave to the House of Representatives the privilege of originating revenue bills at its pleasure, but this does not rise to the dignity of a respectable sophism. It does not even wear the appearance of candor. It is a mockery. Whatever prior or subsequent legislative enactments there may be, a treaty, being according to executive interpretation always the supreme law of the land, overrides them, and wherever such enactments come in conflict with a treaty they are practical nullities, as has been proved, and will be so long as the Executive is the sole arbiter of the question. The House may fling its net for revenue and toil all night, but they will catch nothing. When the revenue has been sequestered by force of treaty stipulations for the benefit of foreigners the House will find itself in the old attitude of being forced to make brick without straw. The pretense that such a treaty is not an invasion of the rights of the House, it seems to me, adds to the injury a contempt for the intelligence and sensibility of that body. To say that all this may be done even with the joint action and assent of the House does not relieve the matter—only complicates it. It is not in the power of the House, either alone or conjointly with the President and the Senate, to change or dispense with any portion of the Constitution. The powers given to the House are given for all time, as much for one Congress as another, and cannot be lawfully suspended by them nor by the treaty-making power, whether directly or indirectly. One House of Representatives has the same powers as any other, and no one can properly or lawfully intercept or hold them in abeyance for any length of time. The House of 1870 must be as free to act as the House of 1868. One House, indeed, may have so little spirit as to refuse to exercise its constitutional powers, but one or both Houses cannot exhaust their vigor, nor abdicate nor forfeit them for a moment, nor can any circumstances lift any law to such high sanctity that a new Congress, fresh from the people, cannot constitutionally repeal it, whatever of misfortune might attend such a repeal.

Revenue laws require adjusting annually, and for years to come the subject will be one of paramount importance. Taxation as a whole may steadily be diminished, but a careful consideration of the whole subject may require that burdens resting in one place may be removed to another better able to bear them or where they will be more widely and equally distributed. In spite of all inclinations for honorable peace, the just claims of the United States may be so long delayed that the only remedy for a high-spirited people will be war. In such an untoward event the whole resources of the country should be kept untrammelled, ready to be unleashed for instant use, and no part of them should be placed beyond our reach. The power to originate revenue bills, then, becomes imperative and indispensable to the preservation of national life. A war with one nation abrogates no treaties with any other. A compact of this reciprocity character, however inopportune or galling, must be fulfilled. To disregard it gives just cause for war. The executive branch of the Government, with the Senate in its executive capacity, having pledged the faith of the nation, no explanation of the frame-work of our Constitution will prevent any foreign nation from seeking a redemption of the pledge.

In the first article, section eight, of the Constitution it will be found that Congress—not the President and Senate alone—was to have the power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations." If Congress was to have the power to do this it is clear that it cannot be done by either the judicial or executive authority, nor was it the purpose to lodge the power in any body less responsible than the whole of Congress.

If to Congress belongs the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and the House has the exclusive right to originate revenue bills, it follows that the powers thus delegated should not be curtailed or frittered away by any treaty. If laws become weak and worthless in the face of the assumed supremacy of even illegitimate treaties, or such as cannot properly be considered as made "under the authority of the United States," the Constitution whenever appealed to retains its full vigor, and when its agents transcend its authority let them be disowned, and not the Constitution.

How greatly is it to be preferred that our Government should be left at all times unfettered and free to make such laws and regulations as the interest of our people from time to time demands, and that we should be at liberty to extend favors or withdraw them, as our own sense of propriety may require, without any infringement of a compact, and especially of a compact made in conflict with a provision in the Constitution deemed most essential to the framework of a free Government?

LATITUDE OF THE POWER CLAIMED.

If such an innovation of the rights of the House or of the rights of Congress be allowed to go unchallenged there is little else in the way of legislation that may not be done by treaty. Why may not the right of suffrage be regulated by reciprocal treaties? Why not so fix the price of our public lands? Why may not internal improvements, canals, and railroads be secured on the international reciprocity plan? Why not have reciprocity in fortification treaties? Why not thus regulate the rates of postage? Why not reestablish slavery by a reciprocal treaty with Brazil or the king of Dahomey? Why not have reciprocal naturalization treaties? Why may not New England be thus put out in the cold or the State of Michigan be alienated by treaty with the Canadian Dominions? Why not borrow money or resume specie payment, by virtue of a reciprocity treaty?

These interrogatories give some indication of the possible scope of the powers claimed and the easy manner in which power may slide into the hands of the few, and, without changing the form of our Government, wholly subvert its popular character; nor can it be pretended that the exercise of the power in any one of the examples here used to illustrate its extent would not be equally justifiable with its exercise upon the subject of tariffs, and all are equally dangerous. It is a power subject to the winds and waves of party, and liable to engulf and absorb all legislative power.

Since the decision in the case of the Jay treaty and the recent treaty for the purchase of Alaska it may, perhaps, be considered the settled doctrine that a treaty made by the President, with the consent of two thirds of the Senate, involving an appropriation, binds the House, or at least overwhelmingly urges it, to make the appropriation without stopping to consider its justice or expediency, or whether the treaty is good or bad. Is not that enough? Foreign nations, it is argued, can neither interfere with our internal machinery nor know whether our agents exceed their authority or not, and they deal only with the sovereign authority; regarding the mouth-piece of that authority as the authority itself, whether so in point of fact or not. Such considerations should inspire great caution about amplifying or enlarging the jurisdiction of the Senate in the formation of treaties. It is enough that we confine the Senate to its legitimate and unquestioned functions, but when we step beyond and remove subjects of ordinary legislation by Congress within the control of the treaty-making power, we justly arouse a suspicion that if we are not aiming at consolidation we are removing step by step from the popular control of the people. Among the admirable checks and balances of our system of government there is none more revered than that of the Senate, but if it attempts to magnify its office by engrossing doubtful powers, from that moment its prestige will begin to wane and its usefulness will be seriously contested.

I regret that this question has not been handled by some Senator better able to present the argument, but a simple statement of the question would almost seem to be enough without argument. In its whole length and breadth it is this: can the President with two thirds of a quorum of the Senate repeal laws passed by both branches of Congress and approved by the President, and at the same time fasten upon the people an irrevocable law? If this cannot be lawfully done there is an end of reciprocity treaties.

I shall next briefly consider the history and character of these treaties.

TREATY WITH FRANCE.

It has sometimes been pretended that there are numerous precedents on record for making reciprocity treaties, but in point of fact there has never been one deserving that title, nor but one claiming it, and that was the late ill-advised treaty concerning trade with the British provinces. By the treaty with the first consul of France, in 1803, for the cession of Louisiana we agreed to permit French and Spanish vessels to trade in all the ceded ports of this territory for twelve years, in the same manner as our own vessels, and also agreed that no other nation should have the same privileges. It must be remembered that at that time we were few in numbers, and the acquisition of so vast a territory, with the port of New Orleans and the mouths of the Mississippi, offered temptations not to be resisted by any nation dreaming of maritime importance, and the terms demanded by Napoleon were no doubt very moderate. But subsequently France made large reclamations on the ground that we had failed to fulfill the part of the treaty already alluded to, and in 1831 we made a new treaty with France, by which she paid us in money for her spoiliations of our commerce, and we healed the breach in the treaty of 1803 by allowing French wines to be imported at fixed and specific rates of duty for eleven years. There was no reciprocity whatever, as no concessions were made by France in her revenue laws but to cancel large claims against the United States difficult to compute in money, and to avoid a vexed question Congress granted for a limited time a special favor to French wines. This is the slender prop upon which precedents are claimed to build up a system of reciprocity treaties! We are older now; and however proper the terms may have been at the time, they were not reciprocal, and whether they were or not no American statesman will hereafter venture upon a similar compensation, whatever may be the demand made by any foreign nation.

THE ZOLLVEREIN TREATY.

The first real negotiation in the way of a treaty of reciprocity was made by Mr. Wheaton, at Berlin. He had been instructed by Mr. Forsyth in 1837, then Secretary of State, to obtain a relaxation of the duties on tobacco—that was all—and after seven years of effort, or at least a lapse of seven years, he concluded what is known as the Zollverein treaty. Prussia and her German associates would consent to nothing without an equivalent. If Prussian duties on tobacco were to be relaxed then the United States must tender a relaxation of the duties on certain other articles of the growth or produce of the Zollverein, and these articles seem to have become coextensive with the number of the principalities embraced in that associated crowd. Each appears to have rushed in with some pet to be favored, and all would seem to have been gratified. The workers in hardware and in wool, worsted, silk, cotton, and linen were no sooner appeased than the fabricants of fish-hooks, snuff-boxes, and toys presented their budgets, and at last the proposed treaty contained an assortment of staples and bijouterie such as, I venture to say, were never before assembled together by Jew or Christian.

This proposed treaty was the work of a man whose historical and legal productions have contributed largely to the solid reputation of our country. His fame is part of the glory of our people; and if a treaty of this kind could ever be expected to find favor in the American Senate or with the American people this was brought forth by a man entitled, even though he labored under specific instructions, to a respectful hearing. It received the highest commendations of Mr. Calhoun, and yet, notwithstanding the wholly unexceptionable character of the negotiator, after being elaborately considered, it was reported against by the Senate Committee of Foreign Affairs, and upon being again urgently pressed by President Tyler, a second adverse report having been made, it was rejected by a large majority, and rejected, not by a party vote, upon the ground of deference to the constitutional privileges of the House of Representatives, with which the treaty conflicted. The eloquent words of the first report, penned by a distinguished statesman of Massachusetts, (Mr. Choate,) and reiterated and amplified in the second report by Mr. Archer, of Virginia, declared that—"The committee, then, are not prepared to sanction so large an innovation on the ancient and uniform practice in respect of the department of Government by which duties on imports shall be imposed; that the Constitution in express terms delegates the power to Congress to regulate commerce and impose duties and to no other; and that the control of trade and the functions of taxing belong, without abridgment or participation, to Congress."

It is somewhat remarkable, in stating the advantages of this treaty, that Mr. Lawrence, the biographer of Mr. Wheaton, should enumerate, among the benefits to accrue to the United States, but three American articles of export touched by the treaty, and of these no actual change of the rates of duty was to be made by the Zollverein except with regard to one. He speaks of the treaty as one which "would effect the long cherished object of procuring the reduction of the present duty on tobacco, secure the continued admission of our cotton free from all duty, and prevent the imposition of any higher duty on rice;" and he continues, "For these advantages!"—that is to say, stripped of all rhetorical verbiage, for a reduction of the duty on leaf tobacco amounting to about one cent per pound and of one cent and a quarter on stems, and with no change on cotton and rice (and lard) we were to reduce, or not increase, the duty upon at least five hundred articles, embracing (though wholly unmentioned by Mr. Lawrence) whole classes and many varieties, some of which, singly, were scarcely less, when compared in commercial magnitude, than the sum total of our Prussian tobacco trade. "For these advantages," practically confined solely to tobacco and tobacco stems, we were to dwarf and hamper our tariff to proportions satisfactory to the great nullifier of South Carolina. Had this clever scheme proved successful the direct benefit to the tobacco-growing States would have been inconsiderable; but it is hardly too much to say that the direct injury to the industry of the North would have been so serious that in their retarded growth it would have left the slave power of the country to-day in the undisputed ascendancy. Never was John C. Calhoun so nearly victorious.

It is singular that a man of such eminent patriotism, ability, and culture as Mr. Wheaton should have been dazzled by gems of such inconsiderable value, while throwing away such costly treasures, and even more singular that he should have overlooked such plain landmarks of the Constitution as were presented by the Committee on Foreign Affairs in their reports to the Senate in 1841 and 1843, then as now composed of Senators thoroughly versed in constitutional learning, but it is even marvellous that Mr. Wheaton should have felt that a treaty with such limited advantages, accompanied by such onerous burdens, offered any contribution to his already well-earned fame as a scholar and jurist, and can only be accounted for by supposing that his partiality for his offspring arose not on account of any merits, but from the length of the period of its gestation, or by that fatuity of genius which remains indifferent to fame fairly won and pines after that to be found in some by-path wholly aside from its reach.

The success of these reciprocity treaties requires secrecy while they are in progress. It will not do to let the whole substantive matter contained therein leak out in advance. A few nuggets may be unveiled, and then the imagination is left free to gild all the rest. If the whole should be at once exposed to the public gaze short work might follow such diplomatic achievements. The proposed Zollverein treaty of 1844 was supposed to relate chiefly to a reduction of the Prussian duty on tobacco and tobacco stems. I doubt not that was the understanding of most of our people. It stipulated for so much, and that the duties upon rice, cotton, and lard should not be advanced. The duties on tobacco were not to exceed four thalers per centner, (or $2 88 per one hundred and ten pounds,) and not over three thalers per centner on stems. We, through our minister, loudly protested then against the injustice of any higher duties, and yet we ourselves now impose upon unmanufactured tobacco imported into the United States a duty of thirty-five cents per pound, equal to about fifty-four thalers per centner, or more than thirteen times as much as then appeared reasonable to us that the Prussians should levy upon our tobacco! Yet to-day very few pretend that we can do with less. Beside, it will be seen by the tariff promulgated years since by the Zollverein that they have, without requiring any equivalent from us, continued cotton on the free list, as it was plain from enlightened self-interest they must, and have reduced the duty upon tobacco to the identical and magical figure of four thalers per centner. Without any treaty or so-called equivalents we now have all the advantages sought for by President Tyler.

The statesmanship of the State Department seems to have been unequal to the task of forecasting for twenty years, or even for fifteen. But this blindness will be much more apparent if we examine the equivalents, so called, which we were to have given for the distinguished consideration to tobacco. The catalogue of reductions to occur in our tariff are too long to be fully repeated, and embraces to a great extent the luxuries and toys of commerce—the very sources from which, since 1861, we have most largely increased custom-house supplies.

No higher duty than twenty per centum ad valorem was to be placed on woolen, worsted, or cotton hosiery, mitts, caps, bindings, drawers, shirts, and all similar manufactures made on frames, nor upon musical instruments, except pianofortes.

No higher duty than fifteen per centum ad valorem on any manufactures of silk, or of which silk should be a component material of chief value, nor upon Thibet, merinos, merino shawls, and all manufactures of combed wool or of worsted and silk combined, nor upon polished plate-glass, silvered or unsilvered, toys, wooden clocks, cologne water, scissors, files, saws, planes, scythes, needles, copper wire, bronze ware of all kinds, fish-hooks, leather pocket-books, and all sorts of similar fine leather manufactures, pocket looking-glasses, snuff-boxes of papier maché, lead-pencils, &c.

No more than ten per centum ad valorem on all thread laces, insertings, lace, tresses, tassels, knots, stars of gold and silver, mineral water, spelter, &c.

And, finally, we were to agree not to increase the then existing rates of duty upon wines; and the duties upon wines in 1844 were as follows: on Madeira and sherry, in casks or bottles, sixty cents; champagne, forty cents; claret, six cents per gallon; and on white wines, seven and a half cents in casks or twenty cents in bottles per gallon.

It is quite apparent that the American negotiator of the proposed treaty, however learned and accomplished in other respects, was sadly deficient in practical knowledge of revenue laws or of the industrial interests of the United States, and without any apprehension of the strides these interests were destined to make in the immediate future. Whatever of budding promise there might be in the efforts then being made or subsequently made to establish manufactures of worsted, of silk, of linen and hemp, of woolen and cotton goods made on frames, of scythes, saws, files, planes, fish-hooks, lead-pencils, and so on to the end, or whatever were the prospects of American wines, it is quite certain that if this treaty had been accepted all these varied interests, now counted by millions upon millions, would have received their death knell, or if not their advent would have been postponed for a generation; and if the treaty had been in force at the outset of the late rebellion the Government of the United States would have been almost paralyzed, and without the power to mend its financial condition so far as that then depended upon receipts for duties upon foreign merchandise. It was found necessary, for revenue purposes, to place three or four times the amount of duties upon many of these articles which could not have been done had the Zollverein treaty been in force, and under such rates of duty the protection to home manufactures has been so great that we have largely diminished our dependence upon foreign supplies for silks, worsteds, and whole classes of other manufactures included in the treaty. This only illustrates the extreme inexpediency, not to say folly, of reciprocity treaties. A great and growing nation must be left free to act in any and all emergencies as its honor and interest may demand.

NATIONAL COMPLICATIONS.

But beyond the general impolicy of such treaties and their lack of constitutional authority there is another, and it would seem insuperable, difficulty. Before the Zollverein treaty had reached us Lord Aberdeen appears to have got possession of its terms, and at once notified Mr. Everett, our minister at St. James, that his Government would claim, under our treaty of 1815, an equal relaxation of duties in their favor. Upon the admission on the part of Mr. Everett of the propriety of the claim, provided it was accompanied by the same equivalents, Lord Aberdeen replied that "he conceived that by the convention of July, 1815, we should be bound to admit British fabrics, on paying the same duties as the German, without any such conditions on their part." Upon referring to article two of the treaty of July 8, 1815, it cannot be said that the position of Lord Aberdeen was untenable. The stipulation found there is the very common one in most modern treaties, and reads thus:

"No higher or other duties shall be imposed on the importation into the United States of any articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of his Britannic majesty's territories in Europe than are or shall be payable on like articles, being the growth, produce, or manufacture of any other foreign country."

Our treaty of 1829 with Austria is the same, but with an additional article, as follows:

"If either party shall hereafter grant to any other nation any particular favor in navigation or commerce it shall immediately become common to the other party freely, when it is freely granted to such other nation, or on yielding the same compensation when the grant is conditional."

The same provisions will be found in our treaty with Russia in 1832, and with Belgium in 1845, with this variation: "on allowing the same compensation or its equivalent if the concession is conditional."

It will be found that nearly all of our treaties bind us to extend to all nations with whom we have commercial treaties the same terms granted to the most favored nation, either with or without compensation. Therefore, a reciprocity treaty is neither more nor less than an extraordinary mode of amending the tariff so that it cannot be again amended in the ordinary way by Congress for a term of years, and for the consideration that some other nation will shackle itself in the same manner.

In discussing this subject it should be done wholly apart from the question of the propriety of a high tariff or a low one; that is not involved; for if a reduction of the tariff can be made by treaty it follows that an increase can be so made. But it should be noted, however, that practically these treaties, whatever may be the requirements of the Treasury, must invariably contemplate the surrender of more or less revenue. If the tariff is too high let it be reduced; if too low let it be increased; but solely with reference to the welfare of our own people, and in a manner that will not complicate our engagements with all foreign nations. By opening the door to the wool of Canada we leave the door ajar as to the wool of Buenos Ayres; and if the low grades of Hawaiian sugars be admitted the better grades of Cuba cannot be resisted; or, if they can be, then the Executive and the Senate will have become the architects of a mottled tariff—white here and black there, and ring-streaked everywhere.

RECIPROCITY WITH THE BRITISH PROVINCES.

Only ten years after the Zollverein treaty had been set aside, for the gravest of constitutional reasons the Senate reversed its position, and the House of Representatives acquiesced, by making the treaty of 1854 for the benefit of the British colonies of North America. American statesmen in the North were lifted off their feet by the will-o'-the-wisp of annexation, and in the South by sectional advantages. This treaty, beyond all doubt, was made to induce annexation, but the arguments used to that end, without regard to the merits or demerits of that question by itself, have been buried too deeply by our eleven years of cruel experience under the treaty ever to be again resuscitated. That whatever desire any parties in the provinces may have entertained prior to the treaty for joining the United States was temporarily crushed out by the reciprocity treaty cannot be denied. And why not? If they had secured the chief benefits to be derived from annexation why should they not shun any and all of its duties and burdens? There was no inducement left to go further if the profit and loss account in all subsequent stages was to be nearly equally balanced. American statesmen vainly anticipated an era of good-feeling, hoping that our neighbors were, after all, imbued with some admiration of more popular institutions and with some ambition to become an integral portion of a great Republic; but the rebellion touched our provincial neighbors with the spear of Ithuriel. Then they assumed their true shape and boldly hoisted their true colors, and at once all these prophetic and coming glories vanished as the unsubstantial visions of maidens' dreams. Our recent border fair-weather friends seemed to be filled suddenly with envy and all uncharitableness. Eager for bargains in the purchase of our fugitive ships hiding from the pirates of the Clyde, greedy for the profits of blockade-running, in full sympathy with the master spirits of the rebellion, harboring raiders on our borders, and furnishing an asylum to those who were sending assassins one day, disease and death the next among our people, it became too apparent that the Government of the British provinces, instead of reciprocity, instead of building up the United States, would feel as lively a joy as that disclosed by Mr. Roebuck, their spokesman in the British Parliament, in having "the presumptuous and audacious bully of the world," as he styled us, humbled and destroyed. These undeniable facts show the folly of making an exception in favor of British subjects in the rule of treating foreign nations. They are and must be enemies in war; in peace, friends.

THE FISHERY QUESTION.

It may be said that the treaty of 1854 settled an important question relating to the fisheries. If there is any point where American diplomacy ought to blush it is in relation to this very question of the fisheries, and the last adjustment was hardly more wise than the pusillanimous surrender of 1818. Great Britain conceded by the provisional treaty of 1782, and reaffirmed word for word in the treaty of 1783, all the rights we demanded and all that ever could be of practical utility. The language was most comprehensive:

"The people of the United States shall continue to enjoy unmolested the right to take fish of every kind on the Grand Bank, and on all other banks of Newfoundland; also in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and at all other places in the sea where the inhabitants of both countries used at any time heretofore to fish; and also that the inhabitants of the United States shall have liberty to take fish of every kind on such part of the coast of Newfoundland as British fishermen shall use, (but not to dry or cure the same on that island,) and also on the coasts, bays, and creeks of all other of his Britannic majesty's dominions in America; and that the American fishermen shall have liberty to dry and cure fish in any of the unsettled bays, harbors, and creeks of Nova Scotia, Magdalen Islands, and Labrador so long as the same shall remain unsettled; but so soon as the same or either of them shall be settled, it shall not be lawful for said fishermen to dry or cure fish at such settlement without a previous agreement for that purpose with the inhabitants, proprietors, or possessors of the ground."

Here there was little or no restriction upon our rights. We could fish at all places in the sea where the inhabitants of both countries used theretofore to fish and (except to dry and cure fish on the shores of Newfoundland) at all places used thereafter by British fishermen. The rights we possessed in the fisheries in 1782 were permanent, inherent, and indestructible, and ought no more to have admitted question once acknowledged, than our independence or our boundaries. War could not disturb them, because they were of higher authority than mere compacts, and time could not efface them because they were ever in use and never abandoned. In peace or war, like the title to our own soil, they were unconquerable. After the war of 1812 we made the treaty of July 3, 1815, and all subjects embraced in the treaty of 1783, not then questioned, must have been understood to be remain in statu quo ante bellum. It never has been pretended by Great Britain that any other article in the treaty of 1783 was abrogated by the war of 1812 save that relating to the fisheries.

Somewhat after the British style of doing things at Copenhagen, a vessel of war suddenly ordered our fishermen, in 1815, to retire twenty leagues from all the coast of British colonies! It is hardly to be credited that Great Britain should have claimed that the war of 1812, so barren of British laurels, had abrogated rights so freely acknowledged in the treaties of 1782 and 1783, or that any representatives of the United States, after a lapse of thirty-five years, could have yielded to such an unfounded, not to say impudent, claim. If Great Britain, whether stung by the rivalry her fishermen or her sailors had experienced, put forth such pretensions no dread of Waterloo should have prevented their plump denial. She had no valid claims, and if she had the time to have asserted them was in the treaty of peace in 1815. The treaty of 1818 was a weak surrender on our part of rights which peculiarly belong to us, and of other rights which belong to all other nations which choose to assert and exercise them. Not won by the blood and treasure of the parent country, they belonged to us by right of discovery and occupancy, and because while we were yet colonies our rights were fought for and our title confirmed by our own valor; but neither the French nor the British ought to be permitted to monopolize sea-fisheries. By any rule of facts or principle in the partition of territory and rights, when our independence was acknowledged we were entitled to all the fisheries rather than Great Britain, and might with much more propriety have insisted, not only that we would not be excluded, but upon excluding the British. We had always enjoyed them to a larger extent than all the world beside, and they were of greatest value to us. It is time the world refused to put fetters on the sea, and if any nation persists in such expansive despotism it challenges resistance. Exclusive rights to the products of the ocean is a relic of feudal ages, and as odious to nations as are game laws to common people.

It should be noticed that when Nova Scotia was ceded to Great Britain by the treaty of Utrecht the French subjects were thereafter excluded from fishing within thirty leagues of the coast, and this exclusion was renewed in the treaty of Paris, 1763, by which Spain was also wholly excluded from fishing rights in the neighborhood of Newfoundland. So it would appear that these exclusive claims have within the century past diminished from thirty leagues to three marine miles from the coast.

But we did agree in 1818, let us say it in sackcloth and ashes, to limit the boundaries of our fishing grounds and acknowledge some exclusive rights of the Hudson Bay Company; and we did agree to renounce forever "hook and line, bob and sinker"—on our own motion!—any liberty heretofore enjoyed to take, dry, or cure fish within three marine miles of any coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of his "Britannic Majesty's" dominions in America.

As a general international rule, the exclusion of foreign fishermen within three miles from the shores of any country is not, perhaps, to be complained of; but from these fisheries never having been so excluded prior to 1818 it was a strange renunciation on the part of the American negotiators, and cannot be atoned for with anything less than the complete restoration of our ancient rights.

Among the many treaties made between the United States and Great Britain there are four which will never be likely to increase the self-esteem of Americans. I mean those of 1794, 1815, 1818, and 1854. The inclusions and exclusions very noticeable in those treaties show, not a lack of ability upon the part of the American negotiators of the three earliest treaties, but a lack of weight in the cannon known to be behind them. The last-named treaty was negotiated shortly after a gross attempt had been made to bully us into a similar compact by sending a considerable fleet of vessels of war to seize by force and stealth and confiscate, as they did seize and confiscate, hundreds of the vessels of our hardy fishermen for pretended infractions of British rights under a new interpretation given by them to the old treaty of 1818. This was an affront that should have barred reciprocity treaties forever. Peace is eminently our necessity, but not more a necessity here than it is to Great Britain. Is it too much to claim that hereafter we shall treat and be treated by her, when we treat at all, as her equal, and, as to reciprocity, not to treat at all? No commercial privileges are worth purchasing. The interests of nations dictate policies of mutual benefits, and these will grow. They cannot be bought with a price. Let us bide our time.

ANNEXATION.

We should always remember that an adjoining people, weaker as a state than ourselves, must not only be envious of our power but of our prosperity. Railroads so far in advance of wealth and population that their receipts fall short of expenses must be a dead weight. That credit which requires the perpetual prop of an indorser is delusive. Emigration that runs away from the soil is a bad advertisement. That trade where the advantage depends upon profitable diplomacy or illicit traffic is unreliable, and furnishes no base to the character of a great people. Commerce blockaded by ice for seven months of the year badly needs a more sunny side.

It is true that most of these drawbacks would disappear if the British provinces were consolidated with the United States. For the present, however, the United States have room and verge enough to spread all of its surplus capital, population, and enterprise upon the prairies of the West and the savannas of the South. It might not be wise to weaken our strength by diffusion over a broader surface than at present so greatly tempts our national enterprise. If neighboring provinces, wedded to aristocratic titles, though unsupported by estates, choose to cling to a style of government whose chief strength discloses at every fresh alarm the fact of dependency, and so lag behind and retard their progress for a half century, why, in an economical view, the United States can afford to wait. When these provinces seek that aggrandizement which naturally flows over all the parts of a free, independent, and prosperous nation by a union of interests and honors, by a fraternal welding together of all their material forces and political aspirations, by an unreserved and uncalculating assumption of privileges and duties, it will be time enough to consider what measures will best advance their general welfare. Until then it is a study exclusively their own, about which it will be unbecoming for us to waste diplomacy.

CONCLUSION.

There is no error, as I think, in the statement with which I started, namely, that our history furnishes but one actual reciprocity treaty accepted—and that was itself made contingent upon the action of Congress—and one, the Zollverein, negotiated and rejected by the Senate. As far as precedents go, the action of the Government has been decidedly adverse to them; and the character of that accepted even British subjects do not now pretend to have been other than very profitable to them, and most unprofitable to the United States. It is certain that we gave the notice for its termination at the earliest possible moment.

If a reciprocity treaty can be made with the queen of Great Britain or with the king of the Hawaiian Islands may not the same thing be done with the red chiefs of our Indian tribes? How would it do to mend the tariff by a treaty of reciprocity, "the supreme law of the land," with the Sioux or Comanches? How should we respond to the claims of all those nations with whom we have treaties—to Bismark or the Earl of Clarendon—for equal favors? It is not possible that the American Senate, with ever so strong a predilection in favor of reciprocity treaties—which I trust does not exist—would tolerate this latitude in their construction; but would it not be well to eschew a power so incapable of good and so full of possibilities of evil?

Our House of Representatives was an improved copy of the British House of Commons, whose rights and privileges are guarded with especial jealousy and unceasing formality. At the commencement of every session the Speaker goes to the House of Lords and claims "all their ancient rights and privileges," all of which the queen, either in person or by proxy, "agrees to allow and confirm in as ample and complete manner as has ever been allowed or confirmed by herself or by any of her Majesty's predecessors." It will not be wise for the Senate or the Executive to raise any dubious conflict with the other branch of Congress. Let it never be necessary for the House to ask of us or of the Executive to allow and confirm, in as complete a manner as has ever been allowed and confirmed by the Constitution, all their ancient rights and privileges!

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. President, I suppose the regular order of business, the bill in charge of the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. Howe,] will now be resumed unless the Senate vote to lay it aside. That is the bill for the relief of Miss Sue Murphey.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the unfinished business of yesterday, and is now regularly before the Senate.

Mr. POMEROY. I was about to say that there is a bill which I wish to bring to the consideration of the Senate to-day, or at least very soon. I feel no personal or pecuniary interest in it, but the people of my State do, and they expect that it will receive the action of the Senate. Next week I shall be obliged to be absent, and I have been requested by several Senators to call up the bill to which I refer to-day or to-morrow.

Mr. GRIMES. What is it?

Mr. POMEROY. The bill in regard to the Central Branch Union Pacific railroad, which we had up last session.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from Kansas does not desire to make a motion I desire to submit a motion.

Mr. POMEROY. I desire now, with the consent of the Senator from Wisconsin, if he is willing, to lay aside the Sue Murphey case, and move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill I have named.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SAWYER] is, I believe, entitled to the floor on the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business of yesterday is now regularly before the Senate, and the Senator from South Carolina is entitled to the floor.

Mr. POMEROY. I would not make any motion if I thought we were ever to complete the case of Sue Murphey, but it comes up from day to day and prevents the doing of other business. The other day I made a motion to recommit that bill, and I supposed then that motion would prevail, but as I understood the Senator from Wisconsin and some other Senators desired to address the Senate I withdrew it.

Mr. HOWE. I sympathize with the difficulty that the Senator labors under, but I think we can close out the debate on the pending bill this afternoon. I do not know of any one else who wishes to speak except the Senator from South Carolina. He says he wishes to occupy some twenty minutes, and I then wish myself to make some remarks. I do not know of any one else who wishes to speak at all.

Mr. POMEROY. Very well, then; I give notice that as early as possible after the conclusion of this subject I shall call up the bill to which I have referred.

Mr. SHERMAN. With the leave of the Senator from South Carolina, who is entitled to the floor, I desire to submit a motion to take up another bill. I am satisfied that the debate on the Sue Murphey claim will not close to-day nor to-morrow. I wish to take up the bill providing for an air-line railroad from Washington to New York. I desire to take it up to-day in courtesy to a Senator who has been prepared for some time to speak against the bill. He is compelled to leave the city because of sickness in his family, and he is detained here in order that he may be heard on the bill. If I thought there was any prospect of getting a vote on the Sue Murphey case I would not ask the Senator from Wisconsin to yield, but I am satisfied that there are other Senators who intend to engage in the discussion of it. I trust, if he is not willing to postpone that bill any further than to allow the Senator from Maryland to say what he desires to say, it will be postponed that long, and the railroad bill taken up for that purpose, though I wish to have it kept before the Senate until it is disposed of.

Mr. HOWE. I really hope the Senator will not press that motion. Do I understand that the Senator from South Carolina gave way to the motion?

Mr. SAWYER. I do not wish to go in opposition to the will of the Senate as to taking up this bill to-day; but if the Sue Murphey case can be disposed of to-day and sent back to the committee it seems to me that it will be as well to do it now as at any time. Still I would not put my own wishes in opposition to those of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will not press my motion if the Senator from South Carolina prefers to go on now.

Mr. SAWYER. It seems to me we can get through with that case pretty soon.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well, I withdraw my motion.

INAUGURATION BALL.

Mr. CRAGIN. I ask the Senator from South Carolina to give me the floor for a moment. I move to reconsider the vote of yesterday by which the House resolution appropriating the Rotunda and Old Hall of Representatives for the purposes of a reception on the evening of the inauguration day was rejected. I do not ask for action on the motion now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. WILLIAM G. MOORE, his Secretary, announced that the President had, on this day, approved and signed the bill (S. No. 174) for the relief of Mrs. Emma Wilson, of the State of Indiana.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a report from the Secretary of War, together with the original papers accompanying the same, submitted in compliance with the resolution of the Senate of the 5th instant, requesting such information as is furnished by the files of the War Department in relation to the erection of fortifications at Lawrence, Kansas, in 1864 and 1864; which was ordered to lie on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPIERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 967) to provide for the removal of the remains of Hon. W. T. Coggeshall, late minister of the United States at Ecuador, to the United States; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

MISS SUE MURPHEY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 625) for the relief of Miss Sue Murphey, of Decatur, Alabama.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. President, this subject has received so long and so able discussion already that it is with considerable reluctance I rise to claim for a few moments the attention of the Senate. But the doctrine so ably urged by several Senators is so new to me, so repugnant to my sense of justice, so opposed to the ideas I have hitherto entertained as to the status of those men in the lately insurrectionary States who kept untarnished their faith to the Union, that I feel constrained to express my dissent from it, and to express as briefly as possible the opinions I entertain on the question before the Senate.

I am not prepared to express an affirmative opinion as to the propriety of making payment to Miss Sue Murphey for losses alleged to have been incurred by her in the taking of her house for the uses to which it may have been put. The Senate do not appear to be possessed of the proof that Miss Sue Murphey was a loyal person prior to the taking of the house alleged to have been hers. It is said that she was but sixteen years old at the date of the destruction of the house in question, and my personal observation of young ladies of that age in the States lately in insurrection justifies me in saying that any sentiments she may have held on the relations of herself or her State to the national Government could hardly be dignified with the epithet "loyal." It is hardly within the bounds of probability that she should have so far formed definite opinions on the questions at issue between the national Government and the rebel power as to entitle those opinions to much consideration. That she had prejudices and proclivities is quite probable, and it is equally probable that those prejudices were but the reflection of those entertained by her family and those around her. I understand it to be admitted that her relatives were avowed rebels, and I regard it as almost beyond the limits of probability that she entertained loyal sentiments in opposition to those of her relatives and friends.

It seems equally uncertain whether she was or was not the bona fide owner of the premises for the destruction of which payment is sought at the time when they were taken for public uses. I am not, therefore, ready to vote to pay Miss Sue Murphey for the house destroyed until these questions are definitely settled.

But this discussion has assumed a general character. Miss Murphey's case has given the occasion for a discussion of the principles which should govern the Senate in considering the claims of loyal persons resident within the States in insurrection whose property was taken for public uses. It is because the question is a general one, and one in which many of my constituents may be largely interested; in which, I believe, the honor and good faith of the nation are concerned, that I occupy the time of the Senate. I shall not attempt to argue the questions of public law with the honorable Senators from Massachusetts and Oregon. They may have stated correctly the principles applicable to the relations of the loyal men of the South with the national Government during the late war.

Grotius and Vattel, Puffendorf, and all other high authorities on public law, may have taught such doctrines as these enunciated here, and the loyal men of the South may be proven, to the entire satisfaction of those who desire such proof, to have been public enemies. Possibly, by the principles laid down by these eminent writers on public law those men who, surrounded by the hosts of rebellion, urged by every consideration of personal interest to share that rebellion, subjected to a pressure which only the firmest could withstand, yet held fast their allegiance to the law and the Union, because they loved the law and the Union, must be classed as public enemies, though they never ceased to protest against the treason, though they never ceased to honor and love the Government against which treason was committed.

Learned and honorable Senators tell us this is so. The loyal men of the South will learn this fact, if it be fact, with surprise and pain. They saw the power of their Government in the States of their residence overthrown by an illegitimate body; they saw the machinery of their State governments pass from duly authorized and loyal hands into the hands of those who unlawfully usurped the power of the States; they saw the national emblem lowered at the demand of traitors; they felt in every relation of life the evils of the crimes of those traitors against the Government to which they owed and acknowledged allegiance, the Government whose flag was their flag, whose triumph was their triumph, whose defeats were their defeats. This rebel power came between them and the protecting arm of the Government of the United States. It overshadowed the whole land; it entered every man's house; it invaded every right; it violated every privilege. Yet these men bore all the sacrifices, endured all the hardships of their situation, not indeed without a murmur, but with the proud consolation of knowing that by and by the right would prevail, and that then their fidelity to the cause of liberty, of Union, of the country would be promptly, cheerfully, equally recognized. Never for an hour, never for a moment, did they bate their hopes or restrain their prayers for the success of the cause of the Union, which had to them become the cause of civilization. Proud of their devotion to that cause, they bore more easily the odium and frequent outrage to which they were liable, from the reflection that the day would surely come when, with the grand old flag floating over now rebel fortress and town, the American Union would again be able to protect and defend their hearths and their homes. Serving that Union by every possible means, offering up daily prayers for the success of the loyal armies, never faltering, but always hoping, they came at last to see the long expected triumph. They fondly hoped their relations to their Government were once more restored, that once more they could feel assured of the protection of their rights as loyal citizens. For long weary years they had waited till the devotion their hearts held for their country could find practicable outlet for action. Much of their property had been ingulfed in that flood which the demon of secession had poured over every interest of the land. Their bank-stock had been rendered valueless by the misappropriation of bank assets to rebel uses by directors, of whom a majority were always disloyal; their bills receivable had been paid in a currency worth from three to five cents on the dollar, yet which it was perilous to refuse in payment; they had been compelled to pay taxes to a despotic de facto government they despised and disowned; their commerce with the nations of the world had been broken up by a blockade rigorously enforced on account of crimes not theirs; they had in great numbers of cases been compelled to part with hard-earned possessions to furnish bread for their families; they had shared every evil of war to which the rebels were subjected, and they had been true and steadfast loyalists in spite of all. Nay, more, it is questionable whether the loyal North contributed a larger percentage of its loyal men to the Union armies than the loyal men of the South. Far be it from me to take one jot or tittle from the meed of praise to which the northern loyalist is entitled. I regard the zeal and devotion of the masses of the people of the North to the cause of the Union in the late struggle as passing all praise. The labors in and contributions of the loyal North to the cause of our country in time of peril, the heroic and self-sacrificing spirit which exhibited itself in every northern State, are, and ever must be, the glory and boast of every true American. The loyal men of the South will be the last to detract from the praise due to the patriot soldiers, the patriot statesmen, or the patriot people of the North.

But the slur which has been attempted to be cast upon the loyal men of the South by the honorable Senator from Michigan is alike uncalled for and undeserved.

Mr. HOWARD. If the Senator from South Carolina will permit me to make a remark—

Mr. SAWYER. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. I have cast no slurs upon the loyal men of the South. I intended to cast no imputation upon them. On the contrary, I spoke in their praise for all the acts of loyalty which they did, and for all the words of loyalty which they spoke, and I cannot permit the Senator from South Carolina to put me in so odious a position as he seems to be endeavoring to do at present.

Mr. SAWYER. I am glad to be corrected if I have misrepresented the language of the gentleman; but it gave me the impression that he held in light esteem the services which had been rendered by the loyal men of the South. If I understood his language correctly, he intimated that their loyalty was rather of a negative than a positive kind. The impression that his language conveyed to my mind was that they deserved very little more than those who, entertaining different opinions, were alike passive with them.

Mr. HOWARD. If the Senator will allow me, I was speaking of that class of so-called loyal men at the South who did no act and underwent no sacrifices in behalf of the Government of the Union, but who stayed at home and remained silent. Far be it from me to disparage or underrate any act evincing loyalty among southern loyalists. I have done no such thing, and no such thing is in my heart, or ever was. I spoke of the neutral, silent portion of the so-called loyalists of the South.

Mr. SAWYER. I am quite satisfied that the honorable Senator from Michigan would not willingly do injustice to the loyal men of the South. I only took the impression which his language seemed to me naturally to convey. If I am in error in regard to the proper interpretation of that language, I am very glad to be corrected. The language of the Senator, as reported in the Globe, is as follows:

"The best that can be said of them is that they were neutral and silent, friendly to the old Government at heart, but timid and inefficient in its defense. They stayed at home enjoying their property, maintaining a discreet silence, but at the same time trading with the rebels at home, carrying on their business there, making money, and amassing fortunes."

Mr. President, I admit much that is there said. I admit that there were large classes of people in the South, and there are to-day large classes of people in the South, who claim to have been loyal men during the war, who did precisely what the honorable Senator from Michigan says they did; but those are not the men whom we at the South class as loyal men. That is not the class of men for whom we would ask that remuneration should be made for their property taken for public uses. When we speak of loyal men we mean those men whose loyalty is so well established that it was perfectly well known to the rebels in whose midst they lived.

Mr. President, the loyal men of the South did pay taxes to the rebel government. Refusal to do so would have been to incur danger to person and property, with no chance of benefit to the country—a useless martyrdom. The loyal men of the South did speak out against the rebellion whenever it was possible to do so. They were not unknown in the communities in which they resided. The citizens of my State knew who of their fellow-citizens were loyal and who were otherwise. These loyalists were tracked by spies; every word and motion watched and reported to agents of the so-called confederate government; and it may well be imagined that wise men would hesitate to take the position of open and active hostility to a government which had the will and the power to suppress any such opposition in the most summary manner unless the expression of such hostility might clearly aid the national cause.

But if the honorable Senator thinks that the position of loyal men in the South was an easy one; if he thinks that because no loyal tax-collector could reach them, because no loyal recruiting officer could approach them, their couch was a bed of roses, I can only wish that Senator with his enthusiastic loyalty, with his devotion to his country, with his hatred of the slaveocracy, with his love of freedom, had spent a few, only a few, weeks in a rebel State during the rebellion. He might then, perhaps, have been in a condition to judge more correctly the suffering and the losses of Union men in the South. And here, Mr. President, let me say that the loyal men of the South are not afraid of "treading too heavily on the toes of the surviving soldiers of the Union" by asking that their just claims shall be allowed. They have had large experience of the manliness, good faith, and sense of justice which pervade the minds of the "surviving soldiers of the Union Army," and they know whereof they speak when they assert that the surviving soldiers of the Union appreciate full well, nay, much better than does the honorable Senator from Michigan, their real sufferings.

But, Mr. President, this is not a case which should be decided by comparison of sufferings or sacrifices between the men of the North and the Union men of the South. It rests upon a question of quite another character. It is simply a matter of justice. Shall the loyal citizen of the United States, that citizen who has never violated by thought, word, or act his allegiance to his Government, who resided in South Carolina and furnished supplies to the United States during the war, be refused payment for such supplies, while the citizen of Michigan who did the same thing is paid, and paid promptly?

Honorable Senators say yes. They tell us we were public enemies; all the books say so. But can the honorable Senator from Massachusetts or any other Senator on this floor deny that when he comes to such a conclusion he feels that his sense of justice is violated? Does not every manly sentiment, every dictate of right, point in an opposite direction? Do not Senators know that during the entire period of the war acts of national legislation, executive proclamations, military practice, and executive action were based on a different idea?

If the doctrines now laid down here were always the true ones, why was it that all branches of the Government made a distinction between the loyal and disloyal citizens of States in rebellion? Why is it that during the entire period of the war southern loyalists have been taught by the practice of the Federal Government that they were considered as friends and not enemies; and now that the war is over, now that the victory is won, now that our hopes are attained, our heart's desire gratified, and we see the flag which we regarded as the emblem of right, law, order, and civilization floating once more over our cities and our fields, we are gravely told that we have been public enemies, and they, the loyal men of the South, have no rights which the nation is bound to respect?

Sir, it is well that the loyal men of the South were not aware of their position, if this was their position, while the war was flagrant. They did not have to go to Vattel to find out how they stood in fact. Their hearts told them where they were as citizens of the United States. The people of the North did not go to Vattel to ascertain what position was held by the loyalists of the South. The soldiers of our Army did not go to Vattel to find out who were public enemies. When immured in rebel prisons they found out who were their friends and the friends of their Government, and you cannot more thoroughly shock the sentiments of the great masses of the people than to declare the doctrine that the loyal men of the South were public enemies.

While I leave to abler hands than mine the task of exposing the fallacy that all the citizens of the States in insurrection were in precisely the same legal relation to the national Government regardless of their political beliefs, opinions; and acts, and while I am sure that this theory is false, I nevertheless regard it as of slight moment. For, in view of the past action of Congress, in view of the common opinions of the people, in view of the manifest equities of the case, I am sure the Congress of the United States will never consent to act on such a theory. Broader principles must prevail in determining our action. The application of those principles to each case will be a matter of labor and difficulty. I am well aware that there will be large numbers of claims for compensation. But I believe that the number will be much smaller than many Senators suppose; and I have no doubt that Congress will be able to establish such rules of evidence and apply such tests of loyalty as will effectually guard against the payment of claims held by rebels.

No reasonable person expects that the loyal citizen of Alabama whose house was destroyed by the bombardment of the town where he lived by our troops should be compensated for it. Nor is it expected that losses incurred by general measures, such as the blockade, the act of emancipation, the march of our Army, the destruction of buildings and crops on a field of battle, should be made good to loyal men who happened unfortunately to incur them. It has been said that our generals did not point their guns away from loyal men's houses when they threw shot and shell into towns occupied by rebels. True; such discrimination was an impossibility; but when our generals marched victorious into such towns, they were careful to protect the property of loyal men when they were known to be such. Our generals had not read Vattel and Puffendorf, or if so had read a different chapter from that cited by the learned Senators on the other side of the Chamber. I shall not attempt to draw the line between claims which should be paid when made by loyal men and those which should not be paid. But I am sure the line can be drawn, and some measure is practicable by which substantial justice may be reached, and that there is less danger in paying a few millions too much for these claims than there is in establishing as the law of the case the principles laid down by the honorable Senators from Massachusetts and others.

I trust, Mr. President, that no Senator on this floor who was a citizen of a southern State during the late rebellion may be met by the taunt of any of his constituents who may have been rebels that his loyalty to his Government has availed him nought; that he, like them, was in the eye of the law and for all practical purposes a public enemy; that his claims for his country's consideration are no more valid than those of the rebel whose hands are bloodiest. Southern loyalists do not desire this treatment. Scrutinize never so narrowly every claim of the kind presented now, sift the evidence as to validity and amount of claim never so thoroughly, demand the most undoubted and unquestionable proof of loyalty, but do not say to him who has stood all your tests, who has established beyond question his claims, "We can give you nought but sympathy. You were a public enemy within the purview of the law, and you must abide the fate of traitors though you hated the treason."

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I did not intend to make any remarks upon this bill; but the discussion has assumed such a remarkable character that I cannot allow it to pass without a few observations. I am perfectly clear that anything which is given to the loyal people of the South must be given as a matter of generosity on the part of Congress for some meritorious services. I do not think that the law of nations or the practice of nations can place it upon any other ground. When it has been done in like cases it has been done as a reward for meritorious services. That for all practical purposes they were in the enemy country, that we had a war, that we had belligerent rights, there can be no doubt. Every department of the Government so held and so acted; and the argument of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER], on that point will forever remain unanswered. We exercised belligerent rights, we had them, and one of the rights of belligerents when in an enemy country—and this was the territory of the enemy—is to take what property may be necessary or destroy what may be necessary to prosecute the war. There is no doubt about that proposition.

But I did not intend to make a discussion upon that branch of the case. I think that the argument of the Senator from Massachusetts and of several other Senators is perfectly unanswerable on that question. I simply rose to call the attention of the Senators representing the southern portion of the country, representing the reconstructed States, to a few propositions which I believe they have rather overlooked.

In the first place they say that loyal men should be paid for their property taken. They ought to reflect upon the difficulty of ascertaining the fact of loyalty in this tribunal. I undertake to say that it is impossible. It is very difficult now to determine the present status of men living in the South. In the case, for instance, of propositions to remove disabilities, the testimony as to how a person in the South is now acting is in almost every case conflicting. It is a very difficult thing to ascertain even the present status of a man in the South, whether he is supporting the Government or whether he is still disloyal, and there is testimony on both sides of almost every case.

Now, we have Senators and Representatives from those States. We have our local officers there. It is in time of peace. The question to be determined is how some individual acted in time of war, whether he was loyal or disloyal; for if you establish the rule that all the loyal men are to be compensated for their property you must determine the question of loyalty, and in many cases it will be a mere condition of the mind and nothing else, and of course it is going to be a very difficult matter to determine, and in determining it you will pay ten dollars to the disloyal where you pay one to the loyal. Let me assure you of that, because it will depend more on the activity of the parties in procuring testimony than upon the inherent merits of the case.

The impossibility of giving such attention to it in Congress as to enable us to determine it should be a sufficient argument with every Senator against passing this bill, or any such bill which has merely undergone the examination of a committee. If the question is to be determined properly it must be done in some other form; it should be judicially determined. We have not the time nor the means of obtaining the testimony and investigating the loyalty of persons within the rebel lines during the war. It cannot be done by Congress. No bill of this kind ought to pass, no matter how much we may be in favor of the principle of it; and no Senator, it seems to me, ought to vote for this mode of determining the question of loyalty.

But it is said that we should do something for the loyal men of the South. I appeal to the Senators from that section if we have not done something for the loyal men of the South: if this country has not been taxed somewhat for them? We established a bureau called the Freedmen's Bureau with the express purpose of saving the loyal men of the South from oppression and starvation. It was the "Bureau of Freedmen and Refugees," and we expended millions on it. One whole party in the North cried out against our bounties to the loyal men of the South; it has been an issue which we have had to meet before the people. Through the agency of the Freedmen's Bureau we extended the most effectual and beneficent relief that could be extended to those people, and many whites and many blacks were saved from starvation and many millions were charged upon the people of the North, who had borne the burden of this war, to save them from starvation. Was not that more generous, more humane, more worthy of the attention of Congress, to save the suffering poor in the South from starvation, than to take up a few claims of persons who are able to come here and procure testimony and lobby them through? I tell you this nation has not been unmindful of its friends in the South, but it has been generous, and I think there is no case in history where generosity was so discriminately extended as through the agency of the Freedmen's Bureau to these poor people.

If there are conspicuous cases of devotion to the Union in the South, of sacrifices for the great cause, let them stand upon another principle; let them be predicated upon the principle that the Government of the United States will reward meritorious services; let them be predicated upon the same principle on which we reward like services in the North or anywhere else, but do not let them be predicated on the principle that we are indebted for exercising the legitimate functions of war in time of war, and exercising the belligerent rights which we undoubtedly had. Do not involve us in a debt of that kind, which is likely to deplete the Treasury and scatter the bounty of the Government to the unworthy. Let us not commit ourselves to any such rule as that. If this Government has not been charged enough with charity for these poor people, charge it yet more, but let it be discriminately extended to all who have suffered, and those who are suffering now, and those who are needy.

Take the case under consideration, and what can more strongly illustrate the danger of the precedent that would be set by the passage of the bill than the very case which we are considering? Here is a beautiful young lady, of fine social position, who I presume is in every way a worthy person, who was sixteen years old when the Army passed through Alabama. Living there among the enemies of the country she naturally must have partaken of the prevailing sentiment of the community in which she resided; but she was generous and polite to the Union soldiers, and undoubtedly would have been the same to the rebel soldiers. In the course of our military operations it became necessary to tear down a house which was in her name. Perhaps it was hers, and perhaps it belonged to some belligerent and had been conveyed to her for the purpose of avoiding confiscation by the United States. Here is no case of need, no case of meritorious services, but simply a case where enemy property was taken. I call it enemy property because it was used to shelter the enemy where it was situated, and it was necessary to remove it because it was property that would be of benefit to the enemy if allowed to remain.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SAWYER] misunderstands the whole drift of the arguments of the Senators who oppose these claims. We do not pretend to say that we will not make a distinction in the South between the loyal and the disloyal. No Senator has held any such position. We have said that during the emergencies of war, when we were exercising the rights of belligerents, we could not, from the very nature of the case, distinguish between the property of the loyal and the disloyal which was within the enemy's lines liable to be used for the benefit of the enemy, and which it was necessary for us to destroy in order to succeed. It is impossible, in the very nature of the case, to make such a discrimination; but have we not made a discrimination between the persons of the rebels and the persons of loyal men? It has been the whole subject of our legislation for the last three years. We have endeavored to place the government and power of that country in the hands of loyal men. We have endeavored to save loyal men from starvation and oppression. We have taxed the people of this country to the utmost of their capacity to carry out these great benevolent designs. Are we making no discrimination? We mark it wide. We say the dire necessities of war will permit no distinction to be made in an enemy's country between enemy's property and friendly property. The distinction cannot be made. If such property was destroyed it was one of the calamities brought upon us by this war which the people of the South must suffer as an incident of the location of their property in that country.

Now, I hope that the position of Senators is understood in saying that enemy property is that which is within the enemy's lines, and which must be treated as enemy property from the very nature of things. Do you say that we ought to make a distinction between the persons of loyal and disloyal men? Look at our statute-books; see our practice, and see what the Republican party particularly have put forth before the country—appropriation after appropriation for the Freedmen's Bureau; and not only that, but the people of the North have raised subscriptions in almost every town and hamlet and sent them South to feed the starving Union men. Do not the people make a distinction, and draw it wide? But once commence the indiscriminate payment of large sums of money to people in the South who are not needy, who are able to come here and lobby bills through, whom the vigilance of Congress is unable to keep out of these Halls—let that commence, and then you will have a feeling of hostility, you will have a feeling on the part of the loyal people of this nation that they have been wronged. They will bear any just taxation if the proceeds of that taxation go to the amelioration of the oppressed in the South and can be fairly and honestly distributed. Do not attempt any special legislation, particularly in a case like this, which involves, if carried out, millions and millions of dollars. Besides, to take up these individual cases will demoralize the whole country and consume the time of Congress. If there are conspicuous examples of loyalty and good faith in the South point them out, and establish some rule upon which this Government and other Governments have acted for their indemnification, when you have a proper case; but if you pass this bill it will be looked upon hereafter as a precedent. The report of the committee is here, the testimony is in writing, the facts are of record, and the precedent will be judged by the facts. I have heard no Senator vindicate this bill very strongly on its merits. Then vote it down. It seems to me that is the sensible way to dispose of it, and the Senators of the South will see that there is no disposition to treat the loyal men and the disloyal alike. They will find every disposition to make every distinction that can be made in the nature of the case and according to the capacity of the Government.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. President, I do not rise to enter into a general discussion of the questions which have been evolved in the progress of this debate. We have had elaborate arguments here, references to various authorities, technical pleadings, and specious propositions advanced which are foreign to the issue before us. I may say here to my friend from Nevada that I have not heard of any Senator proposing that the Government of the United States should become the general almoner of public charity to the people of the South. I know of no such proposition pending. There is a bill here under discussion proposing to do or not to do certain things. I could have wished that this bill was not here. I am in favor of its recommitment. I regret that the effort has been made to make the vote on this bill a test question. In my judgment the Senate cannot do it. The legislation of to-day may be repealed to-morrow. The vote of to-day may be reversed to-morrow. There may be enough Senators absent who, if present on some future occasion when a bill of a like character shall come before this body, may reverse the vote which you give now. I do not propose to make it a test question.

I imagine that if there had been no other claims or but few claims of a character similar to the one now pending we should not have been favored with these luminous dissertations on public law; we should have had no delving down into the musty pages of Grotius, Vattel, or Puffendorf to prove that those who were faithful friends of this Government during all the years of the war were its public enemies! Mr. President, with all the high respect I have for the honorable Senators who have laid down that proposition and have taxed their distinguished abilities to prove its truth, I am compelled to say that I revolt at that proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. THAYER. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. When it is claimed, as it has been, that the Government is under a legal liability to pay this claim, I ask if it is not competent for those who oppose its payment to submit authorities showing that no such legal liability exists?

Mr. THAYER. I certainly have not questioned the right of the honorable Senators to do that; not in the slightest. I do not question the propriety of it; but I say that in my judgment those authorities do not bear on this question. It is a question which addresses itself to the common judgment and the common sense of every individual, and is one which every one is competent to decide for himself. I do not want Grotius or Puffendorf to tell me my duty in regard to a simple proposition of this character. I hold that the man who is faithful in his obligations to his country through a civil war, though he may be domiciled in a rebellious State, stands in the same relation to this Government as does the citizen of New York or Oregon. I know no difference; and when you press me to a vote on that proposition, however much I may regret to differ with those honorable Senators for whose judgment I have so much respect, I must follow the dictates of my own conscience regardless of the question whether it opens the way for a large draft upon the public Treasury or not. Sir, I am with those Senators in guarding the public Treasury. I am as much opposed to opening the way to it as they are; but that is not the ground, in my opinion, on which to meet this case. It is not necessary to lay down the proposition that those who lived in the southern States and discharged their duty to their country are enemies. We can meet it on other grounds. Let us divide the question; let us vote on that proposition and then vote on the other, which is whether the owner of property taken under the circumstances which surround this case is entitled to compensation or not.

I doubt that he is entitled; and furthermore, in regard to this case, I have to say I have serious doubts as to the loyalty of the party; but I beg of the Senate not to affix the mark of public reprobation upon the few in the South who were faithful to the flag of their country during the trying hours of the war. It is not necessary that this should be done. To do it is, in my judgment, the refinement of cruelty.

There were a few loyal people in the South during the war. They were few in numbers, I grant; but there were some who were faithful among the faithless, who endured such trials, such sacrifices as no human pen will ever describe. Do not brand them as the public enemies of this nation. I have seen them come forth from the gorges of the mountains, from the depths of forests, from the caves of the earth as our flag advanced into that country, where they had been compelled to live for six months and for a year, and for two years, because they refused to be conscripted into the confederate ranks to fight against the flag of their country. They lived there thus, fed only by their wives and children, who would steal to them in the dead hour of the night. They endured all these sufferings rather than be false to their country.

Mr. President, I ask this Senate if we lay down this proposition and sanction it now shall we not be false to them; shall we not be false to our national faith and our national honor? Sir, if there shall be another rebellion could you blame every man and woman and child in the South if they joined the flag of secession if you vote this proposition to be public law? I have taken, many a time, the property of people in the South, and my quartermasters and commissaries were always directed to give vouchers conditioned for payment when the loyalty of the parties should be conclusively established. That was the universal practice of our armies, so far as my observation went, and it was the policy of the Government.

Mr. Lincoln undertook to organize civil governments in Louisiana and Arkansas upon the basis of one tenth of the people being loyal there. If there were so many as one tenth loyal he would organize civil governments. He held out inducements to them to remain there and to be the nucleus around which governments could be built up.

Belligerents they were, gentlemen say. I have always understood that we treated them as belligerents for the purpose of protecting the lives of Union soldiers who should fall into their hands. That I understood to be the reason; no other reason. Were they a coequal nation with which we were contending? Was that war like unto a war with a foreign Power? I never so understood it. But if they were belligerents why did we not treat with them as belligerents when the war closed? Why did we not negotiate for terms of peace? Would not that proposition be revolting to my distinguished friend from Massachusetts or my distinguished friend from Michigan? If they were belligerents in every respect why did we demand an unconditional surrender? Sir, I never treat with rebels. Some one hundred and eighty-five thousand loyal colored people living in the South enlisted under our banner and helped to fight the war through. Were they public enemies? Forty thousand white people residents of the South enlisted under our banner and helped us to fight the battles which finally won the victory over treason. Were they public enemies?

My honorable friend from Kentucky, in the course of his argument, alluded to the case of President Johnson to show that if this doctrine of loyal people being public enemies because they were domiciled in the South is true it would apply to him. I shall not take the case of the President as an illustration of my argument, for the President became a public enemy after the war was over. But, sir, I will point you to the case of a distinguished member of the other House, from Tennessee, Hon. HORACE MAYNARD. He was living at his home in Knoxville when the rebels entered that city. They took possession of his property and occupied it. He was driven from his home by the enemies of his country because he refused to recognize them, because he was true to his country. Was he a public enemy? The Federal Army then occupied Knoxville, and taking possession of it occupied his house and his property. They burned his fences. They destroyed much of his property.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Tennessee. They did not burn his residence, but they occupied his property.

Mr. THAYER. Some of his property was destroyed. He makes no claim here; but will you say by a solemn vote of the Senate that he was a public enemy?

Mr. President, this great Government of ours never appears in a more favorable aspect to me than when it stretches out the right hand of its power to Maine or to California, to Florida or to Oregon, or to the most distant quarter of the world, whether upon the sea or on the land, wherever the American flag floats, and lays the mantle of its protection about the humblest of her faithful citizens. England has much to answer for in her national career, and much which will redound to her honor; but, sir, in my judgment, England never appeared in a nobler aspect than when she sent her armies into the fastnesses of Central Africa to redeem half a dozen British subjects who were held in captivity by a barbarous king. Great Britain and Abyssinia were at war. Were those captives public enemies to the British Crown?

I trust the vote at least on this portion of the proposition will not be held to proclaim any such doctrine. Let us meet this case on the other question. Let us refer it back to the committee, or let us rather say we will not entertain any claims of this character; but let us lay down the proposition that a citizen in South Carolina or Alabama who is faithful to the flag of his country is entitled to the same protecting care and the same reimbursement for property destroyed as is the citizen of Massachusetts, New York, or Connecticut.

Sheridan once said, in the British House of Commons, when the news reached England of a great victory achieved by the British arms in a remote quarter of the world where England was waging a war which was not creditable to her national renown, "This may be a victory of which all of you may be glad now, but of which I predict that none of you will be proud hereafter." So I say you may declare by a solemn vote of the Senate that those who were true to their Government through the war in the South were public enemies, but it will be a vote to which, in my judgment, none hereafter will recur with pleasure or pride.

Mr. MORTON obtained the floor.

Mr. POMEROY. Will the Senator yield for a motion for an executive session?

Mr. WILSON. I hope not. I hope we shall finish the bill to-day. I desire to offer an amendment to it.

Mr. MORTON. I prefer not to yield. I shall detain the Senate but a very few minutes.

Mr. President, the doctrine maintained by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER,] the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN,] and others, may be summed up in this general proposition: that so far as all claims against the Government for property taken for military purposes are concerned all loyal men in the rebel States must be considered and treated as public enemies. That is the general proposition maintained, I believe, by all those Senators. I endeavored to meet that proposition the other day by the other one, that wherever a loyal man living in the North was entitled to recover for property taken for military purposes the loyal man living in the South was entitled to recover property taken for military purposes under the same circumstances. I consider that no other rule can be adopted that will not only work injustice but bad faith; and I now call the attention of the Senate to the question of public faith that is involved in this controversy.

Mr. President, from the beginning of this war we did all in our power to encourage the people of the South to be loyal and to stand by the Government. We promised them protection for life and property so far as it might be in our power. What kind of protection did we promise to accord to them? I take it, the same kind of protection that we would accord to a loyal man living in the North. If it did not mean that it did not mean anything. We promised them that they should have the same sort of protection for life and property if they would remain loyal and stand by the Government that we would give to the loyal man living in a loyal State. What kind of protection is that to a loyal man in the South where you take his property upon the same terms and conditions that you take the property of a rebel? It is a direct violation of that promise; it is a violation of our whole policy to the loyal men of the South from the beginning of the war. Why, sir, we have encouraged them by proclamations, we have encouraged them by acts of Congress, we have encouraged them by the general orders of the generals of the Army, we have encouraged them by the very policy mentioned by the Senator from Nebraska, that wherever our officers took property in the South for military purposes they would give a voucher for it conditioned for payment upon the proof of the loyalty of the claimant; and we thereby, at the time our armies were there, encouraged the loyal men of the South to stand by us, by our generals, saying to them in the form of vouchers, "You shall be paid for this property if you can prove your loyalty when the war is over." That was the promise we made to the loyal men of the South in every possible form and from day to day. Our solemn faith as a nation is pledged on this subject, and we cannot adopt the policy that has been advocated upon the floor of the Senate without compromising and violating that faith.

Why, Mr. President, have we not pledged this protection to the Union men of the South in every possible form? Have we not obtained political power upon it? Did we not go before the people of this country last year and rehearse the story of their wrongs? Did we not appeal to the people, to their hearts as well as to their heads, when we portrayed to them the sufferings and the wrongs endured by the loyal men of the South, how they were plundered of their property, how their lives were made insecure, how they had spent their days in imprisonment or in exile? All of these things we have done, and we have acquired political power partly in consequence of it. We have called them friends from the beginning; we have built upon their friendship; we are their friends in every particular until they come to us with a bill for payment, which a northern man would receive payment for under precisely the same circumstances, and when they come to us with such a claim we tell them, "We cannot pay you; we must regard you as public enemies; you had the misfortune to live in a rebel State, and must therefore be regarded as public enemies." Sir, I cannot find language that I am willing to employ with which to describe this proposition.

Sir, it is not for the Republican party to take this ground. Let us leave it to the Democratic party. But to their honor be it said their representatives on this floor have repudiated it. If this deed is to be done let it be left to that other party who have not been the friends of the Union men throughout the struggle, whose sympathies were not with them. Let it not be said that that party which has claimed to be the protector of loyalty both North and South, which has appealed to the people for the protection of the Union men of the South, which has excited the sympathy of the nation by the story of their wrongs, have as last played false to those same men; and, when peace has come, turned upon them coldly with this old metaphysical doctrine of international law writers, that they are to be regarded as public enemies.

One word further, sir, and I have done. I stated the proposition a day or two ago that wherever a northern man would be paid for property taken for military purposes during the war, the loyal man of the South whose property was taken for the same purpose and under the same circumstances, should also be paid. The Senator from Oregon, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] in a very able argument yesterday, undertook to answer that proposition; and I will ask the Secretary to read the passage in the Globe that is marked with ink, for it embraces the only answer that can be made to it.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

"When the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] propounded a question yesterday to this effect, ought not a loyal person in the State of Alabama whose property is taken for the purposes of this war to be paid in the same way as a person in the State of New York whose property is taken for the purposes of this war under the same circumstances? It was said that the inquiry suggested a conclusive argument in support of this claim. Now, sir, I make this answer: no property could be taken in the State of New York during the rebellion for war purposes under the same circumstances as property was taken in the State of Alabama for such purposes. The fallacy lies in the unfounded assumption that the circumstances attending property in the State of New York were like the circumstances surrounding property in the State of Alabama. Property in the State of New York was under the protection of the Constitution and the laws of the United States, while property in the State of Alabama, in consequence of the rebellion, was not under the protection of the Constitution and laws of the United States. When, therefore, property in the State of New York was taken by the Government for the purpose of prosecuting the war, a legal liability attached to the Government to pay for that property; but when property was taken in the State of Alabama, a State at war with the Federal Government, no such legal liability attached."

Mr. MORTON. Now, Mr. President, the reason given in answer to my question is, that the property of the man that was taken in New York was under the protection of the Constitution and laws of the United States, but the property of the loyal man in Alabama was not under the protection of the Constitution of the United States. I deny that proposition. It is at variance with the whole theory upon which we prosecuted this war. If that proposition is true, then a large part of our legislation in regard to the war is false, unfounded, and unconstitutional. We proceeded upon the theory that the Constitution and laws should protect the life and property of every loyal man in this country wherever he might be found. We proceeded at the same time upon the theory that the property and the lives of the rebels could not be protected, or they could not claim protection under the Constitution that they were fighting against and were laboring to overthrow. Why, sir, the idea that because of a rebellion on the part of a portion of the people of the State of Alabama, the protection of the Constitution was withheld from the loyal men of that State, has not got a single leg to stand upon. It has neither authority nor has it reason, but it is in conflict with every proclamation, with every statute, and with every step that we took to put down that rebellion, from beginning to end.

Again says the honorable Senator:

"But when property was taken in the State of Alabama, a State at war with the Federal Government, no such legal liability attached."

Are we prepared now to recognize the doctrine that the State of Alabama, as a State, was at war with the Federal Government? No, sir; never. We did not proceed upon that theory. When we were told at the beginning of the war that we had no authority to coerce a State we said, "We have nothing to do with States; we will coerce the rebel people of that State; with the State as such we have nothing to do." If it shall now be recognized that the State of Alabama, as a State, in her municipal character was carrying on a war with us by means of which the loyal men of that State were deprived of their protection under the Constitution there are many other consequences which will follow that doctrine which we dare not admit. Sir, that doctrine is heretical. We dare not, we cannot maintain it without overturning the whole theory upon which we have put down this rebellion.

Mr. President, in conclusion allow me to say that so far as this old doctrine of the books is concerned, though it may be well founded in reason as applied to the Governments and countries of the Old World and the times when it was propounded, we are, in the language of the lawyers, estopped from setting it up. We have promised these men from the first to be their friends, to protect their lives and their property; and if we turn around and say, when we have taken their property, "We are not bound by that pledge, because you were our enemies in contemplation of law," we dishonor and stultify ourselves. As I said before, it is not for the Republican party, at least, to take any such abhorrent position.

Mr. HOWARD. I ask the honorable Senator from Indiana whether the act of 1861 prohibiting trade and intercourse between the rebel States and all other portions of the United States was constitutional or not? If it was a constitutional act, then I ask him whether that did not superinduce a state of war between the two sections, and whether the people of those sections, thus placed by statute in hostility, were not, in contemplation of public law, public enemies; and whether a Union man at the South, during the existence of that statute, could rightfully and lawfully, without a license, pass from the rebel States into the loyal States?

Mr. MORTON. Certainly not; but what has that to do with this question?

Mr. HOWARD. I think it has much to do with it.

Mr. MORTON. What has a regulation of that kind, which might even have been applied to a loyal State if it were necessary, to do with this question? We might have cut off the trade even between loyal States, as an act of war, if it would contribute to put down the rebellion; but what has that got to do with this proposition? If you take the property of a loyal man for military purposes in New York you are bound to pay him, and you have paid him; and when you take the same property from a loyal man in the South, under the same circumstances, you say you are not bound to pay him because, in contemplation of law, he was a public enemy. I say that is in violation of every pledge, promise, inducement, and understanding that we have held out to them from the first, and that we cannot do it without stultifying ourselves.

Mr. HOWARD. The honorable Senator speaks of doing this act "under the same circumstances" in the two cases. The supposition is impossible, simply. The law settled and fixed the character of the two communities who were engaged in war with each other. If he denies the validity of the act of 1861, then I shall not be disposed to contest the point with him at all. I supposed that that, however, was settled.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President—

Mr. POMEROY. Will the Senator yield for a motion to go into executive session?

Mr. WILSON. No, sir; I want to finish this bill to-day.

Mr. POMEROY. This question will never terminate.

Mr. WILSON. I shall occupy the floor but a moment.

Mr. President, two years ago supposing that whatever might be the legal condition of the loyal people of the southern States Congress would deal with them on principles of equity, the Committee on Military Affairs reported a bill for a commission, or rather ten commissions, to visit the States lately in rebellion and examine into and report to Congress upon all the claims of loyal men. No action was taken by Congress on that matter; but the loyal people, or persons claiming to be loyal in the rebel States, have sent into the quartermaster's department 20,176 claims, amounting to $10,202,000. A portion of those claims have been passed upon. Four hundred and ninety-six claims, amounting to $318,000, have been allowed. There was a reduction of $141,000 upon those claims. There have been rejected 1,574 claims, amounting to $2,654,000. There are 5,394 claims now pending, amounting to about $6,592,000. There have been 5,386 claims presented to the commissary department for $2,918,000. Eight hundred and forty-five of those claims, amounting to $249,000, have been recommended to be paid. Three thousand five hundred and forty-five claims, amounting to $2,088,000, have been disallowed. So that of the whole number of claims in these two departments from the rebel States, amounting to over 25,000, most of them have been passed upon, and only a very small proportion allowed—$500,000 against $2,600,000 rejected in the quartermaster's department, and about $250,000 allowed, and $2,000,000 rejected in the commissary department. Of the $13,000,000 claimed for quartermaster and commissary supplies furnished the Army of the United States, a very small portion has been allowed; and, I take it, a very small portion will be allowed. I am told by the officers who examine these matters that a great number of them are fraudulent, and that it requires the most careful examination to detect them.

Some Senators say that if we enter upon the payment of these claims we shall entail upon the Treasury of the United States an expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars. Why, sir, even the Senator from Alabama [Mr. WARNER] told us he did not think they would amount to more than fifty million dollars. The officers who for three years have had the examination of the claims that have come in from these States do not believe that they will amount to $15,000,000. A large proportion of these claims come from Tennessee, and I am told by gentlemen from Tennessee that they have at least two million dollars of claims in that State, but I have no idea the loyal claims will amount to more than ten or twelve million dollars in the aggregate.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the Senator if those presented are only those for which vouchers were given?

Mr. WILSON. Some are on vouchers, and some have no vouchers. They are claims for quartermasters' and commissary supplies for the Army. Some are on vouchers and some are not; but these are all that have been made for the two great sources, and there is nothing else left, or scarcely anything, except it be claims like the present one of Sue Murphey, where the Government took, by order of military commanders, some property for the use of the Army for fortifications, or something of that kind.

Now, sir, the law may be one way in this case; but I think that it would be sound policy for the Government to do exact justice in the case; and I do not believe it will cost this Government any of these tens of millions of dollars that have been mentioned, especially if the claims are thoroughly investigated and examined. I think that the case we have before us has no claim here; at any rate, no claim has been proved; and I take it, it will go back to the committee; and I propose, in order to have a thorough investigation of these claims of loyal men, to amend the bill by striking out all the enacting clause and inserting a substitute which I send to the Chair, and then let it go to the committee for consideration. I ask the Secretary to read the amendment.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was to strike out all of the original bill after the enacting clause, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That Major General George H. Thomas, Brevet Major Generals E. R. S. Canby, Oliver O. Howard, Montgomery C. Meigs, and Amos B. Eaton be appointed commissioners to examine and report all claims for quartermasters' stores and subsistence supplies furnished the military forces of the United States during the late civil war by loyal persons in the States lately in rebellion.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said commissioners shall have power to employ the necessary clerks, purchase the requisite stationery, to advertise, to rent rooms for the transaction of business, to provide transportation for clerks, and to incur all necessary expenses incident to the performance of their duties; and said expenses shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury on the requisition and certificate of said commissioners out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said commissioners shall commence their labors on the 1st day of April, 1869; and the said commissioners shall not continue to act longer than two years from and after the date of their entry upon their duties hereby prescribed.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That all claims for quartermasters' stores and subsistence supplies furnished by loyal persons in the States lately in rebellion to the Army of the United States, and all papers relating to such claims on file in the offices of the Quartermaster General and Commissary General, shall be referred to said commissioners; and it shall be the duty of said commissioners to give public notice of their readiness to receive such claims, to hear and determine upon the evidence offered in support thereof, and of the loyalty of the claimants, as hereinafter provided, and upon such evidence to report to Congress what amount, if any, should in such case be allowed; and said reports shall include a copy of record, accompanied by original proofs of loyalty, and the oath provided by the following section.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That in determining the loyalty of any claimant under the provisions of this act, it shall be the duty of said commissioners to require in every case satisfactory proof that the claimant has faithfully and firmly maintained his or her adherence and allegiance to the Government of the United States by defending its cause against the government and forces of the so-called Confederate States of America in all suitable and practicable ways, and that the claimant earnestly, continuously, and openly desired the success of the military forces of the United States and the establishment of the authority of the national Government. And the said commissioners shall require each claimant to take and subscribe to the following oath as a prerequisite to the reception and examination of such claim, to wit: I, —, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I have neither sought nor accepted, nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever under any authority or pretended authority in hostility to the United States; that I have not yielded support to any pretended government, authority, power, or constitution within the United States hostile or inimical thereto; that I have always endeavored to the best of my ability to uphold the authority of the United States; that during the late war for the suppression of the rebellion I openly, earnestly, and continuously desired the success of the Army and Navy of the United States and the establishment of their authority over the insurgents; and that I take this oath without mental reservation or purpose of evasion. So help me God.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That any person violating the oath prescribed by the previous section of this act shall be liable to the pains and penalties of willful and corrupt perjury. Any member of the commission appointed by this act may administer the said oath or any other oath that may be found necessary to taking evidence concerning claims to be examined. And it is hereby made the duty of said commissioners, or either of them, to cause the arrest and prosecution before the proper judicial tribunal of any person or persons, who, in their judgment, have corruptly taken and subscribed to said oath or oaths.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That no claim shall be considered unless presented to the commission within six months from the date of public notice of the organization of the same, and no payment of such claims shall be made until authorized by Congress upon the report of said commissioners as hereinbefore provided.

Mr. WILSON. I will state that General Meigs in his report recommends the appointment of a commission for this purpose. He has been engaged for a long time in these examinations and understands the subject thoroughly and what the country needs. I have selected General Thomas, General Canby, and General Howard, three generals of the Army in whom the whole nation has great confidence, who can be trusted, and associated with them General Meigs, the head of the quartermaster's department, and General Eaton, the head of the commissary department. I should have full confidence in each one and all of these men being just to the whole country and just to all loyal claimants.

Mr. HOWE obtained the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator yield to allow me to make a word or two of reply to the Senator from Indiana? I will occupy but a few moments.

Mr. HOWE. I will yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I affirmed a proposition of law yesterday when I had the honor to address the Senate which the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] has seen proper to controvert and denounce as wholly unfounded and unprecedented in the judicial history of any country. One reason which I assigned to show that the circumstances of property in the State of New York were not like the circumstances of property in the State of Alabama during the late civil war was that the Constitution and laws of the country protected the property in the State of New York and did not protect the property in the State of Alabama. The Senator affirms that property in the State of Alabama was as much under the protection of the Constitution and laws of the country as property in any of the loyal States. I should like to hear the Senator justify his course in the Senate for two years if it be true that the Constitution of the United States was as much in force in the rebel as it was in the loyal States. How can he justify the military reconstruction bill? How can he justify the legislation by Congress which has assumed to regulate all matters in the insurrectionary States? Did not our legislation proceed upon the assumption that those States had forfeited their rights under the Constitution in consequence of the rebellion, and that the General Government had the right, and could exercise the power, of dictating to them such laws as it saw proper?

Now, sir, without extending the argument, I wish to refer to an authority or two upon the subject which will show that the statement which I made was not altogether without authority. Chief Justice Chase, in the Milligan case, referring to this subject, says:

"The Constitution itself provides for military government as well as for civil government. And we do not understand it to be claimed that the civil safeguards of the Constitution have application in cases within the proper sphere of the former."

Where there is a military government, according to this authority, as there confessedly was in the State of Alabama, for it was under martial law, then the civil safeguards of the Constitution do not apply to life, person, or property, according to the opinion of the Chief Justice of the United States.

I refer also to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in what are called the prize cases, in which the position assumed by the honorable Senator is directly controverted and condemned. The court say in that decision:

"They contend, also, that insurrection is the act of individuals and not of a Government or sovereignty; that the individuals engaged are subjects of law; that confiscation of their property can be effected only under a municipal law; that by the law of the land such confiscation cannot take place without the conviction of the owner of some offence, and finally that the secession ordinances are nullities and ineffectual to release any citizen from his allegiance to the national Government, and consequently that the Constitution and laws of the United States are still operative over persons in all the States for punishment as well as protection.

"This argument rests on the assumption of two propositions, each of which is without foundation on the established law of nations. It assumes that where a civil war exists, the party belligerent claiming to be sovereign, cannot, for some unknown reason, exercise the rights of belligerents, although the revolutionary party may. Being sovereign, he can exercise only sovereign rights over the other party. The insurgent may be killed on the battle-field or by the executioner; his property on land may be confiscated under the municipal law; but the commerce on the ocean, which supplies the rebels with means to support the war, cannot be made the subject of capture under the laws of war, because it is unconstitutional. Now, it is a proposition never doubted, that the belligerent party who claims to be sovereign, may exercise both belligerent and sovereign rights, (see 4 Cr., 272.) Treating the other party as a belligerent and using only the milder modes of coercion which the law of nations has introduced to mitigate the rigors of war, cannot be a subject of complaint by the party to whom it is accorded as a grace, or granted as a necessity. We have shown that a civil war such as that now waged between the northern and southern States is properly conducted according to the humane regulations of public law as regards capture on the ocean.

"Under the very peculiar Constitution of this Government, although the citizens owe supreme allegiance to the Federal Government, they owe also a qualified allegiance to the State in which they are domiciled. Their persons and property are subject to its laws.

"Hence, in organizing this rebellion they have acted as States claiming to be sovereign over all persons and property within their respective limits and asserting a right to absolve their citizens from their allegiance to the Federal Government. Several of these States have combined to form a new confederacy, claiming to be acknowledged by the world as a sovereign State. Their right to do so is now being decided by wager of battle. The ports and territory of each of these States are held in hostility to the General Government. It is no loose, unorganized insurrection, having no defined boundary or possession. It has a boundary marked by lines of bayonets and which can be crossed only by force. South of this line is enemy's territory because it is claimed and held in possession by an organized hostile and belligerent Power.

"All persons residing within this territory whose property may be used to increase the revenues of the hostile power are in this contest liable to be treated as enemies, though not foreigners."—2 Black's R., p. 672-673.

Sir, I think that authority affirms that the State of Alabama, as a State, was at war with the Federal Government.

Mr. MORTON. Will my friend allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. MORTON. The Supreme Court there state that the people of the South claimed as States, and as several States to do this thing; but does the Supreme Court there or anywhere else recognize the validity of their action as States, or that it was anything else but a revolutionary, rebellious, insurrectionary act? They are simply stating the facts; but they nowhere recognize, nor has this Congress ever recognized, that they were rebel States, and as such their action to be recognized by us.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Sir, the question is not whether their proceedings were valid or not, but the question is did the State of Alabama, as an organized political body, wage war upon the Federal Government, or was it a loose, unorganized insurrection of individuals? I say that the people of the State of Alabama did form a constitution and government in hostility to the Federal Constitution, and under that hostile government they made war upon the Union.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the honorable Senator allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly; but I do not wish to take up the time of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. DAVIS. Only a moment. I understood the Senator to read from the opinion of Chief Justice Chase in the Milligan case.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did.

Mr. DAVIS. The opinion of the Chief Justice in the Milligan case is not the opinion of the court; but it is the opinion of a minority judge against the opinion of the court.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I supposed that every Senator upon this floor knew that fact; but I simply cited the opinion of the Chief Justice to show that he and two or three of the other justices of the Supreme Court did support me in the position which I had assumed, and that I did not advance a proposition here, as the Senator from Indiana asserted, that was unknown in judicial proceedings. I have my own opinion as to whether the majority or the minority of the Supreme Court were right in the Milligan case.

But, sir, I think the opinions of Chief Justice Chase and Mr. Justices Wayne, Swayne, and Miller, entitle me to say, when I affirm a proposition which they judiciously determine to be correct, that it is not unprecedented in judicial history, and that it is possible, notwithstanding the majority of the court decided the other way, that it may be correct. But, sir, the proposition which I laid down from the opinion of Chief Justice Chase was not one of the controverted points in that case at all, and there is not one word or syllable in that entire case that controverts the proposition laid down by Chief Justice Chase. I read that because it was a clear and perspicuous statement of the point which I presented to the Senate, and the whole opinion of the Supreme Court is entirely consistent with that position.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President—

Mr. POMEROY. I suppose the Senator does not intend to conclude his speech to-day. Will he yield for a motion for executive session?

Mr. HOWE. Unless there is some public necessity for an executive session I prefer to commence at least what I have to say at the present time. Whenever the Senate desire an adjournment I shall give way to a motion to adjourn.

Mr. President, before I go on I feel called upon to return devout thanks for that sparing mercy which has watched over and preserved my life until this late period of time. [Laughter.] And now, sir, I think myself happy because at last I shall answer concerning all the things whereof the principle in this little bill before the Senate stands accused—"by the Jews," as the Scripture hath it. [Laughter.] And first, I wish to make a remark by way of correcting a misapprehension which I think was communicated to the press through inadvertence growing out of the remarks I made a long time ago, in the opening of this discussion. I took especial pains at that time, I thought, to have it understood that in my own view of this case I made a broad and radical distinction between the treatment which, under our laws, is due to a Union man in that portion of the United States and the treatment due to rebels there. I disclaimed, I thought, expressly and absolutely, all idea that under our laws we were bound to pay for any property taken by the Government from the rebels in those districts. The dispatches sent to the press, however, said only so much as this: that I contended that even if we were not bound to pay for property taken from rebels, we were bound to pay for property taken from Union men, conveying to the public the intimation that I had rather insisted upon the doctrine that we were bound to pay for property taken from both classes of these people.

And now, Mr. President, having set myself right on that point, I wish to say a few words with a view of defining what I understand to be the position of the Committee on Claims upon this question. I have before said that to the merits of this bill the present Committee on Claims is not committed. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] went further than that the other day, and I understood him to affirm that whenever and so often as the principle of this bill had been under discussion in the Committee on Claims it had been repudiated and rejected.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I believe the Senator nearly states my position; but my intention was to state this: that the principle had never been adopted by the committee; had been rejected in all our laws; rejected by the courts, and that even this claim had not received the sanction of a majority of the committee.

Mr. ANTHONY. As I reported this unfortunate bill originally allow me to say a word. The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims—I should say unanimously if my friend from Oregon [Mr. WILLIAMS] had not reminded me that he dissented, which I was not aware of at the time.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. That was before I came to the Senate, when I was not a member of the committee.

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly; it was when the Senator from New Hampshire, who is now the district judge of New Hampshire, (Mr. Clark,) was the chairman of the Committee on Claims; a man who was as careful as his successor is, and no man can be more careful to guard the interests of the Government. He spoke in favor of the bill when it was passed.

Mr. POMEROY. This case cannot be here by virtue of any report made at that time; that was during the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

Mr. HOWE. I have already explained that this bill is here only by the consent of the members of the committee, and with no recommendation from anybody in the world.

Mr. ANTHONY. I understood the Senator from Vermont to say that this principle had never received the assent of the Committee on Claims. This bill received its assent; whether the principle received its assent or not I do not know. The bill received its assent, and the chairman of the committee, Mr. Clark, called up the bill, advocated it, and indorsed it in the fullest manner, briefly, indeed, but very fully and completely, and some other Senators did, too.

Mr. HOWE. The Committee on Claims, so far as my recollection goes, has never debated as a question of law the principle which I understand to be involved in this bill, but once; and that was on the occasion to which I referred the other day when a report was presented to the committee upon the claim of the New York and Virginia Steamship Company, in which a proposition was submitted, which I understood, and which I suppose other members of the committee understood, to embrace that legal proposition which has been affirmed over and over again on this floor during this debate; and upon the propriety of retaining that clause in the report there was a debate in the committee, and by a vote of the committee it was stricken out of the report. But I do not think myself that that vote was an evidence that a majority of the committee were persuaded the proposition was wrong in law. That could hardly have been the case, since a majority of those who then constituted the Committee on Claims have stood here on the floor protesting against that principle during this debate.

But the Senator from Vermont said, and undertook to prove, that the committee had made decisions which were directly in antagonism to the principle of this bill. He cited the case of a report made upon the petition of a couple of Sisters of Mercy from the city of Charleston; and also a report made by the committee on the petition of one Dennis Sullivan. The principle in both those cases, in my judgment, is widely and radically different from the principle involved here. The Sisters of Mercy, who presented their petition to Congress to be paid for an institution of learning which had been destroyed during the bombardment of the city of Charleston by our troops, did not pretend to have any claim upon the justice of the Government; they appealed to the equity of the Government, to the liberality of the Government, to the generosity of the Government. They said that they were engaged in a work of mercy; they were employed for the public good always and for the good of all the public without distinction; that their work had been injured by the necessary and unavoidable accident of war; that our Government and its troops had inflicted the injury, and they thought the Government in the exercise of its generosity could afford to make good those damages. I thought that application was rightly founded, and I voted to grant the prayer of the petition, or at least a portion of it; I forget just to what extent I was in favor of going. This claim of Sue Murphey is put upon the ground of an obligation; that claim was not put upon the ground of an obligation at all.

Again, the Senator cites us to the report made upon the petition of Dennis Sullivan, which was an application to Congress to pay for property not taken by the Government of the United States, but destroyed as an accident of war. This property, the property for which payment is asked in this case, was property not destroyed as an accident of war, does not fall within the description of what are known as the ravages of war, but it was property deliberately taken and appropriated to the use of the Government.

Now, sir, to the contrary of these citations I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont and of the Senate to a few reports which have been made from that committee and which have received the sanction of this body, and between which and the case before the Senate I cannot conceive that there is any difference, nor do I believe any Senator on this floor can point out a difference.

The case of Armes, who had a building destroyed during the war, is not exactly parallel to this, though I think we went further in that case than we are asked to go in this, since, if I remember the facts in that case, that was property destroyed during a battle, for which we paid. I am not sure that I recollect the facts distinctly, but it was property in Virginia, and it was destroyed by this Government or the action of this Government.

The case of Segar has not been assented to by the Senate, but it has been assented to by the committee. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] reminds me of a distinction between that and this case, because he says that was within our lines, and I suppose he means to say that this was not within our lines. Upon that point the Senator is already advised that he and I are at issue. I insist that this was within our lines, also. The property of Segar was in the State of Virginia, one of the States which we are so often told have been declared by the President of the United States to be in insurrection or in rebellion.

Again, this very bill, as you have been told over and over again, was reported by the Committee on Claims—not the committee existing during the last session of this Congress, but a preceding Committee on Claims; it was reported while, as the Senator from Rhode Island has just said, a former Senator from New Hampshire was chairman of the committee. It passed the Senate, and not a vote was recorded against it—not carelessly, not in ignorance on the part of the Senate of what the bill was, for when the bill was read the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] remarked:

"I do not like the reading of that bill. I wish to hear an explanation of it."

I read from the report in the Globe; then the debate continued:

"Mr. POMEROY. I should like to hear the bill read again. I do not know what it is for. Is it for damages because our troops encamped on somebody's farm?"

"Mr. CLARK. Not at all. This lady lives at Decatur, Alabama. Her farm was occupied by our troops, and it became necessary to fortify the place. Her house was upon her farm, situated exactly in the corner of the fortification that it was necessary to erect. She is proved to have been an eminently loyal person by all those who had acquaintance with her. The Government destroyed her house entirely, took it down, and built a fortification right upon it; it became absolutely necessary to do so for the defense of the place."

"Mr. POMEROY. I think this must be a case about like the Armes case."

"Mr. CLARK. It involves the same principle as the Armes case; but here the house was taken down and a fortification put upon the spot."

"Mr. POMEROY. Have we passed the Armes bill?"

"Mr. CLARK. We passed it once, but it stands on a motion to reconsider."

"Mr. WILLIAMS. This was taken by order of the commanding officer directly."

"Mr. CLARK. There is no question of it."

"Mr. POMEROY. I will not oppose this, because I am in favor of the Armes bill."

"Mr. CLARK. It is a claim that ought to be paid."

"The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time, and passed."

And it was passed with a full knowledge of every fact upon which the passage of this bill has been disputed for weeks at the present session.

Mr. President, I desire now to call the attention of the Senate to another report made by the Committee on Claims which, if I do not misremember it, had the assent of the Senator from Vermont, and which had the assent, if I remember aright, of every member of the committee as constituted at the last session of Congress. It was a claim presented on behalf of L. Merchant & Co., and Peter Rosecrantz; it was for cotton. They were merchants in Mobile, in the same State of Alabama. They had purchased a quantity of cotton—I have the report in my hand—they had it in their possession in Mobile. When that place was taken by our forces, the rebel officer in command there undertook to burn all the cotton in the place; but the remonstrance made by the citizens was so violent against that course that he finally told the owners of the cotton that if they would remove it from the city they might do so. L. Merchant & Co. and Rosecrantz removed a large quantity of cotton up the river and secreted it, as the report says, in a bayou or creek or something of the sort, and there it remained until our troops took possession of Mobile. Then the cotton was brought down to Mobile; it was taken possession of by a Treasury agent; it was sent to New York; it was sold. The House of Representatives passed a bill to pay the money received for that cotton back to those owners. The Committee on Claims of the Senate agreed to that bill; the Senate agreed to it; the bill became a law; and I suppose the money has been paid. That was property owned by persons in Alabama. It was cotton. It was movable property. It was property which our own Supreme Court says, and which all our history shows, has constituted so large a share of the force and of the sinews of the rebellion, and yet we did not then claim that that was our property, or that we had any right to capture and confiscate it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOWE. Certainly.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask whether the law that was passed by Congress early in relation to that matter, providing that all captured and abandoned cotton taken possession of by our agents should be sold by the Government and that the owners might, within a given time, on proving their loyalty and proving their right of property recover the proceeds, did not take that description of property out of the general rule? I take it that any Government has a right by law, even where a legal principle exists, to vary that principle in regard to particular cases. If they varied it in regard to cotton it would not follow that they changed it in regard to other kinds of property.

Mr. HOWE. I think the question is entirely pertinent, and I will reply to it as well as I can. Unquestionably this right of capture, this right of confiscation, which is all the right that is asserted here, is a right which the sovereign may exercise or may waive. With reference to cotton; the suggestion of the Senator is that the Government determined to waive it and not to exercise it. That is true; but I think the inference is almost irresistible that when the Government solemnly decided through its legislative tribunal that it would not capture or confiscate cotton, it certainly ought to be concluded that it was the judgment of Congress that no property belonging to loyal people, to our friends, should be captured or confiscated.

But I wish to call the attention of the Senator to another piece of history connected with this cotton business. The language of that act was—I quote from memory—that only cotton abandoned or captured should be disposed of in the way pointed out by that statute; that it should be sold and the proceeds paid into the Treasury, and those proceeds for two years after the close of the war should be held subject to the claim of loyal people. But, I take it, it is within the knowledge of the Senator from Maine—it is a part, I think, of the history of our legislation—that large quantities of cotton and large sums of money in specie, the proceeds of cotton, were returned to just such people as this case presents Sue Murphey to be upon the ground that it was neither captured nor abandoned. That cotton and that money were not disposed of under the terms of that act; but I think I am authorized to assume that it was disposed of because it was the deliberate judgment of those officers of the Government that were in custody of the cotton and of the money, that inasmuch as the Legislature had spoken only in reference to captured and abandoned cotton, every other kind of cotton and every other kind of property were to be disposed of according to the established laws of the land, and inasmuch as no law was found authorizing the Government to reclaim any cotton unless it was captured or abandoned, all other cotton should go to the loyal claimant.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the marked distinction between that case and the case of Miss Sue Murphey. In that case the claimants were citizens of Rhode Island, and the property had been run off into the country beyond Mobile and without the reach of our Army; and upon the fact being made known to the general in that case of how the cotton was situated, the parties obtained a direct promise on the part of the general that the cotton might be sent back to Mobile and shipped to New York under the protection of the United States flag, in consequence of the loyalty of the parties. Nor do I understand that the armies of the United States whenever they took possession of any city confiscated all the personal property of the citizens, whether loyal or disloyal. The question arises only in the case of the use or destruction of property on the part of the Army.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, the distinction pointed out or attempted to be pointed out by the Senator from Vermont, I think, does not exist in fact; for in point of fact those parties were not citizens of Rhode Island. Once they were natives and citizens of Rhode Island, so the report says, but the language of the report is this:

"The claimants were natives and citizens of the State of Rhode Island previous to the late rebellion, but doing mercantile business at Mobile, Alabama, where these principal possessions were; and to protect their property until it should be disposed of they were obliged to remain in Mobile after the secession of the State of Alabama with the so-called southern confederacy."

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. But will the Senator allow me to ask him if the property was not placed in the hands of the general, under the direct pledge that it should be taken to New York and sold and the proceeds paid to the claimants?

Mr. HOWE. The report says something like that; but for the sake of meeting the case that my friend wishes to present here I will admit it says every word of that; and then I ask the Senator from Vermont, and I ask the Senator to say what right any one of your officers had to remit the property of the United States that was captured? It was our property, says the Senator; it was our property, says the law, which has been thundered through this Chamber ever since I was a young man, or, in other words, ever since this debate commenced. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Senator will remember that it was not captured, but surrendered, on the distinct pledge of the general.

Mr. HOWE. But if it was not captured in fact, upon which question there is great opportunity for dispute, it was where it ought to have been captured, and it did come into the hands of our Government, and we surrendered it; and it was cotton, it was property found in that part of the United States which, we are told over and over again, was enemy's territory, and it was in the hands of men whom we are told, over and over again, were enemies to the Government of the United States; and yet we paid back the proceeds of that cotton.

The Senator from New Jersey the other day stated to the Senate a distinction between the case of Sue Murphey and all these cotton cases, which, if I remember it, was something like this: that we paid back the money received for the cotton, because we had sold the cotton and got the money into the Treasury; and we could better afford to pay that out than we could afford to pay for this building of Miss Murphey's which we had taken down and which we had never got a cent for. What then? Is it the law of the land that we pay for property we take or not, according as we may make a good disposition of it or not? Is it the law of New Jersey that only property which is converted to the use of another is paid for when a wise use is made of the property? Certainly not. The Senator from New Jersey does not say that. Perhaps we can better afford to pay out money that we have in the Treasury than we can afford to pay for property that we never converted into money. But in point of fact I do not suppose we paid the identical money to Merchant & Co. that we received for their cotton; but after all what authority have we for saying that it was not just as important to have a fort at Decatur as it is to have cash in the Treasury? Is it not as good a disposition, as wise a disposition to be made of money, to put it into a fort as to put it into the Treasury?

Mr. EDMUNDS. By the permission of the Senator from Wisconsin I wish to make a statement for a moment touching the Merchant and Rosecrantz case at Mobile. The matter was investigated by a committee, of which I was a member, before it went to the Committee on Claims, and I remember the circumstances of the case perfectly. They have not been fully stated, and, without making any argument, I think it right to state them.

Merchant and Rosecrantz were the private owners of certain cotton in Mobile. It was in store there. When our Army was threatening Mobile the confederate authorities gave notice that all the cotton in store there should be burned lest it should be seized by our forces; but they said that anybody who could get transportation for his cotton might carry it up the river. These parties got two tug-boats on which they loaded their cotton, ostensibly for the purpose of carrying it up the river into the confederate lines. They started up the river and took it up a few miles, and then hid it, with the vessels, in a bayou, so that the confederate cotton went by while these people slipped their little tugs with the cotton on board out of sight of them, beyond the lines that existed when we took Mobile.

When our forces under General Granger took possession of the city he wanted these vessels for the purpose of transportation about the bay. These people told him what the situation was; that the cotton on board these two tug-boats was hid some miles up the river. He gave them a safe conduct to go up with such help as they could get, and bring down the cotton and the vessels; and he said in this safe conduct that they might have their cotton if they would bring it back, and take it where they pleased. They did bring it back and gave him the vessels and put the cotton in warehouse on the shore, where a great amount of other cotton was stored which had been taken by our authorities. It was then shipped to New York by mistake, the whole body of the cotton in that warehouse having been shipped together, and then they made this claim. These were the facts on which the claim arose.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I am obliged to say that I have not listened to the statement of the Senator from Vermont. I dare say he has stated the facts in the case of Merchant & Co. correctly, more accurately than I have; but, after all, he has not denied my statement that that was property found in a State which we are told was a rebel State, found in a State which we are told was enemy's territory, and that it was in the hands of those whom we are assured were enemies. I was speaking of the distinction made by the Senator from New Jersey. I wish, now, to call his attention to the fact that, however much that distinction may weigh in his mind, it has not controlled the action of the committee. That, I think, will be manifest to him if he recurs to the case of O. N. Cutler. Cutler asked of us to pay him for cotton which we never sold, cotton which he gathered in the State of Mississippi, near Vicksburg, cotton which he had in his possession or his agents had there, cotton which our quartermasters at Vicksburg sent out and seized and took possession of, brought into Vicksburg, and which they used to pack the boilers of one of these boats which General Grant employed to run his scows down by the batteries at Vicksburg.

On its way down the river the boat on which this cotton was, the Tigris I think she was called, was sunk by rebel shot. That cotton we never sold; the proceeds of that cotton were never paid into the Treasury; yet the owner of that cotton came before us and asked to be paid its value. We have reported a bill to pay him for that cotton, and I think I am justified in saying that every member of the Committee on Claims assented to that report. There was some discussion about the amount for which we should present a bill, but, I believe, not a word of discussion as to the propriety of paying a proper price for it.

And now, Mr. President, I think I may conclude that there is nothing in the action of the Committee on Claims which should prevent the Senate of the United States from attending carefully to whatever merits there may be in this bill, and certainly nothing which should prevent me from supporting the bill if in my judgment it is proper to be supported upon its merits.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With the permission of the Senator from Wisconsin, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 14, 1869.

The House met at twelve o'clock m.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

BRIDGE AT PHILADELPHIA.

On motion of Mr. O'NEILL, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Commerce was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1559) giving the consent of the United States to the erection of a bridge across the Delaware river between Philadelphia and Camden; and the same was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

NIAGARA SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned last evening it was understood that the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN HORN] should be entitled to the floor when the House resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1212) to provide for the construction of a ship-canal around the Falls of Niagara. By an order made by the House it is made the special order after the morning hour each day until disposed of, but by a further order of the House last evening the gentleman is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to postpone the bill till after the morning hour.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object to the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN HORN] yielding the floor for that motion.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts. I suppose it is competent for the House to postpone the bill.

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. I do not object, provided my rights are preserved.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object to the gentleman having the floor after the morning hour, and I give notice that unless his bill is disposed of to-day I shall move to postpone it.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts. I suppose the House can regulate its own business.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I suppose it can without the interference of the gentleman from Massachusetts. [Laughter.]

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts. Yes, or the gentleman from Illinois. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. If the bill is postponed when the morning hour expires the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN HORN] will be recognized as entitled to the floor under the usage.

On the motion to postpone until after the morning hour, there were—ayes 53, noes 18; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WINDOM, and WASHBURN of Illinois, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 72, noes 40.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know under what parliamentary rule the gentleman can make that motion.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The motion now being to postpone, a motion to lay on the table is in order.

The SPEAKER. The vote has not been declared on the motion to postpone. The gentleman cannot make a motion to lay on the table while the House is taking a vote on the pending motion.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to postpone.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion to postpone was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman has not the floor to make that motion. I propose to state my reasons for the motion I have made.

Mr. JUDD. I desire to ask, as a point of order, whether my colleague is entitled to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. He is; by the rules any gentleman can move to reconsider when the vote has not been taken by yeas and nays; but the motion to reconsider, a motion to postpone to a day certain, the Digest states admits of very limited debate. It does not extend to the merits of the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the rule on the subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

"The motion to postpone to a day certain under the practice admits of but a very limited debate, but on a motion to postpone indefinitely the whole question is open to debate."

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider is governed by the same principles as apply to the original motion.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I believe that I understand the rule, and I will try and confine myself to it. In the first place, I desire to have the bill read in order to show what it is, and to enable the House to determine whether it is not important to act upon it without this postponement until after the morning hour. I propose to show what the provisions of the bill are, and how important it is considered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. VAN HORN,] who has charge of it, that it should pass. And I am surprised that a gentleman being upon the floor on such an important bill as this should consent to its postponement until after the morning hour, which will probably lead to its indefinite postponement to-morrow; I hope it will, at least. I will ask that the various provisions of the bill may be read in order to show how important it is that there shall be immediate action upon the bill.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts. I rise to a point of order. I submit that upon the motion now made it is not in order to call for the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. It is not in order on this motion to demand the reading of the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Well, Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not want to antagonize myself with the Speaker on a point of order.

The SPEAKER. It is the privilege of every member, however, to antagonize the Speaker on points of order. He decides according to the rules and the Digest, subject to revision by the House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Well, it would also be the privilege of a member who antagonized the Speaker to come off second best. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. That would be for the majority of the House to determine.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope my colleague will go on with his speech.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I am very glad my colleague is so anxious to hear me. What I desired to say was this: that I think it somewhat extraordinary, when the House is acting upon a motion to postpone a measure, that they cannot know what that measure is. I supposed that I should have the privilege under the rules of the House of stating what the nature of the measure is that it is proposed to postpone, in order that the members of the House may determine whether or not it is proper to postpone it. Hence I desired to call attention to the provisions of the bill; I desired to show that it is right and proper that we should dispose of this matter at the earliest practicable moment, and that the people should know whether or not this large amount which the bill proposes to appropriate is to be made a charge upon the Government.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Illinois, without taking an appeal from the decision of the Chair, is yet arguing the question which the Chair has already decided. My point of order is that the gentleman has not a right, on a motion to postpone for one hour the consideration of this bill, to go into a discussion of the merits of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, which is sustained by the extract from the Digest which the Clerk has just read. A motion to postpone indefinitely brings up the merits of the question, and therefore it would be in order to call for the reading of the bill at that time. A motion to postpone to a day certain is a mere temporary laying aside of the bill, and all Speakers—and the gentleman from Illinois, as the senior member of the House, must be familiar with the practice—have decided that the merits of the bill cannot be debated on that proposition. There is only one subject of debate which has been tolerated by Speakers upon a motion to postpone to a day certain, and that is the condition of the public business, and whether it requires that the motion to postpone should or should not be agreed to.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I would inquire of the Chair what committee will be entitled to the floor during the morning hour in case the motion to postpone should not be reconsidered?

The SPEAKER. The Committee on the Territories will be entitled to the morning hour.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. As the Speaker has suggested that the condition of the public business can be discussed upon this motion, I propose to make a few brief remarks upon the public business which is before the House, in order to show that the interests of the public require that this bill should be disposed of as early as practicable.

Mr. CULLOM. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Very well.

Mr. CULLOM. I would inquire of the gentleman if it is his design to consume an hour in the remarks he proposes to make?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The intention of "the gentleman from Illinois" is to do his duty.

Mr. CULLOM. There will not be much time gained for the public business if the gentleman takes an hour to oppose the motion to postpone for an hour.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. "The gentleman from Illinois" intends to do his duty, and does not think it proper for his colleague to catechise him.

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. I would inquire of the Chair if I have a right to proceed with my remarks upon the merits of this bill?

The SPEAKER. Certainly not; for the House has postponed the bill, by a vote of 70 to 42, until after the morning hour.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. If my motion to reconsider shall prevail, then the gentleman will be at liberty to proceed.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts. And after the morning hour he will have that right if the motion to reconsider shall not prevail.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN HORN] says that if I will withdraw my motion to reconsider he will now proceed with his remarks on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot do that, because the House has ordered that the bill shall be postponed until after the morning hour of to-day.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURNE] yield to me to move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the tariff bill?

The SPEAKER. That would require unanimous consent.

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. I object to that.

Mr. SCOFIELD. It must be very evident to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURNE] that further opposition on his part will only result in the consumption of time, without accomplishing his purpose. I voted with him in opposition to the motion to postpone, but it is evident that the majority are opposed to us. I would, therefore, ask him to give way, and allow the morning hour now to go on.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I understand very well the strength of the appeal of my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations, [Mr. SCOFIELD.] But this is what I desire to say to the House in my justification, if any gentleman thinks that is necessary, though I do not think it is. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. VAN HORN,] against my protest, obtained a suspension of the rules for the purpose of making his bill a special order. The bill came up yesterday, and the gentleman took the floor, but did not proceed with his remarks. Now it comes up again. I consider it necessary that it should be disposed of, in order that we may transact the public business, which it is imperatively necessary we should get through with; that is, the appropriation bills. But the gentleman now gives way for a motion to postpone, which I think I have a right to complain of.

Mr. FERRISS. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. FERRISS. My point of order is, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURNE] has not a right, upon the motion to reconsider, to discuss every question that has been, is now, or may be before the House for the purpose of consuming time. He should be required to discuss the question before the House if there is anything he can discuss.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the latter remarks of the gentleman from Illinois were not out of order.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I hope gentlemen will keep cool, for I do not propose to put myself in antagonism to the House particularly. I wanted to state why I oppose this proposition to postpone. I think it is unfair to the business of the House which to a very small extent the House has placed in my charge. However, I will not proceed with the matter further now, but will move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has now commenced, and the first business is the call of committees for reports, commencing with the Committee on the Territories, which is entitled to another morning hour. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHLEY] is entitled to the floor.

SUITS IN THE REBEL STATES.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHLEY] to yield to me, that I may ask the House to take from the Speaker's table a bill which has already been passed by the House, and to which the Senate has proposed an amendment. The bill, as amended, is less comprehensive than the bill as passed in this House by a large majority. But the parties interested are willing to take the bill with the amendment. I therefore desire that the House shall consider and concur in the amendment of the Senate that the bill may become a law.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I will yield for the purpose indicated, if the bill should not consume too much time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. THOMAS] asks consent that the House take from the Speaker's table for action at the present time the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1261) amendatory of an act entitled "An act relating to habeas corpus, and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases." The amendment will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That the provisions of an act entitled "An act relating to habeas corpus and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases," approved March 3, 1863, so far as the same relate to the removal of causes from the State to the Federal courts, be, and the same is hereby, declared to extend to any suit or action at law or prosecution, civil or criminal, which has been or shall be commenced in any State court against the owner or owners of any ship or vessel, or of any railway, or of any line of transportation, firm, or corporation engaged in business as common carriers of goods, wares, or merchandise, for any loss or damage which may have happened to any goods, wares, or merchandise whatever, which shall have been delivered to any such owner or owners of any ship or vessel, or any railway, or of any line of transportation, firm, or corporation engaged in business as common carriers, where such loss or damage shall have been occasioned by the acts of those engaged in hostility to the Government of the United States during the late rebellion, or where such loss or damage shall have been occasioned by any of the forces of the United States, or by any officer in command of such forces: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to affect any contract of insurance for war risks which may have been made with reference to any goods, wares, or merchandise which shall have been so destroyed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this amendment at the present time?

Mr. BECK. I object.

BOUNDARIES OF NEVADA, MINNESOTA, ETC.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, reported back from the Committee on the Territories a bill (H. R. No. 1625) concerning the boundaries of the States of Nevada, Minnesota, and Nebraska, and the Territories of Colorado, Montana, and Wyoming.

The bill, which was read, provides in the first section that there be added to the State of Nevada all that extent of territory lying within the following boundaries, to-wit: commencing at a point formed by the intersection of the one hundred and fourteenth degree of longitude west from Greenwich with the Colorado river; thence up the channel of said river to its intersection with the one hundred and thirteenth degree of longitude west from Greenwich; thence north along said degree of longitude to its intersection with the forty-first degree of north latitude; thence east on said degree to a point in Great Salt Lake midway between Antelope Island and the eastern shore of said lake; thence northwesterly on a line through said lake midway between Antelope and Fremont Islands and the eastern shore of said lake to Bear River bay; thence in a northerly direction to the mouth of Bear river; thence up the channel of said Bear river to the mouth of the Malada river; thence up the channel of said river to its intersection with the forty-second degree of north latitude; thence west along said forty-second degree of north latitude to the eastern line of the State of Nevada. This transfer is not to take effect until the Legislature of the State of Nevada accepts the same.

The second section provides that there be added to, and made a part of, the State of Minnesota all that extent of territory lying within the following boundaries, to-wit: commencing at a point formed by the intersection of the western boundary of the State of Minnesota with the forty-fourth degree of north latitude; thence west along said forty-fourth degree to its intersection with the ninety-seventh degree of longitude west from Greenwich; thence north along said ninety-seventh degree to its intersection with the forty-fourth degree and fifteen minutes north latitude; thence west along said line of forty-four degrees and fifteen minutes north latitude to its intersection with the ninety-eighth degree of longitude west from Greenwich; thence north along said ninety-eighth degree to its intersection with the forty-fourth degree and thirty minutes of north latitude; thence west along said forty-fourth degree to its intersection with the ninety-ninth degree of longitude west from Greenwich; thence north along said ninety-ninth degree to its intersection with the forty-fifth degree of north latitude; thence west along said forty-fifth degree to its intersection with the Missouri river; thence up the channel of said Missouri river to its intersection with the one hundred and second degree of longitude west from Greenwich; thence north along said one hundred and second degree to its intersection with the northern boundary of the United States; thence east along said northern boundary to the western boundary of the State of Minnesota. This transfer is not to take effect until the Legislature of the State of Minnesota accepts the same.

The third section enacts that there be added to and made a part of the State of Nebraska all that extent of territory lying within the following boundaries, to-wit: commencing at a point formed by the intersection of the forty-third degree of north latitude with the one hundred and second degree of longitude west from Greenwich; thence north along said one hundred and second degree to its intersection with the forty-fifth degree of north latitude; thence east along said forty-fifth degree to the ninety-ninth degree of longitude west from Greenwich; thence south along said ninety-ninth degree to its intersection with the forty-fourth degree and thirty minutes north latitude; thence east along said forty-fourth degree and thirty minutes to its intersection with the ninety-eighth degree of longitude west from Greenwich; thence south along said ninety-eighth degree to its intersection with the forty-fourth degree and fifteen minutes north latitude; thence east along said forty-fourth degree and fifteen minutes to its intersection with the ninety-seventh degree of longitude west from Greenwich; thence south along said ninety-seventh degree to its intersection with the forty-fourth degree of north latitude; thence east along said forty-fourth degree to the western boundary of the State of Minnesota; thence south along said western boundary to the southwestern boundary of the State of Minnesota; thence due west to the Big Sioux river; thence down the channel of the Big Sioux river to its intersection with the channel of the Missouri river. This transfer is not to take effect except upon the condition that the Legislature of the State of Nebraska accepts the same and consents to the transfer to the Territory of Wyoming of all the territory of that State lying west of the one hundred and second degree of longitude west from Greenwich.

The fourth section provides that there be added to and made a part of the Territory of Montana all that extent of territory lying within the following boundaries, to wit: commencing at a point formed by the intersection of the one hundred and eleventh degree of longitude west from Greenwich with the summit of the Rocky mountains; thence in an easterly direction along the summit of said mountains to its intersection with the one hundred and tenth degree and thirty minutes of longitude west from Greenwich; thence due east to the one hundred and tenth degree of longitude west from Greenwich; thence north along said one hundred and tenth degree of longitude to its intersection with the forty-fifth degree of north latitude; thence east along said forty-fifth degree to its intersection with the channel of the Missouri river; thence up the channel of said river to its intersection with the one hundred and second degree of longitude west from Greenwich; thence north along said one hundred and second degree to its intersection with the northern boundary of the United States; thence west along said northern boundary line to its intersection with the one hundred and fourth degree of longitude west from Greenwich.

The fifth section enacts that there be added to and made a part of the Territory of Colorado all that extent of country lying within the following boundary, to wit: commencing at a point formed by the intersection of the one hundred and ninth degree of longitude west from Greenwich with the thirty-seventh degree of north latitude, being the southwestern boundary of the Territory of Colorado; thence west along said thirty-seventh degree of north latitude to its intersection with the channel of the Colorado river; thence up the channel of said river to its intersection with the one hundred and twelfth degree of longitude west from Greenwich; thence north along said one hundred and twelfth degree to its intersection with the thirty-ninth degree of north latitude; thence east on said degree to its intersection with the one hundred and eleventh degree of longitude west from Greenwich; thence north along said one hundred and eleventh degree to its intersection with the forty-first degree north latitude; thence east along said forty-first degree of north latitude to its intersection with the one hundred and ninth degree of longitude, being the present northwestern boundary of Colorado.

The sixth section provides that there be added to and made a part of the Territory of Wyoming all that extent of territory lying within the following boundaries, to wit: commencing at a point formed by the intersection of the one hundred and eleventh degree of longitude west from Greenwich with the forty-first degree of north latitude; thence west along said forty-first degree of north latitude to a point in Great Salt lake; midway between Antelope island and the eastern shore of said lake; thence in a north-westerly direction on a line midway between Antelope and Fremont islands and the eastern shore of said lake to Bear River bay; thence northeasterly to the mouth of Bear river; thence up the channel of said river to the mouth of Malada river; thence up the channel of said Malada river to its intersection with the one hundred and twelfth degree thirty minutes longitude west from Greenwich; thence north along said one hundred and twelfth degree and thirty minutes to its intersection with the channel of Snake river; thence up the channel of said Snake river to its intersection with the one hundred and twelfth degree of longitude west from Greenwich; thence north along said one hundred and twelfth degree to its intersection with the crest of the Rocky mountains; thence in an easterly direction along the summit of said mountains to the one hundred and tenth degree and thirty minutes longitude west from Greenwich; thence due east to the one hundred and tenth degree of longitude west from Greenwich; thence north along said one hundred and tenth degree to its intersection with the forty-fifth degree of north latitude; thence east along said forty-fifth degree of north latitude to its intersection with the one hundred and second degree of longitude west from Greenwich; thence south along said one hundred and second degree to its intersection with the forty-first degree of north latitude; thence west along said forty-first degree of north latitude to the place of beginning. It is provided that all that territory included within this boundary which now forms part of the State of Nebraska shall not form part of the Territory of Wyoming until the Legislature of the State of Nebraska consents thereto.

The seventh section provides that the river which flows through the Territories of Idaho and Washington into the Columbia river, called Snake river, shall hereafter be known and designated as Oregon river; and that the river which flows through that part of Utah hereby added to the Territory of Colorado, called Green river, shall hereafter be known and designated as Colorado river.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that this bill proposes no increase of the expenditures of the Government, but paves the way for the decrease of those expenditures in the Territories. It creates no new offices. The Senators and Representatives from the States immediately interested in this change of boundary are in favor of the bill. The Delegate from the Territory of Wyoming is in favor of it.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I should like to know who the Delegate from the Territory of Wyoming is. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I mean the gentleman claiming a seat as Delegate, and whose credentials were presented and referred the other day. The bill is not to take effect, so far as the change of boundary is concerned, except upon acceptance of the territory transferred by the States of Nevada, Minnesota, and Nebraska respectively.

In my judgment this bill will make the best disposition which can be made of the Mormon question, by reducing the territorial area of that prospective State, thus giving the Mormon community notice that no State government will ever be organized there by our consent; and that so soon as the population in the adjacent organized States and Territories shall be able to take care of this population, which, voting as a unit, has persistently for fifteen years defied the Government of the United States and for eight years flagrantly disobeyed its laws, the control of affairs there shall be given to the "Gentile" population. This was the motive which prompted the committee in reporting the bill, so that in the great central or mountain States of this country there should be territorial area enough when they come to organize State governments to have a population enough at least for one Representative, and that States might not be multiplied out of Territories of the size of Utah with small populations, but that the area might be so extended that at the beginning they shall have population enough for one member and a prospective population for more. I desire to put the bill on its passage.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman to hear me a moment. I have had but a few minutes to look at this bill. From the reading of it, and from the statement of the gentleman, it seems to be a bill to dismember Utah Territory. I merely desire to suggest that as the Delegate from that Territory is not here, being detained by sickness, it seems to me it would be but fair to postpone it until he can be heard. The people who sent him here have a great deal of interest in this measure, and I suggest that it be postponed so that it can be reached at a given time hereafter.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. In reply to the gentleman's suggestion, I will say that I see no necessity for postponing the bill. It does not touch the settled portions of Utah, but it adds to the Territory of Colorado all that part of Utah unsurveyed and unoccupied by the Mormons, and thus extends the jurisdiction of Colorado over that part. It excludes the Mormons socially, of course, from that part, but they can move where they please. It concentrates whatever of the Mormon element governs the Territory of Utah within a limited jurisdiction, so that the force which they have played there for many years of electing a Governor and Legislature and enacting State laws may be annulled by the notice which this bill gives them that they shall not have territorial area enough left to make a State. I drew the bill originally to blot out the Territory, but the committee thought it was best to let that part of it remain where the great body of the Mormons were until such time as the population of the adjacent Territories and State would be able to take care of them, and not be overborne by the consolidated vote of that oligarchy.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I do not think the gentleman has met my point. He acknowledges, in the first place, that this bill takes away a large portion of the Territory of Utah. That Territory is represented here. Now, I think it but fair and just to that Delegate, in a matter which so deeply affects his constituents, that he should be here when the bill is acted upon. He is detained by sickness; and I appeal to my friend if he were in the same situation whether he would not consider it rather sharp practice to dispose of the bill in his absence.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. My committee will not be called again this session, so that unless this is passed now there is no hope of getting it through the Senate.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I do not ask to have the bill placed in any worse position than it is now. That would be unreasonable. But we can postpone it so that it will not be placed in a worse position.

Mr. CULLOM. When will the Delegate from Utah be here?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I understand he has started from home; and the reason why he is not here is he is detained by sickness.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. If the House will agree to postpone the bill one week from today immediately after the reading of the Journal I will consent to it.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts. I object.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Then say after the morning hour.

Mr. BROOKS. I think we should allow a longer time, so that the people of Utah can hear what is to be done. Say two weeks.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Very well; I have no objection, if the bill shall then be taken up and disposed of.

The SPEAKER. If the order is made by unanimous consent the bill will be the special order at that time, and will be taken up and disposed of. Is there objection to postponing the bill to this day two weeks immediately after the morning hour? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RAILROAD IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, from the Committee on the Territories, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 1041) granting the right of way to the Walla-Walla and Columbia River Railroad Company, and for other purposes, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute therefor.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

That the right of way through the public lands be, and the same is hereby, granted to the Walla-Walla and Columbia River Railroad Company, a corporation existing under the laws of the Territory of Washington and duly incorporated, for the purpose of constructing a railroad from said town of Walla-Walla to some eligible point on the navigable waters of said Columbia river in said Territory; said right of way hereby granted to said railroad is to the extent of one hundred feet in width on each side of said road where it may pass over the public lands; also all necessary ground, not to exceed five acres at each station, for station buildings, work-shops, depots, machine-shops, switches, side tracks, turn-tables, and water stations.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the county commissioners of the county of Walla-Walla, in the Territory of Washington, be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to aid in the construction of the Walla-Walla and Columbia River railroad, by subscribing to the capital stock of said Walla-Walla and Columbia River Railroad Company in the name and on behalf of said county of Walla-Walla, and by issuing bonds of said county, payable at such time as said commissioners shall think proper, and bearing interest of not more than eight percent per annum in payment for said stock so by them taken in said railroad company, or by issuing bonds bearing interest as aforesaid, as a loan to said company, to be used in the construction of said road, or to aid said company in the construction of said road by the credit of said county in any other manner the said commissioners may think proper: Provided, That the said subscription, loan, or other aid so given by said commissioners to said company shall in no case exceed the sum of $300,000: And provided further, That the said subscription, loan, or other aid shall have been submitted to the people of said county and been voted for by three fourths of the legal votes cast at an election held for that purpose: And provided further, That if said vote be taken at a special election the notices shall be the same as provided by the laws of said Territory for general elections.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the county commissioners of the county of Walla-Walla, in the Territory of Washington, be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to hold a special election at such times as they may designate, after twenty days' public notice, which said election shall be governed by the general laws of said Territory upon the subject of elections, at which election the aid to be given by said county to said Walla-Walla and Columbia River Railroad Company, either by subscriptions to stock or otherwise, shall be submitted to and be voted upon by the legal voters of said county in such manner as said commissioners may designate.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. This bill grants to the Walla-Walla and Columbia River Railroad Company, an organization created by the laws of Washington Territory, the right of way through any of the public lands from Walla-Walla to the Columbia river, a distance of thirty miles, and at each of their stations or depots they are entitled to take five acres of the public lands. Otherwise there are no public lands and there is no occupancy of the public lands granted.

The county commissioners of Walla-Walla county are authorized to subscribe $300,000 to the stock of this company on a vote of three fourths of all the voters, at an election of which the same notice is to be given as is given at a general election in the Territory. There is no grant of money from the Government involved in the bill. The Government has nothing to lose. I believe the bill is sufficiently guarded to secure the rights of the people there in that it requires three fourths of all the voters to authorize the subscription.

Mr. PRICE. I wish to know if the five acres for depot grounds includes the two hundred feet in width or is exclusive of it. The bill is not sufficiently definite on that point.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. They are to have one hundred feet on each side of the road and five acres in addition.

Mr. PRICE. The bill does not say so.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. The land only costs $1 25 an acre. I have traveled over the ground, and I would not care to take some of it at that price.

Mr. PRICE. The bill does not exempt mineral lands from occupancy by the company. It has been the universal custom, in granting lands and the right of way through the public lands in the Territories of the United States, to exempt all mineral lands.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Well, there are no mineral lands within a good many miles of this proposed road from Walla-Walla to the Columbia river.

Mr. PRICE. Is that certain?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. It is very certain. The only point in the bill is whether the House is willing to authorize the commissioners of Walla-Walla county, on a vote of three fourths of its electors, to subscribe to a road to let them out to the navigable waters of the Columbia.

Mr. WELKER. I desire to ask my colleague why it is necessary that we should pass an act of Congress to authorize a subscription to the capital stock of this road on behalf of this county in Washington Territory? Has not the territorial Legislature power to confer this right upon the county?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I am glad to answer the gentleman that they have not. By an act which I drew myself no territorial Legislature has authority to grant any special privileges whatever. In addition to this, no territorial Legislature can dispose of or grant the right of way over the public lands of the United States.

Mr. JULIAN. How much land does this bill grant?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. One hundred feet on each side of the road, and five acres at each depot where there are public lands. I demand the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to lay the bill on the table; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was put; and the House refused to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. My colleague [Mr. DELANO] desires to offer an amendment, and I will withdraw the previous question to hear it read.

Mr. DELANO. I offer the following as a proviso to the last section of the substitute:

Provided, That this grant is made upon the express condition that any efforts by said company hereafter to obtain any land grant, subsidy, or pecuniary aid from the United States Government shall work a forfeiture of the grant.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I will accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has no right to accept it, as the bill is a report from a committee.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Well, I hope the House will adopt it. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The amendment to the substitute proposed by Mr. DELANO was agreed to.

The substitute reported by the Committee on the Territories was then adopted.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not yet engrossed, and it therefore goes to the Speaker's table.

Subsequently Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

TERRITORIAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, from the Committee on the Territories, reported back, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, the bill (H. R. No. 1624) to preserve the purity of elections in the several organized Territories of the United States.

The question was upon agreeing to the substitute.

The substitute was read. The first section provides that hereafter at all elections in the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Colorado, Dakota, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, Washington, and Alaska for territorial and county officers and for Delegates to Congress the elections shall be conducted as provided in this act. The Governor of each Territory shall appoint and commission, at least one hundred and twenty days prior to each general election, four responsible and competent citizens of each county in the Territory, who shall be designated a board of canvassers for the county in which they reside, and said board shall act until their successors are appointed and qualified.

The second section provides that the Governor, in appointing such board of county canvassers, shall select two members of each from citizens who are recognized members of the political party having a majority in said county at the last general election preceding their appointment, and the remaining two members of the board shall be appointed from members of the minority party in such county; or if there be two or more minority parties, with distinct political organizations, as contradistinguished from party factions, then from each of the two minority parties having the largest number of votes in said county at the last general election the Governor shall select one member of the board; it being the intent and meaning of this act to secure such a representation from each party on every board of county canvassers as will guaranty protection against fraudulent voting and fraudulent election returns.

The third section provides that the board of county canvassers thus appointed and commissioned shall, within thirty days after their appointment, signify their acceptance of the trust by notifying the Governor and by taking an oath before any officer duly authorized to administer oaths faithfully to perform the duties of the office to which they have been appointed; whereupon they shall organize by electing one of their number president and one of their number secretary; and all papers officially issued by said board of county canvassers shall be signed by the president and countersigned by the secretary; provided that no official paper shall be issued by any board of county canvassers except by the direction of three members of such board; and provided further that a majority of such board shall be necessary to constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

The fourth section provides that if any member or all the members of any board of county canvassers appointed by the Governor, in pursuance of this act, shall neglect or refuse to accept such appointment within the time and as hereinbefore prescribed the Governor shall, by public proclamation, notify the electors of said county of that fact, which notice shall be published in any newspaper he may select in said county, if there be one published therein, and if not, then in some newspaper published at the capital of the Territory. The county committee representing the party of which such person or persons are members who decline to serve shall, on the publication of said proclamation, recommend to the Governor such person or persons as they may desire appointed to fill the vacancy on said board, which persons so recommended the Governor shall appoint; and if the county committee thus notified fail or neglect within twenty days after the publication of said notice to recommend such persons as will serve the Governor shall appoint from the qualified electors of any party in said county the requisite number of persons to fill all vacancies in such board of county canvassers.

The fifth section provides that after the organization of the board of county canvassers for each county, as hereinbefore prescribed, they shall appoint and commission, at least sixty days before each general election, four well-known and competent citizens to act as an election board for each township, ward, or voting precinct in such county. Two members of every such board shall be selected from the party which at the last general election in the Territory had the largest vote in such township, ward, or voting precinct; the two remaining members of the board shall be selected from members of the minority party; or if there be two or more minority parties in such township, ward, or voting precinct with distinct county organizations, then from each of the two minority parties having the largest number of votes at the last general election the board of county canvassers shall select and appoint one member of the election board for every such township, ward, or voting precinct; it being the intent and purpose of this act to have such a representation of parties on each election board for the several townships, wards, or voting precincts as will secure protection against fraud, illegal voting, and fraudulent election returns.

The sixth section provides that the persons thus appointed and commissioned members of election boards for any township, ward, or voting precinct shall signify to the board of county canvassers their acceptance of such appointment by taking such oath as may be prescribed by the Governor, and filing a copy of the same with the board of county canvassers within fifteen days after their appointment. In case any person thus appointed a member of an election board shall neglect or refuse to qualify and report to the board of county canvassers within fifteen days, as hereinbefore prescribed, then said board of county canvassers shall appoint from the same political party another person to fill such vacancy; provided that if there are no other members of the same party in such township, ward, or voting precinct, or no other members who will serve on such board, said county board may appoint any person they may elect to fill such vacancy. The board of county canvassers shall officially publish, at least ten days before every election, the names of the persons who have been appointed and qualified as members of election boards for each township, ward, or voting precinct in the county, and publish the same in each of the leading party newspapers of the county, if there are two such papers, and if not, then in any newspaper published in the county. Each of said election boards for the several townships, wards, or voting precincts shall act until their successors are appointed and qualified.

The seventh section provides that if any member or all the members of any election board for any township, ward, or voting precinct, appointed by the board of county canvassers as authorized by this act, shall neglect or refuse to accept such appointment within the time and as herein prescribed, the board of county canvassers for said county shall by publication in a newspaper of the county, if there be one, notify the electors of such township, ward, or voting precinct at least twenty days before the election of such vacancy in their election board; and if neither the proper committee nor any member of the party residing in such township, ward, or voting precinct to whom such member of the election board belongs shall within ten days after the publication of the notice herein required recommend in writing any person for the board of county canvassers to appoint, the said board shall then appoint from the qualified electors of any party residing in such township, ward, or voting precinct the requisite number of persons from any party to fill all vacancies.

The eighth section provides that if on the day of the election any one or all the members of an election board thus appointed for any township, ward, or voting precinct for any county shall fail or refuse to meet and organize and proceed with the election as prescribed in this act, on or before eight o'clock a. m., then the qualified electors present at the time and place designated for opening the polls and holding the election in each township, ward, or voting precinct shall select competent persons to fill such vacancy in the election board, taking care that the board when organized shall be composed of two members to represent the party having a majority in the township, ward, or voting precinct at the last general election, and two members to represent the minority party or parties.

The ninth section provides that a failure on the part of the board of county canvassers, or on the part of any election board, or on the part of the electors in any township, ward, or voting precinct to comply with the provisions of this act, either as to the organization of an election board or as to the manner of conducting any election which such board are appointed to hold, shall vitiate the election in such township, ward, or voting precinct; and if two or more responsible citizens of such township, ward, or voting precinct shall, within ten days after said election, appear before the board of county canvassers for their county and make oath that the provisions of this act for the appointment of their election board were disregarded and violated, or that the election was otherwise improperly and unlawfully conducted; either by the rejection of legal votes or by the admission of illegal votes, or by making false returns, or for any violation of law, specifying particularly the provisions of this act or the laws of the Territory which have been violated, such board of county canvassers shall furnish at least two members of such election board with a copy of the charges and specifications thus made, and notify them and the other members of the election board to appear before the board of county canvassers within ten days after such charges are filed and answer on oath the charges and specifications thus made; and the board of county canvassers may require other testimony in addition to the answer of any one or all the members of such election board; and in case of the neglect or refusal of such election board, or some one or more of its members, to appear and answer said charges on oath, and by the testimony of other witnesses if required, to the satisfaction of the board of county canvassers, the entire vote from such election precinct, ward, or township shall not be counted by the board of county canvassers.

The tenth section provides that at each place of voting in the several counties the polls shall be opened at six o'clock a. m., or as soon thereafter as the election board can be convened and organized, as provided in section eight of this act, and the polls shall be closed by the board promptly at six o'clock p. m. Immediately after each election board is organized they shall designate two of their number to keep each a separate poll-book, in which shall be recorded the name of every person voting. Each of said poll-books shall be signed and certified by each member of the election board, and said poll-books shall contain a statement of the whole number of votes cast and the number given for each person for whom votes were cast. One of said poll-books shall be preserved by the election board until after the next general territorial election, and the other shall be transmitted within ten days, either by mail or by messenger, as safety and celerity may require, to the board of county canvassers at the county seat; provided that the said board shall remain together and in possession of the ballot-boxes and poll-books until said ballots are counted and the proper certificate given; and said certificate shall be made within twenty-four hours after the election is closed. All questions arising before any election board thus appointed touching the qualifications of an elector and all questions relating to the conduct of the election shall be decided by a majority of such board when all the members are present, or by the affirmative vote of three members of the board.

The eleventh section provides that if after the organization of such election board on the day of any election one or more members, either from sickness or from any cause, should be unable or refuse to act, the remaining members of the board shall fill such vacancy by appointing duly qualified electors, taking care to preserve, as provided in this act, the political equilibrium of such board. Before the person thus appointed enters upon his duties as member of such election board he shall take the oath of office prescribed by law.

The twelfth section provides that any person who shall accept an appointment and qualify as member of an election board for any township board or voting precinct, and shall as such member of any election board willfully disregard the provisions of this act or the territorial election laws, or shall as a member of the board do any official act with a view to deprive any elector of his legal right to vote, or for the purpose of defeating in such election precinct the fairly expressed will of the electors at the ballot-box, either by refusing to sign and certify the poll-books or by doing any act designed to defeat the legally expressed will of the people at said election, every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon trial and conviction before any court of competent jurisdiction in such Territory shall pay a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, or be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than five years, at the discretion of the court.

The thirteenth section provides that the board of county canvassers for each county shall, within thirty days after every election, open all the poll-books returned to them, and canvass the same and declare the result. They shall transmit to the Governor a certified statement of the whole number of votes cast in each township, ward, or voting precinct of the county, and the number of votes cast in each for the several persons voted for at the said election.

The fourteenth section provides that any person who shall accept an appointment from the Governor, and qualify as a member of any board of county canvassers, and shall disregard the provisions of this act or the election laws of such Territory, or shall refuse to sign and certify the result of such election to the Governor, or shall as a member of any board of county canvassers do any official act with a view to deprive any person duly elected of his legal right to such office, or for the purpose of defeating the lawfully expressed will of the electors of the county, or of any township, ward, or voting precinct, every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on trial and conviction before any court of competent jurisdiction shall pay a fine of not less than $5,000 nor more than $20,000, or be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than five nor more than ten years, at the discretion of the court.

The fifteenth section provides that the Legislatures of the Territories named in this act shall provide by law the tribunal before which and the manner in which all contested elections, either for territorial, county, township, or municipal officers shall be heard and determined.

The sixteenth section provides that the Legislative Assemblies named in this bill shall, at their first session after the passage of this act, fix by law the compensation and provide for paying the members of the board of county canvassers for their services; and they shall also fix the compensation and provide for paying the members of election boards for the township, ward, or voting precincts in each county.

The seventeenth section provides that the Legislatures of the Territories hereinbefore named shall be authorized and empowered to enforce the provisions of this act by additional and appropriate legislation.

The eighteenth section provides that all acts and parts of acts, either of Congress or any of the Territorial Legislatures herein named, inconsistent with the provisions of this act, shall be, and are hereby, repealed.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I desire to say that this substitute has the unanimous concurrence of the Committee on the Territories.

Mr. MULLINS. Will the gentleman yield to me for an amendment?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I will hear the amendment.

Mr. MULLINS. The seventh section contains a provision requiring the publication in the newspapers of the county of the persons who have been appointed upon the election boards. I propose to amend by inserting at the proper place the words "and if not, then by writing, at three of the most public places in the county."

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I will allow the amendment suggested by my colleague on the Committee on the Territories [Mr. MULLINS] to be offered.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be regarded as pending.

Mr. BROOKS. It is impossible for the House to understand, from its reading by the Clerk, a long bill like this. It seems to me it ought to be sanctioned by the Committee of Elections. I would suggest that before we are called upon to pass a bill regulating elections in all the Territories of the United States it should go before the Committee of Elections. I hope the gentleman will give way to a motion to that effect.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I cannot yield for any such purpose. This subject has had the earnest consideration of the Committee on the Territories for two or three years past. It has come before them on petition after petition and memorial after memorial, from the people resident in the Territories, asking Congress for a registry law. This is the best form of a registry law which the committee have been able to devise. It does not require any man to be registered, but it requires that each board of county canvassers shall be composed of two members of each political party in the county, or if there be two or more minority parties that each minority party shall have one member of the board; and that no act of the board shall be valid unless it has the affirmative vote of three members of the board. And in like manner these boards of county canvassers are to appoint the judges of election in each township, ward, or voting precinct. They are to be constituted in like manner as the county boards; to be made up from the parties in each ward, township, and election precinct; two members from the party having the majority at the last general election, and the other two members to be taken from the minority parties. Therefore no vote can be admitted and no certificate of a poll can be made unless members of two of the political parties certify to its correctness.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and this bill goes over to the morning hour of the next public bill day.

PILOTS, ETC., OF WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Territories be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 1591, repealing an act passed by the Legislature of Washington Territory relating to pilots and pilot regulations, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

No objection was made.

REGULATION OF COMMERCE.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I have been directed by the Committee on the Territories to report back House bill No. 1597, to facilitate commercial intercourse between the several States and Territories of the United States and foreign countries, and to ask that it may be assigned for consideration for two hours on next Saturday three weeks.

The SPEAKER. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object.

ELECTION CONTEST—SWITZLER VS. ANDERSON.

Mr. COOK, from the Committee of Elections, made a report in the contested-election case of Switzler vs. Anderson, with the following resolutions:

Resolved, That George W. Anderson is not entitled to a seat in this House as a Representative in the Fortieth Congress from the ninth congressional district of Missouri.

Resolved, That William F. Switzler is entitled to a seat in this House as a Representative from the ninth congressional district of Missouri.

The report was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COOK. I give notice that I will call up this report to-morrow.

NIAGARA SHIP-CANAL.

The SPEAKER. The House now resumes the consideration of House bill No. 1202, to provide for the construction of a ship-canal around the Falls of Niagara; upon which the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN HORN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. Mr. Speaker, in opening the debate upon this bill I feel the importance of the legislation proposed and the responsibility connected with its advocacy and the demand it makes upon the Treasury. I sympathize to some extent, at least, with the views of my distinguished friend from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN,] lately expressed in the very able speech upon economy and retrenchment which he made in this House, and I will coöperate with him in endeavoring to secure the results of proper legislation in this direction, but I do not, for a moment, suppose that he intended to be understood as being opposed to works of great national importance and necessity and appropriations to secure their construction. Certainly this did not enter into his calculation. No State in the Union is so deeply interested in this work as the State of Illinois, and no State has demanded its construction as loudly as has that State, and with a greater reason, or had more important public interests to benefit, protect, and advance. Discrimination should always be used by wise statesmanship in the advocacy and support of public measures, and I open this debate with the earnest hope that the House may consider this measure and the reasons that may be presented why it should become a law in the light of national interest, necessity, and benefit, and be governed by no other or less important considerations.

Very much may be said upon this measure, and in its favor. While it differs from all the bills upon this question which have preceded it, and been passed by this branch of Congress, the general question of a ship-canal to connect Lakes Erie and Ontario is doubtless familiar to all the members of this House, as it is also to all sections of the country. Indeed, it is no new question. Upon the files of this House are papers, petitions, resolutions of boards of trade from nearly all the northern, middle, western, and eastern States, as well as from the Legislatures of many of the States, asking Congress to aid in the construction of this great national work. They run back over many years, showing the deep interest that has for a long time pervaded various sections of the country in behalf of this important enterprise. In fact there is no question before the national Legislature in which the business communities of the entire West and their boards of trade take so deep an interest and in the solution of which they have so great anxiety as in relation to this question.

As early as 1808, in pursuance of a resolution of the Senate, the Secretary of the Treasury submitted to that body an able and elaborate report on the subject of roads and canals, in which, among many others of general interest that might require the aid of the Government, was a canal around the falls of Niagara. It was represented in that report as both practicable and of primary importance to the interests and domestic policy of the Union. If important and necessary at that early day, how much more so now, when the reasons for such an opinion have so greatly increased in number and importance. In 1835 the President of the United States ordered a survey to be made upon an enlarged scale, and selected for the work Captain Williams, one of the most skillful and eminent engineers that ever belonged to the service. His report is full of instruction, and demonstrated completely, as all others have, the entire feasibility of the work.

When this subject was up in the Thirty-seventh Congress I had the honor to submit a report upon it, stating at length its merits and showing the necessity of the work, and again in the last Congress expressed my views quite at length upon the general subject. In the last Congress the bill providing for the construction of this work after due consideration passed this House and went to the Senate. On account of the immense pressure of public business, which could not be set aside, and a difference of opinion among the friends of the canal in that body as to the mode of constructing the work, whether by the Government as a Government work entirely, or by a corporation aided by the Government, and partly because there was great doubt as to the probable cost of the work, the bill was not passed, but a joint resolution was passed, directing the Secretary of War to make surveys for a canal, of such routes as might be deemed advisable, and report to this Congress the facts ascertained. Under that report we are now acting. Colonel Blunt, a distinguished engineer of the War Department, has caused such surveys to be made, showing the cost of a canal with ample dimensions on three different and distinct routes, one of which terminates at three different points, making five routes as designated in his report, which is upon file for examination by all the members of the House.

The bill we have proposed, and which is now under consideration, provides that this work shall be constructed by the Government and be owned by it and under its control. Paid for out of a common treasury, it shall be free to all sections and all business, excepting so far as it may be necessary to impose tolls to cover repairs, expenses of management, and perhaps the interest of the money necessary for its construction. All this, however, will be at all times subject to the regulations Congress may prescribe. The bill follows the dimensions for the canal adopted by the engineer department in its recent estimates referred to, and which are believed to be ample to accommodate the largest shipping that now uses or that may hereafter desire to use the great inland waters which this work is designed to connect. I will briefly explain to the House the provisions of the bill. It is to be one hundred and twenty-five feet in width, in earth-cutting at water surface, and ninety feet at the bottom, and in rock-cutting with vertical sides it is to be one hundred feet. The lock chambers are to be two hundred and seventy-five feet in length and forty-six feet in width, and there is to be fourteen feet of water in depth.

The bill provides all the usual guards and protection to private rights, and secures ample means for compensation to owners of property taken for public uses in the construction of the canal. The President is authorized to enter upon and take all property necessary to carry out the purposes of the legislation proposed, to acquire title to said property by agreement, purchase, or voluntary cession upon reasonable and just terms if he can, and if unable so to do to apply to the courts for the appointment of commissioners to fix the compensation to be paid for any and all property taken for such public purposes and use. It is also provided that either party can appeal within a reasonable and fixed time from any such appraisal, and demand and have the judgment of a jury of twelve men upon the damages sustained and the compensation to be rendered. It is designed that every possible protection shall be given to the private citizen and owner of property taken, as well as to the rights of the Government.

The work is to be entered upon within twelve months after this act takes effect, and it is to be prosecuted with energy and diligence to as speedy a conclusion as possible compatible with the public interests. A sufficient number of experienced officers of the engineer and quartermaster's departments are to be detailed to superintend and direct said work, under such orders and rules as the Secretary of War shall prescribe. It is also provided that any portion of the Army not otherwise employed may be assigned to duty in the construction of this canal, and all enlisted men shall receive the same extra duty pay which they receive by law or Army regulations for labor upon any military roads or fortifications. All payments are to be made through the pay department in the manner and upon the vouchers prescribed by law and the Army regulations for the quartermaster's department, and returns made to the Quartermaster General in the manner regulated by law for that department.

The bill further provides that the canal shall at all times during the season of navigation be kept open to the free use of the United States, and that until otherwise ordered by law all foreign vessels, lake crafts, and rafts shall pay the same tolls imposed on like vessels, lake crafts, and rafts by the Welland canal in Canada West in the year 1864. It is also provided in the bill for the regulation, management, and care of said canal after it shall have been constructed, and that proper surety be given for the faithful performance of all duties connected therewith, all to be under the direction of and subject to the approval of the War Department; and further, that said Department shall make all needful rules and regulations consistent with the laws of the United States concerning the navigation of said canal, and provide such fines for their violation as may be deemed necessary, all of which shall be subject to the approval of the President of the United States.

The bill further provides that the President shall cause to be made by skillful engineers all necessary preliminary surveys and examinations of the different routes proposed, and from them and those which have already been made and on file he shall proceed, by the aid of commissioners appointed by him for that purpose, to locate the route for the said canal, having a due regard to permanency of its construction and its greatest advantages for military, naval, and commercial purposes. To accomplish all this it is provided that $12,000,000 shall be appropriated, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, to be drawn and paid out as the work proceeds. I have every assurance that this amount will be amply sufficient to finish the work. The estimates for labor and material were made, to my knowledge, in many instances above what they can be obtained for even now, and we can reasonably hope that before this work could be entered upon, should this bill become a law, labor, and especially materials of all kinds, will be still lower than at the present time. As prosperity advances the condition of the country becomes more and more settled, and taxation consequently reduced, such works can be prosecuted with greater advantage to the Government and with a corresponding reduction in cost. It is confidently believed that the amount asked will not all of it be needed; but if it be required it will be an investment worthy of a great people and a wise Government, inasmuch as it will be another and final link in the great chain of communication that bounds our northern frontier, through which will pass the surplus production of so many millions of industrious and enterprising freemen living along those inland seas and upon the broad prairies and fields of an empire beyond boundless in its resources, and almost limitless in its extent.

The reasons for the adoption of this measure by Congress, and consequently for the construction of this great national work, are manifold and sufficient. It being a national work, demanded by every consideration of national honor and commercial advantage, it commends itself to us all with the weight of its vast importance. Why should we, with resources and energy unparalleled as a people, having vindicated our superiority in every possible way that a great and powerful people can, with all the facilities for constructing our own lines of communication upon our own soil, with every necessary advantage, too, over all our neighbors, why, I ask, should we continue to pay tribute to their power and resources, and encourage at the sacrifice of our own interests their enterprise and energy? Thus far a very large proportion of all the business done on the Welland canal has been American, and I may say that American enterprise and American labor and commerce have constructed and maintained thus far this Canadian canal; and in the certain prospect of such support being continued the Canadian Government is anticipating its enlargement to meet the increasing demands of our greatly extending commerce. Shall our neglect to do our duty, foster such a purpose, and tend to bring about such a result is the question for this House to settle, and it should be settled now.

The great lakes will be united in some way by water communication, and such communication will be used by our people engaged in commerce, if such use can be made advantageous to their commercial and business interests. The use of the Welland canal thus far, with its very limited capacity, is proof conclusive of the utility of such a work and of the advantages it does and will afford to the commerce of the great lakes. When we remember the hostility of our Canadian neighbors during our late deplorable civil war; their threatening attitude; their defiant words; their warlike preparations; their sympathy for our enemies; and their apparent, and I may say real, hatred of us, does it not suggest to us that to depend upon them for these commercial facilities and advantages is putting our trust in an uncertainty and hazarding, by our delay and inaction, our very best and highest commercial interests? If it be said that in case of a rupture between us we would take and appropriate to our own use their canal and its benefits, it is sufficient to say in reply, that while this would be our object in any event, whether we had a canal of our own or not, a wise people, with such constantly increasing commerce, cannot afford to wait for such a contingency, earnestly hoped never to arise, and in the mean time pour into their treasury from our own honest industry and enterprise an amount sufficient to construct a canal for ourselves far better and greatly more to our advantage than theirs. This argument is too simple and puerile to admit of serious consideration. Thus much we say in connection with the national aspect of this question: it is bound up in the national honor, and no longer should the work be delayed than to amply prepare for its rapid progress and successful completion.

Again, the importance of this great work can be seen by contemplating the military advantages to be derived from its construction. Concentration is a principle in strategy too well understood to be undervalued, and great efficiency is very often imparted to military force by it. In a time of war its advantages would be to give celerity to the movements of forces, munitions of war, shipping, and all the material of an army, and enable us to throw upon one lake or another, as the situation might require, all our resources and strength. In this aspect this work would be of very great advantage. The British and Canadian Governments understand the benefits to be derived from such internal communications and have acted wisely and provided them for their use, while our Government has been resting supinely for half a century under severe disabilities as to the defense of the lake frontier, imposed by the treaty of 1817, while also the British Government has been pursuing steadily and effectively a policy looking to the complete command of the lakes by a sufficient naval force, whenever she chooses to assert it, through the medium of her internal canals.

She has paid for them thus far over twenty million dollars, and is projecting others to complete her line of communication so as to command all our lake border. These works were constructed avowedly as military works, and during our late war she frequently boasted, in her press and otherwise, that she could pass gunboats from Montreal to Kingston in twenty-four hours and to Lake Erie in less than forty-eight hours, which was and is undoubtedly true. While by existing treaty these vessels of war cannot be kept on the lakes, the fact that they can be thus concentrated by the English Government at a given point on our border and suddenly thrown upon our undefended and extensive frontier should be a matter of great concern to us, and demands the utmost vigilance and prompt attention and action of our Government in providing facilities equally adequate to defend the vast interests of our commerce and give ample protection to the vast number of our people along the border, now defenseless and unprotected. Thus exposed there is a shore line of over three thousand miles, forming a navigable water boundary for eight of the most important States of the Union, with a population in 1860 of over nine millions. All along and upon their coast and accessible to attacks from the water are towns, villages, and cities teeming with a population of more than a million of our most enterprising, industrious, and wealthy citizens, engaged in agriculture, manufactures, and commerce, and still there is no complete connection between these lakes upon our side and under our control by which we can throw our strength and resources, in case of an emergency, upon one point or another, as might be necessary to give protection or repel invasion.

This one link alone is wanting to make our intercourse between all these lakes complete; and how inconsiderable the expense necessary to complete the connection, in view of the great importance of it to the Government and its absolute necessity to put our northern frontier in a condition of security, and to give such protection to our citizens and their property which it is our duty to render under all circumstances and at all times. It is the constitutional duty of the General Government "to provide for the general safety and welfare." On the upper lakes the commercial marine is almost exclusively American, and from this fact may be learned the vast interests that the Government is bound to protect and defend. Nothing crippled us so much during the last war with England as the want of this very communication between the lakes, while it was the most serious obstacle to our arms. In the event of another war with England the struggle, of necessity, must be along these lakes and rivers; and knowing this the English Government has wisely provided necessary facilities, by means of her inland canals, to give the most ample protection to her frontier, and at the same time be able to throw all her strength upon any point along our northern boundary, while we are and would be powerless to resist, or even protect ourselves or our property. Justice to our people doing business on our lakes and who dwell on our frontier demands that this condition of things should no longer exist. Nowhere on earth in any civilized Government are so many and so vast public and private interests permitted to remain thus exposed to destruction, and completely at the mercy of an unfriendly Power.

This measure is urged, then, as one of urgent military necessity. It cannot be neglected longer without great fault, and its importance in a time of war cannot be well overestimated. To guard every point on our extended frontier by fortifications would be impossible; besides, it would swell the military expenses of the Government to an inconceivable amount and require a vastly greater number of men than should be used for such a result. Our system of warfare has undergone of late a great change. While fortifications will not be entirely abandoned the system of gun-boat fighting will be substituted as a means of protection and defense to a very great extent. To make this efficient celerity of movement is required, and means of transmission and every facility for rapid communication must be afforded. In the great aggregate the defense is more perfect and certain and the expense incident thereto far less and more definite. Construct this great work, and in six months of war with England and Canada it would save in property on the lakes and along the border fourfold the amount of its cost, besides afford facilities for the protection of the homes and lives of a vast number of our people.

I know it is said, again, that in case of a war we would aim to and certainly possess ourselves of the Canadian border, and thus save ourselves the necessity of frontier protection. With or without a canal this ought to be our purpose, I admit, and we should gain all we possibly could by achieving this end as far as possible; but I remark again, in reply, that we are trusting to an uncertainty; and to save the expenditure of a comparatively small sum we will hazard interests that it is our bounden duty to protect and defend. Before this possession could be made complete, if at all, or amount to partial defense even, vast interests, private and public, would certainly be destroyed, and our commerce especially be left very much to the mercy of our enemies. The highest and best authorities who have spoken or written upon this subject all agree that as a military work and a work of defense and protection it would be of the utmost importance and advantage.

I desire now briefly to consider this canal in the light of its commercial importance and advantages. All will agree that it is its duty as well as its best policy for the Government to give such aid and encouragement to a wise and liberal system of intercommunication that our internal commerce may be developed and increased, and made to flourish commensurate with the enterprise and intelligence of the age. The great facilities which a well-regulated system of internal navigation will afford to the various operations of domestic commerce and all our forms of industrial pursuits all understand and appreciate. By it the products of one section of our country are exchanged for those of another, and thus all sections are made to participate in and enjoy the blessings and luxuries of each and all. Intelligence, enterprise, and happiness are all quickened and developed by the relations thus formed and sustained, and the greatest comfort and prosperity of our people must inevitably be the certain result. Everything that tends to break down monopoly of any kind, whether it be of trade, of means of internal communication, or of any sort of business in which our people are interested or with which their prosperity and happiness are more or less connected, tends to lift them and their interests above the control of avarice and oppression, and spreads broadcast over all the blessings and benefits of a common prosperity. Increase the facilities of internal trade between the different and all sections of our broad land, making the transitions from one section to another rapid, complete, and more frequent, and you increase the competition in business and commercial transactions that will result in every possible advantage to the producer and consumer which are to be aimed at and hoped for. Every new avenue opened up to trade, every additional facility offered to stimulate commercial enterprise, must inevitably, under the laws that govern trade, tend to the reduction of transportation, and consequently to the benefit of both the producer and consumer.

As this result is achieved and our remote parts are brought in close contact by these means with our great markets, where our productions are sold and used or exported, the effect will be to develop the resources of all portions of our country and add to its wealth, its prosperity, its power, and its happiness, as well as to fill its common Treasury from its constantly increasing abundance. What would be the value of real estate to-day upon our western borders and along the banks of our great rivers, where but a short time ago civilization had not made its habitation, had there not been adopted a wise and liberal policy of intercommunication by which these portions of our country have been brought into almost daily commercial intercourse with the East, making them as valuable, as rich, as prosperous, and as much to be sought after as any portions of the Republic? Very much has been done already, and much more will be done. Roads and canals, while they follow civilization in its rapid advance, are nevertheless the great civilizers of the age, especially with us. They span the great rivers, traverse the trackless plains that spread out over an extent as broad as vast empires, run through the valleys that lie along the bases of the great mountains whose sides they climb or whose rocky hearts they pierce, scattering in their way and spreading broadcast civilization, population, enterprise, intelligence, wealth, prosperity, and happiness, and lifting up a whole people to a higher and nobler aim. But let us look at the business of our lakes thus far, and then contemplate what our internal commerce must be in the future.

In 1862 at least thirty-two million bushels of grain, including wheat manufactured into flour, besides other agricultural products of western States, came from the upper lakes to Lake Ontario through the Welland or Canadian canal and over railroads connecting Lake Ontario and the upper lakes, and outside of our borders. All of this went to sustain that canal and to pay tribute to Canadian enterprise and add to Canadian prosperity. More than three fourths of this grain found its way from Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence through American channels to New York and New England. Nearly twenty millions of it was shipped eastward from Oswego and Cape Vincent, and some five million bushels from Ogdensburg over the Northern railroad; showing conclusively that nearly all of the commerce that will pass through this canal, if constructed, will reach our ports East, and not go out to the ocean by the St. Lawrence, as some insist and seem to fear.

If time would permit more might be said upon this point; but it can hardly be necessary. Suffice it to say that in all the past since the Welland canal has been in use but very little of the products of the West which have found their way into Lake Ontario, has escaped from our channels of communication with our eastern ports, for the good reason that there is commercial as well as natural disadvantages and obstacles in the way of such a result. Millions of money have been expended to open a safe way to the ocean, aside from what has been expended on her canals, and still the way out is difficult, exceedingly dangerous, and comparatively unfrequented, and must remain so forever. Some of the finest steam-packets, within a few years, in number eight, I think, have been lost in the intricacies of this route, and in the year 1863 but a single vessel cleared and entered American ports through this channel from foreign countries. Thus it will be seen that under no possible circumstances, were this canal built, any more than now when we use the Welland canal, would our commerce find its way out into the ocean through the Gulf of St. Lawrence and escape our ports, as some who object to its construction insist.

The business for the year 1862, to which I have referred as passing into Lake Ontario from the West through Canadian channels, is not an overstatement of the facts. During that and the preceding year the industry of the great West was paralyzed by the war on account of the absence of so large a portion of these who labor and produce. Again, the annual increase of products of the States west that are tributary to our roads and canals, and which carry such products to our markets, is at least twenty per cent., and this wonderful development must continue in operation for a long time to come. Not a tenth part of the land is yet occupied by the cultivator, although foreign and domestic emigration is fast filling up the country and rapidly developing its resources and adding to its production. Already over one hundred million bushels of grain are transported from the upper lakes to the tidewaters of the East by the routes of trade now in use, and with all the facilities necessary, and as soon as they can be furnished, this amount can be increased to a thousand millions. We are giving Government aid to extend our lines of railroad across the continent, to open up and develop our vast domain stretching on to the Pacific coast, so that it may add its share to the great aggregate of production and wealth which the future must witness.

All this is just and proper, and should not be neglected; but we should at the same time remember that the resources and production of the West, this side of our unsettled territory, are already too great for the facilities we have to carry off to market its surplus, and that this deficiency must be more and more apparent and embarrassing as we proceed, unless we act with energy and haste. Many facts might be given to show the wonderful advance we are making, and consequently to impress upon us the necessity of the legislation we now ask, and other similar legislation; but I will give only a few. The great State of Illinois alone numbers two million two hundred and fifty thousand people, and those known as the northwestern States have a population of over ten millions. About forty years ago they contained scarcely one million people. Chicago was then an Indian trading post, while now it has a population of about a quarter of a million, and is said to be the greatest market for lumber, pork, and grain in the world.

At the end of the present century, at the expiration of about thirty-two years, according to the present ratio of increase, our population will be not far from one hundred million people. The West and that portion of our territory tributary to our lines of communication to our eastern ports will have of this vast population at least sixty millions. If our facilities are too limited now, and not adequate to carry off the surplus produce of ten million people, what will they do with the produce of sixty millions? This is no imaginary picture, but a startling fact it will be well for us all to ponder upon. We live not for to-day alone, but for the future as well. The statesman acts not for the present emergency alone, but should devise such ways and means as will not only care for and relieve the present, but meet the demands of the great future, and he is the wiser who comprehends what that future will require, and makes early and ample provision for its wants. I cannot enlarge upon this idea as I would like to have had time. The field is large, and the considerations that cluster around the theme that opens up to us as we contemplate it are of such surpassing importance that it would well repay the contemplation, but we must refrain from it at present. What advantage would this canal be to the producer and consumer is a question well worthy of consideration. Upon the general principle it would be a benefit by adding another facility to commerce, and thus tend directly to open up competition and reduce the cost of transportation.

The construction of the Welland canal had this effect; for after it began to produce its influence upon trade the cost of transportation on the regular lines of communication heretofore existing was reduced as a direct consequence of that competition. In 1855, Hon. W. J. McAlpine, State engineer of the State of New York, in his annual report on railroads, gave us the most reliable data we have, showing the actual cost of transportation by the different modes of communication, from which we take the following interesting statement:

Cost of transportation per ton per mile is:	Mills.
On the ocean, long voyage.....	1 1/2
On the ocean, short voyage.....	2 1/2 to 6
On the lakes, long voyage.....	2
On the lakes, short voyage.....	3 to 4
On the Hudson river.....	2 1/2
On the Mississippi and St. Lawrence.....	3
On the Erie canal (enlarged).....	4
On the ordinary canals.....	5
On the railroads (ordinary grades).....	12 1/2 to 13 1/2

Now, the distance by the lake from Chicago to Buffalo is one thousand miles; and the actual cost of transporting a ton of freight, according to the estimate of Mr. McAlpine, is two mills per ton per mile, or—

For a ton of freight from Chicago to Buffalo.....	$2 00
The distance from Buffalo to Troy is three hundred and forty-five miles, which, at four mills per ton per mile, makes the cost of transporting a ton from Buffalo to Troy.....	1 38
Add canal tolls, at three mills per one thousand pounds per mile.....	2 07
Cost of transportation per ton on the Hudson, at two and a half mills per mile.....	37.5

Making the whole cost, including canal tolls, of transporting a ton of wheat or flour from Chicago to New York, via Buffalo and the Erie canal.....	$5 82.5
---	----------

Cost via the Niagara ship-canal and Lake Ontario:
The distance from Chicago to Oswego, via the proposed ship-canal, would be eleven hundred and eighty miles, which, at two mills per ton per mile, would be.....	$2 36
The distance from Oswego to Troy, by canal, is one hundred and eighty-seven miles, which, at four mills per ton per mile, for transportation, would be.....	74.5
Add canal tolls, at three mills per one thousand pounds per mile, on wheat or flour.....	1 12.2
Freight on Hudson river at two and a half mills per ton per mile.....	37.5
Add Niagara ship-canal expenses, per ton.....	20

Making the cost of transporting a ton of wheat or flour from Chicago to New York, via the proposed ship-canal and Lake Ontario.....	$4 80.2
---	----------

The above statement is no doubt entirely correct; at least it remains unchallenged. From this it appears that the difference in transportation is in favor of the ship-canal route, and the cost $1 02½ less on a ton of wheat or flour from Chicago to New York than by the cheaper other route by lake to Buffalo and Erie canal and Hudson river to New York. This is a little over three cents per bushel less on wheat and about fifteen cents per barrel less on flour.

Again this difference would be increased by the competition which always springs up between rival routes of trade, so that low freight would not be confined to this route, but all competing routes between the East and West would be obliged to reduce prices on through freight at least so as to conform to the cheaper channels, thus saving to the West annually millions of dollars, and to the East in the same ratio.

The reason of this difference is apparent in the fact that lake and ship navigation is cheaper than canal navigation. Vessels load at Chicago and do not break bulk before arriving at Oswego at least, and thus in large quantities the grain or flour is carried further toward tide-water before transshipment, saving one hundred and fifty miles of canal navigation and not increasing worth the mention the distance in the aggregate. Trade will go where inducements offer the greatest benefits, and although the Welland canal is inadequate and inferior, such shipping as can adapt itself to its capacity will avail itself of its facilities and reap the benefits that are offered. The question addresses itself to every Representative here and all the people we represent, whether we shall furnish necessary facilities to our own people and our own commerce, or whether we shall depend upon and take them from others outside of our borders, and who have no interest whatever in our advancement and prosperity, and who will furnish them when, and no longer, than their caprice is suited and their interests are subserved.

As a Representative from New York, I advocate this measure for the reason, among others which I shall notice hereafter in addition to those I have already given, that the facilities we propose by this bill to give to commerce will in a time of peace be extended in part or in whole by the Canadian Government, and consequently the great canals through New York will be no better off, so far as revenue is concerned, if this work should not be completed. Already the Canadian Government is arranging for the enlargement of her canal, to meet the constantly increasing demands of the trade of our lakes, and is waiting with the deepest solicitude to see whether our Government has enough of independence, self-respect, and a regard for the rights and interests of our people and its own honor to give this great work its sanction and provide for its construction. It is, then, a question whether we furnish these facilities for ourselves within our own borders, under our own control, available for all purposes and in every emergency.

I do not believe that the canal revenues of the State of New York will be lessened one dollar by the construction of this canal, for without it the same facilities will be furnished by the Canadian Government, and our commerce will avail itself of them as a matter of course. But if I am mistaken in this view of the question the obligation to sustain the measure is just as strong upon me and upon every Representative from New York. First, this work is a national work entirely, free to all our people, and we should act upon it in our capacity as national Representatives. Upon this question touching the interest of the consumer, the laborer, and mechanic in our eastern cities, who has to buy his daily bread, as well as the interest of the sons of toil in the West who produce, no narrow, selfish State pride or policy should intervene to prevent doing the greatest justice and securing the greatest good to the greatest number. I should be ashamed to charge upon the great West any of the evils resulting from the system of operating our canals in New York or the poverty and embarrassment that their frauds and corruptions have visited upon our people. They all belong to ourselves, the system we have adopted, the dishonesty we have tolerated too long and too patiently endured. The canals have done their duty, and the great West has done its duty by crowding them with its surplus productions, and pouring into our Treasury a large proportion of all they have earned since they were constructed.

What are the facts? In the opposition made to this measure in the last Congress, and presented here by the canal officers of my State, it was assumed, and I think without good foundation, that this canal, if constructed, would lessen the revenues from the Erie canal, and therefore should not be entered upon, even by the General Government, for general and national purposes.

In the protest and statement then presented, and in other public reports, it is stated also that our canals cost, all told—interest, loans, damages, enlargement—$100,000,000; and that between eighty-three and eighty-four millions have been returned to the treasury of the State, leaving about fifteen millions of disbursements unreturned. The great central line, however, which is the one with which the canal we propose to construct will come in competition, has more than met its cost, interest, loans, damages, and enlargement, and has paid into the treasury of the State, in addition to the above, $9,000,000.

Any deficiency, however, now existing attaches to the lateral canals, and cannot justly enter into this controversy. I do not think, therefore, it becomes New York, located midway between the West and the East, in the light of the above showing, to interpose obstacles to the prosecution of this great work, and thus hazard her best and highest interests. I sustain this measure rather in the interests of my State than otherwise. What tends to quicken, develop, and advance the great West and invite its productions and wealth east will fill the lap of New York as inevitably as water will seek its level. This great tide of trade and commerce must pour through her channels in whole or in part, and fill her great cities and ports with activity and wealth, or if some small portion moves on further east it will leave all along her shores and upon her lines of communication that gain which comes from their use and by the contact. But I would warn all who with me feel a deep interest in the prosperity of New York, as well as a desire to act upon the high stand of the greatest general good and advantage, to beware how they trifle with the expressed and growing determination of the West to secure every possible facility and advantage for their commerce to carry off their produce. It will force its way out in some way. You cannot block it up. If you throw up obstacles to its progress it will flow over or around them. If you stand in its way and deny it a route and adequate facilities it will seek other channels of communication, and at last, when too late, our folly and stubbornness will fill us with shame and cover us with disgrace.

We have already gone so far in our opposition to this great work that negotiations have been attempted with the Canadian Government to secure the construction of a canal through Canada between the Georgian bay and Montreal, and also the speedy enlargement of the Welland canal. Western Legislatures are moving in this matter; and it behooves New York, as represented here, to occupy no doubtful position, but to stand together in favor of this measure, which commends itself to her best and highest interests. Certainly no Representative from the city of New York should oppose this measure. It is but another outlet or an additional facility for the benefits of commerce to flow into her lap and fill her store-houses and add to her wealth. It can work no possible disadvantage to her, while in addition it is her duty, and the duty of her Representatives here especially, to stand by the policy this measure sustains, for its defeat will bring leanness and poverty to her people. The more and greater the facilities to trade between the West and the East the better for all concerned.

Let all our present lines of communication be improved and enlarged as ability will permit; let the number be increased as the growing tide of commerce swells with the increase of our population and expands with the constant development of our enterprise and industrial power. The business of the great future will be more than a match for all the provisions we may make. Our present lines of business, instead of going into decay or not being fully taxed to their capacity, even when further improved under the weight and pressure of what the future will throw upon them, will enjoy a prosperity not now conceived of, and will, in my judgment, fall far short of meeting the demands that will be made upon them.

The East, too, is deeply interested in this work. Its interest is manifest in what the internal trade of the country has done for it. By it the granaries of the mighty West have been unlocked and their contents poured out over the East in return for its productions, the result of its handiwork and skill. The bread for the million has thus been scattered profusely among the toiling artisans and laborers of New England, who wait upon, and expect from, the surplus and vast resources of the West sufficient to supply their daily wants. As you increase facilities for commerce between the different portions of our country, open up additional avenues of trade, and multiply the means of, and accelerate communication, you at the same time increase legitimate and wholesome competition, and in the one instance swell the results of labor, and in the other place in the hand of toil more ample means of support. Just in proportion as you multiply these facilities you invite and encourage industry and enterprise, cheapen transportation, and in the same proportion cheapen bread, and add to the comfort and prosperity of all our people.

This last, but not least, link in the long line of lake and river communication connecting the far West, its rivers and railroads, with the East and tide-water, should command the support of every member of this House, not even excepting my colleague [Mr. HUMPHREY] of the Buffalo district. I am no party to a policy of proscription by which any locality or section shall be crippled to build up another; neither will I favor a narrow, selfish, suicidal scheme, by which great national and general benefits are to be lost, because of an imaginary or supposed local disadvantage. Commerce and trade are means to be used to promote the prosperity and happiness of all the people, and their benefits should be as widely extended and as universal as the wants and interests of the whole country demand.

This work is a national one, and its benefits are to be national and general. Every consideration of honor, self respect, and public interest demands that it be consummated.

In this legislation there are no interests to serve but the interests of the people of the whole country. It seeks to build up no corporation which in time may grind the poor or less favored into the dust and ignore the rights or interests of the people. Its benefits will not go into the pockets of a few speculators to build up their fortunes at the expense of the people's rights and the public Treasury; but they will be as widespread as our country, and enjoyed by all. It has been complained that the people's rights have been sacrificed to foster and build up great railroad corporations and monopolies of various kinds; that they are soulless when they once get power, and seek to perpetuate their power at any sacrifice of public or private rights and interests. However true this may be, no such charge can be made against this proposed legislation. This is a national work, and is to be the nation's property, for the benefit of all sections and all our people. It will more largely benefit the West and that section which furnishes such a vast amount of surplus production, and which must seek a market; but the East will also be benefited as the result of cheaper transportation, for it will cheapen every mouthful of food that sustains and encourages her industry and keeps alive her toiling millions.

There can be no good reason for delay or opposition unless it be found in the appropriation which this bill makes to accomplish the work proposed. While in itself it appears large, it should be considered in connection with other expenditures made by Congress for various purposes, and with reference to the vast and continual benefits that must flow from the final and successful completion of this great work. Paid for out of the national Treasury, it in return spreads its benefits over all the wide field of commercial transactions to the benefit of all our people, as I have shown. The increase of production, as it would tend to cheapen transportation and quicken commerce, would very soon repay the people of the whole country for all outlay to secure the objects of this legislation. Economy and honesty in the administration of public affairs, which we hope ere long to secure, and before this work could be entered upon, at the best, will, in a very short space of time, save vastly more than enough to meet all the demands this bill makes upon the Treasury, and which is now being divided among thieves outside and inside the Government service.

The amount asked by this bill will be called for only as wanted, and will thus be spread over a term of three or four years at least, making no heavy drain upon the Treasury at any one time. I agree with my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] that it is time to look after the people's interests and legislate for their good and their prosperity. This is a people's measure. It can have no private interests in it. There are no stocks to be issued and no bonds to be divided. It is legislation to secure an additional and necessary outlet for the surplus products of an empire constantly expanding and increasing in wealth, enterprise, and production, already restrained and cramped in its energies by our present insufficient facilities for outlet. It is legislation for cheap food to the poor, the daily laborer, to the millions of our people who toil to earn their daily bread. If it be but one effort in this direction, it is nevertheless an important one, and should receive the support of the people's Representatives from all sections, not excepting my colleague from the Buffalo district. Let us save money in some other way, by withholding from private jobs and enterprises, and make this appropriation in the people's interests and for the public benefit.

Mr. Speaker, with our vast domain, populated and developed as it is fast being done, and its mighty resources opened up and poured into the avenues of trade and commercial activity, all our present embarrassments will be as trifles and fade away before the swelling tide of wealth that pours into a common Treasury from a land whose resources are unbounded and whose wealth is untold. I have no fears as to the future. A nation free and just to all its people, with laws bearing equally upon all, with rights and liberty equal to all, with no restraint except in wholesome and just laws and limitless as to extent of country and resources, no one can foresee our boundless future or form any adequate conception of our future prosperity and wealth. All this, however, flows from the policy I have suggested and set forth. Employment, expansion, and physical as well as mental and moral development, are elements of true greatness and high national character and prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, whatever may be the fate of this measure, I feel that I have discharged my duty in relation to it, and close by expressing the earnest hope that it may be passed by the House.

Mr. HUMPHREY addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. PAINE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to urge upon the attention of the House some facts and arguments bearing upon the bill under consideration, which I have at different times and places addressed to the people of my own State. Two wonderful valleys pierce the North American continent at right angles, the one extending westward from the Atlantic ocean, and the other northward from the Mexican gulf. Through each of these valleys rolls an inland ocean capable of bearing upon its bosom a commerce the measurement of which would almost baffle even figures themselves. They meet each other in the center of the continent. Their waters intermingling there, again find a common level in the sea. Here lie the grain fields of America, the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Missouri, and Minnesota, opulent in the accumulated fertility of ages, inviting the hand of agriculture to a future harvest adequate to the supply, not only of our own country, but of Europe also. They lie in the interior of a great continent, a thousand miles from the sea, where their infinite riches would be as useless to man as gold imbedded in inaccessible mountain ranges had not the hand of the Almighty opened for them these mighty water-courses to bear away their yellow harvests to the markets of the world.

But for these valleys of the Great Lakes and Mississippi, and the flowing seas that fill them, those eight States would be, not what they are to-day, the theater of the latest and highest and best development of human industry, but what they were yesterday, the hunting and fighting ground of the savage aborigines. But for them, Wisconsin, instead of growing in population, in the twenty years which intervened between 1840 and 1860, from thirty-one thousand to seven hundred and seventy-six thousand, would still be unknown to the civilized world except through the narratives of hardy explorers. And yet these natural highways, valuable as they were to the northwestern States, were not complete. They required improvement by human hands. It is always so. God's best gifts to man always require the cooperative activity of men to utilize them to the highest degree. The Greek poet said well, "For toil the gods sell all good things to men." There is never any exception to this rule; there is no exception in this case. It might have been very convenient for us if ocean steamers, starting from the head of Lake Superior, could for twelve months in each year pass through the lakes and straits and rivers in their natural state without obstruction of falls, flats, or rapids, to the sea. It might be very satisfactory to us if ocean steamers, or even river steamers of the largest class, starting from the Falls of St. Anthony, could plow their fearless way to the Gulf unobstructed by rocks, or rapids, or sand bars, or snags.

Indeed, it might please us better still if our water-craft could be at the same time exempted from the burdensome expense of steam or other motive power, and enabled to "go alone" upstream as well as down. But before we look this gift horse in the mouth it might be well to consider how many centuries of uninterrupted toil of the entire human race would be required to scoop out these mighty valleys and drain the waters into them and make those water-courses to the sea as good as they were when nature placed them in our hands, and with energy to set about improving these good gifts, instead of grumbling because they are not better. Each of these lines of communication had its defects when first used by civilized man. Each has been from time to time greatly improved. But each has still imperfections and room for further improvement.

It is my purpose to-day to show the House that the interests of those States and of the entire Republic demand, imperatively demand, that the facilities for the transportation of the agricultural products of the Northwest to their legitimate markets shall be promptly and very greatly improved, and to indicate those improvements which, in my judgment, are practicable and will prove effectual for the relief of the agriculture of the Northwest.

In 1840 these eight States contained a population of 3,351,542. In 1850 their population had increased to 5,403,595, and in 1860 it was 8,955,932. If it had increased in each State from 1860 to the present time in the same ratio in which it increased from 1850 to 1860 the population of these eight States would now exceed 17,300,000. Making every possible allowance for the war, and for every other conceivable cause of diminution of their progress, their population to-day must greatly exceed 12,000,000. But if you will look at the five States lying nearest the intersection of these great valleys you will discover a growth still more amazing—I mean the States of Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Minnesota. In 1840 the population of these five grain-producing States was 762,507. In 1850 it had risen to 1,752,806, and in 1860 was 4,083,981. If the population of each State had increased from 1860 to the present time in the same ratio in which it increased from 1850 to 1860, the total population of these five States would now exceed 11,250,000; for during that period the population of Illinois increased at the rate of 10.10 per cent. per annum on the figures of 1850, that of Iowa at the rate of 25.11, that of Michigan at the rate of 8.83, that of Wisconsin at the rate of 15.40, and that of Minnesota at the rate of 27.6 per cent. per annum. I am satisfied that the population of these five States is to-day not less than 6,000,000. In the two decades between 1840 and 1860 the eight States which I have named, including Ohio, Indiana, and Missouri, almost trebled their population. In the same period the five States of Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Minnesota had increased more than five hundred per cent. Where else in modern history will you find a parallel to the majestic growth of empire revealed by these wonderful figures? Where is the lamp of Aladdin or the magician's wand that has wrought this miracle? The golden corn was the lamp of Aladdin. The waving wheat was the wand of the magician. While for ages the soil of Asia and Africa and Europe has been taxed for the sustenance of the human race, these natural grainfields have been accumulating a wealth of fertility which now suddenly disclosed to mankind proves potent enough to fix the seat of empire for a continent.

The product of wheat and corn in the eight northwestern States for the year 1865, as estimated in the report of the Department of Agriculture, was, in bushels:

1865.	Wheat.	Corn.
Illinois.....	25,366,745	177,095,852
Indiana.....	13,020,803	116,069,316
Iowa.....	13,698,542	62,997,813
Michigan.....	15,378,488	17,520,305
Minnesota.....	3,429,467	5,577,795
Missouri.....	2,953,393	52,021,715
Ohio.....	17,601,472	91,119,644
Wisconsin.....	20,307,920	13,449,405
Total.....	112,752,930	535,851,945

For the whole country the estimates were—wheat 148,522,827 bushels, and corn 704,427,863 bushels.

For the five States of Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, and Wisconsin, in 1865, the amounts are of wheat 79,077,162 bushels, and of corn 276,641,170 bushels.

Now, putting these figures together, it appears that in 1859 the eight northwestern States had less than three tenths of the population of the Republic—that is to say, only 8,955,932 out of 31,443,322—and yet in 1865 the same States produced three fourths of the corn and more than three fourths of the wheat.

It also appears that the five States of Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, and Wisconsin, in the year 1859, had only a trifle more than one eighth of the population of the country, and yet in 1865 they produced more than half of the wheat and almost half of the corn. It would be superfluous to comment upon figures like these. And that there is still room for indefinite expansion we cannot doubt if we consider the fact that in 1859 the agricultural area of the country embraced only 168,110,720 acres, while the gross aggregate of uncultivated land, fertile and waste, was ten times as much; that is to say, 1,466,969,862 acres.

The wheat shipped from Lake Michigan eastward is a part of our surplus contributed to the aggregate product of the country, from which, after supplying those of our own States, whose consumption exceeds their production, is drawn the surplus which we export to foreign countries.

The aggregate export of wheat and flour from the United States in the three years 1861, 1862, and 1863 was 124,828,902 bushels; and in those years the shipments from Milwaukee, Chicago, Green Bay, Port Washington, Sheboygan, Kenosha, and Racine, on the western shore of Lake Michigan, amounted to 123,281,981 bushels; and this wheat was almost wholly the product of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, and northern Illinois. It would be difficult to overestimate the extent to which, in the peculiar situation of the country during these years, the national credit was invigorated by those exportations.

Meantime southern Illinois, Missouri, and Iowa supplied most of the flour consumed in Dakota, Idaho, Montana, Colorado, and a part of Nebraska. And during the same three years Wisconsin, Iowa, Illinois, Minnesota, and Missouri actually shipped eastward one hundred and fifty per cent. more corn and meal and twenty-five per cent. more pork than the whole Republic exported during the same period. Their aggregate contributions to the national surplus, which furnished our exports during those three years, amounted to $205,726,706. But the entire exports of domestic produce for the same time, exclusive of gold and silver, amounted to only $669,032,450. The surplus of wheat, corn, and pork sent eastward from these five States was thus almost one third of the entire exportation of the United States.

The average yearly tonnage of all vessels of all nations engaged in transoceanic commerce in the same three years and entering the ports of the United States was 5,341,867 tons. The wheat, corn, beef, and pork contributed by these five States to our foreign exports averaged not less than 1,250,000 tons per annum. These shipments, therefore, which equaled the entire exportation of these products and one third of the aggregate exports of all our domestic products, except gold and silver, actually furnished outward-bound employment to one fourth of all the tonnage of all nations trading across the sea from American ports.

The Agricultural Report for 1865 places Illinois in the front rank of the wheat-producing States, looking not to population but only the number of bushels raised. Her crop exceeds twenty-five millions. Next comes Wisconsin, with a crop of over twenty millions. Ohio is third, Michigan fourth, Iowa fifth, and Indiana sixth. And as for corn, Illinois alone produces several million bushels more than Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Kentucky all together.

In 1859 the aggregate product of wheat in the States and Territories was five and one half bushels to each inhabitant. New England produced only eleven and one half quarts to each inhabitant. The middle States produced three and two thirds bushels to each inhabitant. The southern States produced three and one half bushels to each inhabitant. But the western States produced ten bushels to each inhabitant; and one of them, Wisconsin, produced more than twenty bushels for each man, woman, and child within her borders.

In 1869 the single State of Illinois produced, according to the census returns, 23,887,023 bushels of wheat, and yet the whole amount exported to foreign countries in the same year was only 17,213,133 bushels. In the same year she produced 115,174,177 bushels of corn, and the entire export of that year amounted to only 15,448,507 bushels. The first shipment of grain from Lake Michigan of which we have any record was one of 3,000 bushels of wheat, made in 1836, by the brig John H. Kenzie, from Grand Haven to Buffalo. The first shipment of grain from the western shore of that lake was made from Chicago in 1838, and consisted of thirty-nine bags of wheat. The first shipment of grain from Wisconsin was made in 1841, at Milwaukee, where a cargo of about 4,000 bushels of wheat was sent to Canada. But the shipments of grain and flour from ports of Lake Michigan were, in 1858, 27,879,293 bushels; in 1859, 25,829,753 bushels; in 1860, 43,211,448 bushels; in 1861, 69,489,113 bushels; in 1862, 78,218,675 bushels; and in 1863, 74,710,664 bushels.

The magnitude of the agricultural interest of the Northwest is shown in a striking manner by the figures, which exhibit the extent to which it furnishes business for the railway lines of this country. The report of the Milwaukee and St. Paul railway for 1865 shows that the amount of wheat and flour transported on that road in that year was 6,286,834 bushels and 271,000 barrels, amounting to 214,623 tons. But the entire tonnage of freight for that year was only 319,656 tons; so that the single article of wheat, ground and unground, contributed more than two thirds of all its freight. And yet during the same year the road also carried for the farmers of the Northwest 74,970 bushels of rye, oats, and barley, 18,425 bushels of corn, 18,797 bushels of potatoes, 10,580 head of cattle, 4,442 live hogs, 2,258,590 pounds of dressed hogs, 810,970 pounds of wool, and 2,156,190 pounds of hides.

The report of the same road for 1866 shows the amount of wheat and flour transported in 1866 to have been 5,945,948 bushels, and 305,685 barrels, or 208,139 tons. But the entire freight was only 361,687 tons; the wheat alone, therefore, contributed more than one half the freight.

The report of the Milwaukee and Prairie du Chien railway for the year 1866 shows that in that year it transported 5,724,051 bushels of wheat and 179,779 barrels of flour, amounting in the aggregate to 189,334 tons, or more than one half the entire freight for the year, which was only 369,320 tons. In addition to this ground and unground wheat, the road transported other agricultural products in large quantities, including 170,525 bushels of rye, 29,661 bushels of barley, 995,148 bushels of oats, 383,957 bushels of corn, 55,800 bushels of potatoes, 20,505,740 pounds of dressed hogs, 1,218,915 pounds of butter, 686,220 pounds of wool, 1,469,920 pounds of hides, 13,887 head of cattle, and 36,195 head of hogs.

The same report shows that on the McGregor Western road in 1866, of a freight business of 60,589 tons, the single article of wheat, ground and unground, furnished 35,466 tons, or more than seven twelfths.

The reports of the Chicago and Northwestern railway show that the entire freight revenue of that road in 1864 was $4,448,598 57, of which grain and meat furnished $2,193,953 08; that in 1865 the entire revenue from freight was $5,744,895 57, of which grain and meat furnished $2,812,042 75; that in 1866 its entire revenue from freight was $6,649,589 81, of which grain and meat paid $2,799,273 80.

Having presented these facts, indicative of the present development of the agriculture of the Northwest and suggestive of its indefinite expansion in the future, I will proceed to show how grievously it is crippled and hampered by inadequate facilities of transportation to its markets. The history of these States having demonstrated their agricultural productiveness, their prosperity hinges altogether upon the question of transportation. If this transportation shall keep pace in its expansion with our increasing production, then will our prosperity continue. If our means of transportation shall at the same time become better and cheaper as well as greater, then will our prosperity increase. It will increase, too, in proportion to the relative improvement of these facilities for reaching our legitimate markets. If the enlargement of these facilities shall not keep pace with our agricultural development our interests must languish, and in proportion to their inadequacy must we suffer. To the agricultural producer whose surplus does not find a market at his own door the question of transportation is a question of life or death. And where is the present market for the surplus grain and meat of those northwestern States? First, we must look for it to those States and Territories whose consumption exceeds their production, and next to foreign countries. The States which purchase most from us are New England and the Middle States. New York city, therefore, virtually conducts the distribution of these products to purchasers within the Republic as well as their exportation to foreign countries. New York, a mere cipher in our lumber market, is the mistress of our grain and meat markets, and at present our transportation lines must mainly tend toward that city, while for our export trade we ought to have, if possible, an unobstructed route to Europe.

I could comprehend the present condition of things if in this matter of transportation the interests of agriculture antagonized with those of manufactures. Then I should expect manufacturers to stand across our track. But in this case, where manufactures will gain as much by cheaper food as agriculture can gain by cheaper transportation, I am amazed at the temerity of local interests seeking to fetter the whole Northwest, and ashamed that we so patiently submit to it. New York produced in 1865, in round numbers, 12,000,000 bushels of wheat, and Wisconsin produced 20,000,000 bushels; and yet New York received for her wheat $26,000,000, while Wisconsin received only $22,000,000. New York received $4,000,000 more for 12,000,000 bushels than Wisconsin received for 20,000,000 bushels. That is to say, Wisconsin virtually paid 3,000,000 bushels of wheat and $4,000,000 in money to get the remaining 12,000,000 bushels of wheat to market. Pennsylvania realized $23,000,000 for her crop of 11,000,000 bushels, while Iowa for her crop of 13,000,000 bushels realized only $13,000,000. Pennsylvania produced 2,000,000 bushels less wheat, but realized $10,000,000 more money. Minnesota produced three times as much wheat as New Jersey, and yet New Jersey realized $200,000 more for her crop than Minnesota. Poor Minnesota had to pay two bushels for the transportation of a third. All of New England and New Jersey produced, in the aggregate, 20,209,819 bushels of corn, and realized for it $19,817,848; while Iowa for a crop of 62,997,818 realized only $18,899,344.

The six New England States, together with New Jersey, New York, and Pennsylvania, produced, in the aggregate, 81,081,250 bushels of corn. But Illinois alone produced 117,095,852 bushels, almost one hundred millions more than the aggregate of those nine States, and yet Illinois realized for her entire crop only $51,800,536, while they realized for theirs $72,732,625. A bushel averaged 90 cents in those States, $1 19 in New England, and only 29½ cents in Illinois. Illinois was obliged to pay, in round numbers, 100,000,000 bushels of corn and $20,000,000 to get 80,000,000 bushels to an eastern market. The six New England States produced, in the aggregate, 10,082,947 bushels of corn; Illinois, as I have shown, 117,095,852 bushels. The entire value of the crop of New England was $11,887,834. The value of the crop of Illinois was only $51,800,536. The crop of Illinois was in quantity seventeen times that of New England, its value less than five times. The difference between the average value of corn in Illinois and in the State of New York was 65½ cents. If Illinois had paid that price to send her corn to market the transportation of her corn alone would have cost her more than the home value of her entire crop for the year, including corn, wheat, rye, oats, barley, buckwheat, potatoes, tobacco, and hay; for the freight on her corn alone would have been $116,440,522, 69, whereas the home value of all her crops, corn included, was only $116,274,321.

The average value of cattle in the six New England States was $41 50 per head, while in the eight Northwestern States which I have named their average value per head was $26 85. The average value of hogs in the six New England States was $21 70 per head; in the Northwest, $8 32. The main cause of this monstrous inequality is inadequate transportation, and the remedy will be found in improved transportation. If our transportation were what it ought to be, or anything approximating thereto, these evils could not exist. And while these odious figures stand before us it will be idle to expatiate upon the number of avenues by railway, canal, lake, and river, open from the Northwest to the sea-board, upon the number of canal boats in this or that canal, the tonnage of this or that railroad, or the number of bushels which this or that canal could by possibility move, working day and night, in a whole year.

The more we ship by such routes the worse is our condition. If we are to pay two bushels as freight on one the less we ship the better. What we want and must have is cheaper transportation.

When this measure was before the House on a former occasion the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cook] made the following statement:

"There are five routes by water and by rail from Chicago to the sea-board, and yet the demand for transportation last fall was so great, such vast quantities of agricultural products were waiting to go forward—more than all the lines could transport—that the price of transportation from Chicago to the sea-board was fixed by the dearest route of all, and flour or pork or beef could be as cheaply transported by Fort Wayne and Pittsburg and over the mountains of Pennsylvania as by the great water route."

It is not satisfactory to be told that on the Erie canal the freight and tolls on a bushel of wheat are only seventeen cents in the month of June, when we have no wheat to transport, if we know that in the fall, when we have wheat for transportation, we must pay nearer forty cents. Nor do we care to know what the average charge for freight and tolls is for the whole season, including the months in which there is no movement of wheat as well as the others; what concerns us is the cost in the months in which our wheat must go forward. On this point we need no further experience to satisfy us that the New York canals in their present condition are powerless to relieve northwestern agriculture from burdens too grievous to be borne.

It is useless to expect us to bear these ills with patience until manufactures shall spring up to consume our surplus products. While agriculture is blended with the very rudiments of empire manufactures are of slow growth, and must have time for their development. Let us by all means have the highest possible development of our manufacturing resources at the earliest possible day, but let us not meantime, while waiting for that day, like idiots, spurn those resources of agricultural wealth which are now available, the very development of which will more surely and more speedily than anything else bring along that manufacturing prosperity which we covet. It is not the Northwest alone that demands these improvements; the whole country needs them, as well the eastern manufacturer who wants cheap food, as the western farmer who wants cheap freights. The wants of the present are urgent, but the wants of the future will be more urgent still when emancipation and reconstruction shall have opened the door for the development of the measureless resources of the Southwest, and given again to New Orleans that trade which nature gave and slavery took away, and the Mississippi valley, already the seat of empire, as well as the granary of America shall become densely populous and immensely rich and possess, as within the lifetime of many here present I hope it will possess, the capital of the Republic.

I proceed to point out those improvements which, in my judgment, are practicable, and will prove effectual for the relief of the agriculture of the Northwest.

In the navigation of the route of the northern lakes six great obstacles were encountered: the Falls of Niagara, the rapids of the St. Lawrence, the ice blockade in winter, the foreign ownership of the greater part of the St. Lawrence, the St. Clair flats, and the Falls of St. Mary.

In the navigation of the Mississippi route five great obstacles were encountered: the snags and sawyers, the sand-bars in low water, the ice blockade of the Upper Mississippi, the rapids at Keokuk, and the rapids at Rock Island.

Let us, in the first place, inquire what has been done by the Government since its origin to improve these avenues of communication in which so large a proportion of the people of the United States, both consumers and producers, are interested.

Common consent accords to Dewitt Clinton, one of the Governors of New York, the honor of the grand maneuver to flank the obstructions at Niagara Falls and on the St. Lawrence by a cut-off from Lake Erie to the navigable waters of the Hudson. His neighbors ridiculed him and his ditch. But in this they were two thousand years behind even the Chinese, who were then using a canal twice as long as the Erie canal, and older than Christianity itself. Clinton deserved what he won—imperishable renown; for his flank movement was a magnificent success. On the 25th day of October, 1825, was completed the Erie canal, a work destined to secure inestimable benefits to the city of New York, the State of New York, the States and territories of the Northwest, and to the whole Republic. A thoroughfare was thereby established within our own borders between the sea-board and the vast undeveloped fertile Northwest; and through it began at once to roll a tide of immigration and trade and travel which speedily wrought more marvelous transformations in the center of this continent than have ever been witnessed elsewhere on the face of the globe. It may be idle speculation to inquire what would have been the present condition of Canada and New England if nature had sent the waters of the great lakes directly from Lake Erie or Lake Ontario unobstructed through the State of New York to the sea.

But it is plain enough that, with these waters in their present channel, if there had been no Niagara Falls there would have been no New York city. If the waters of the great lakes had poured through the Niagara and St. Lawrence, unvexed by cataracts or rapids, to the sea, the map of the United States would have been very different from what it now is. The commercial metropolis of the western Continent would not have been on Manhattan island. If the Alleghany range had been prolonged northeastwardly through New York, and the Hudson river been found an impracticable stream, the commercial center of the Republic might have been at Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, Hampton Roads, City Point, Norfolk, New Orleans, or any one of twenty other places as well as at New York. It is often said that "God made the country, man makes the city." But this is not always entirely correct. God made the city of New York—not Dewitt Clinton nor any other man. For it was the Almighty who fashioned the valleys and rivers and the continent, so that New York was not only a possibility but an inevitable necessity.

If Dewitt Clinton had never lived sooner or later some other man had initiated a cut-off from Lake Erie to the Hudson. But for that conformation which the continent received from the hand of God, no human labor could have forced the growth of such a city on Manhattan island. And if the Erie canal tended to develop the natural advantages of New York city, so did it also tend to develop the natural advantages of the Northwest. God made the city in the same sense in which he made the country northwest of the Ohio, by giving to each the natural advantages which it possessed. Of a truth the cataract of Niagara has been a boon of Providence to the city and State of New York. It has made one the Empire State of the Republic, and the other the commercial metropolis of the New World. Towering monuments ought to rise in its honor in front of the city hall in New York, and in front of the State house at Albany. And upon the State's coat-of-arms ought to be graven the mighty cataract circumnavigated by a canal-boat freighted with northwestern wheat.

The Erie canal extends from Buffalo, on Lake Erie, to Albany, on the Hudson river, and for more than 150 miles from Buffalo approaches within from 7 to 25 miles of the south shore of Lake Ontario. It is 350 miles in length, 7 feet in depth, and has a rise and fall of 644 feet, with locks 18 by 110 feet. From Oswego, on Lake Ontario, a canal of the same width and depth, having locks of the same size, extends to Syracuse, on the Erie canal. At present this Oswego branch cannot, of itself, materially relieve us from the pressure put upon our transportation by the Falls of Niagara, because all its freight must pass over the eastern portion of the Erie canal, and that portion, instead of being of greater, is unfortunately of less capacity than the western part. Nevertheless I am persuaded that hereafter this Oswego canal is destined to be a part of the great internal water route from the Northwest to the Atlantic. There is also a smaller canal extending from the point where Oneida river intersects the Oswego canal, across through the Oneida lakes to the point where Oneida creek intersects the Erie canal. But this cut-off transports no through-freights except such as pass over the Erie or Oswego canal.

The Welland canal is the result of another struggle with the great cataract. It lies wholly within the "Dominion of Canada," has a depth of 9 to 10 feet, locks 150 feet by 26½ feet, an aggregate fall of 331 feet, and an extreme length of 42 miles. It has two termini on Lake Erie, the shortest of the two lines between the lakes being 28 miles.

The Erie and Welland canals are, to the disgrace of our nation, the only artificial water communication hitherto established around Niagara falls. Inasmuch as the Erie canal connects Lake Erie with the tide-waters of the Hudson, its capacity and value are not limited by those of any artificial water connections. It can be made to float whatever can navigate the Hudson river. There is, then, practically no limit to its capability of improvement, except in the will and means of those who control it. But with the Welland canal the case is quite different. When your cargo of wheat is fairly through the Welland canal, and upon Lake Ontario, it can escape from that lake by water only through one of three channels. It must enter the Oswego canal, and thus find itself either at Syracuse or Oneida creek, on the very same Erie canal which it might have entered at Buffalo, in which case the dammed up commerce of the Northwest flows back upon itself and finds no relief; or it must pass directly down the St. Lawrence; or it must pass through the Rideau canal, from Kingston, at the foot of Lake Ontario, to Ottawa city, on Ottawa river, a distance of 127 miles, and thence down the Ottawa to Montreal, using the three short canals (Carillon, Blondeau, and Grenville) constructed by our enterprising Canadian neighbors to overcome the obstructions of that river.

Now, if your wheat takes the second route, and passes directly down the St. Lawrence from Lake Ontario, its trials have but commenced with the passage of the Welland canal; for it must descend two hundred and twenty-three feet before it meets tide-water, at Montreal, and on its way must encounter six canals all within the "Dominion of Canada:" first, Galops, two miles long with a fall of eight feet; second, the Point Iroquois, three miles long, with a fall of six feet; third, the Rapid Plat, four miles long, with a fall of eleven and one half feet; fourth, the Farren's Point, three fourths of a mile long, with a fall of four feet; fifth, the Cornwall, eleven and one half miles long, with a fall of forty-eight feet; and sixth, the Beauharnois, eleven and one fourth miles long, with a fall of eighty-two and one half feet—having in the aggregate a length of thirty-two and one half miles and a lockage of one hundred and sixty feet. It is true that your cargo of wheat descending the river very rapidly may avoid nine and three fourth miles, almost one third of these thirty-two miles of canal navigation; may "shoot the rapids" down twenty-nine and a half feet, instead of taking the first four of these canals; but it is also true that your descending wheat must pass through the remaining twenty-two and three fourths miles of these Canadian canals, with a lockage of one hundred and thirty and one half feet; and beside, the vessel which bears your cargo of wheat must on her return trip ascend through every mile of these canals unless, indeed, she has the speed of a comet. But if you attempt to carry your wheat through the Rideau canal you find that its summit is one hundred and sixty-five feet above Lake Ontario, so that you must, in order to reach Montreal, first lock up one hundred and sixty-five feet, and then lock down three hundred and ninety feet, besides falling down with the Ottawa river ninety-eight feet more. Worse than that, you find only five feet of water in these canals, so that you must transfer your cargo to canal boats built and owned in the "Dominion of Canada." At the foot of Lake Champlain is the Chambly canal, eleven and one half miles long and six feet deep.

The Champlain canal connects Lake Champlain with the Erie canal at a point about nine miles north of Albany. It has the same depth and width as the Erie canal, with a length of sixty-two miles, and may hereafter form an important link in a system of ship-canals from the lakes to the Hudson river.

These are all the improvements in water transportation hitherto made east of Lake Erie in the great northern route. All of them, except the Erie, Oswego, and Champlain canals, lie in the "Dominion of Canada." But before your cargo of wheat reaches Lake Erie it will have encountered the obstructions so well known to lake commerce as the St. Clair flats. The waters of Lake Huron flow through the St. Clair river into Lake St. Clair, and thence through the Detroit river into Lake Erie, and your wheat from Lake Michigan must take this course. The navigation of the two rivers is ample for the utmost dimensions of the future commerce of the Northwest. The obstacle is in Lake St. Clair itself. This lake is eighteen miles in length and in mean width about twelve miles. In the lake two miles from the mouth of St. Clair river, which enters it at its northern extremity, lies the obstruction called the St. Clair flats. It consists of an embankment, a mile in width, thrown across the track of navigation. The current, instead of sweeping directly forward through the lake, makes a detour on this bank of seven miles through a narrow circuitous channel, in its natural condition well nigh impassable to commerce.

All that was needed was to open a straight channel six thousand feet in length through this soft barrier, of sufficient depth and width, and to keep it open. In 1856 Congress appropriated $45,000 toward this work. President Pierce vetoed the appropriation; but it was passed over his veto. That small sum was at once expended, and sufficed to cut a channel two hundred and seventy feet wide at the top, one hundred and fifty feet wide at the bottom, and nine feet deep at low water. This was a great improvement, but it was quite inadequate to the wants of our present lake commerce and navigation. Now our vessels require thirteen and a half feet of water. The action of propeller wheels, winds and currents, in two years, upon this shallow channel, brought it into such a condition as to be literally a nuisance on this great national highway. The Thirty-Fifth Congress made an additional appropriation, but President Buchanan smothered the bill by a pocket veto. The Canadians meantime expended $20,000 for the improvement of these flats. A Michigan Senator asserted in 1860, upon the floor of the Senate, that the channel upon which that sum was expended was every inch of it in American soil. Canada, without one fiftieth of our interest in the improvement, had borne nearly half of the expense. This disgrace was too monstrous to be perpetual. In 1866 we appropriated $80,000 for the St. Clair flats, the prompt and judicious expenditure of which will afford immense relief to the commerce of Lakes Michigan, Superior, and Huron.

We come now to the last of these great obstructions of the navigation of the great lakes, the Falls of St. Mary, between Lakes Superior and Huron. This seems less important than the others only because, being nearer the western extremity of the great chain, it has impeded the interests of a smaller, less developed, and less populous territory. The Falls of St. Mary have obstructed the eastward-bound commerce of Lake Superior only. The Falls of Niagara obstruct not only this commerce, but also that of Lakes Michigan, Huron, and Erie. The descent from Lake Superior to Lake Huron is almost twenty-three feet. This descent is overcome by a ship-canal constructed by a New York corporation, aided by a munificent land grant received through the State of Michigan from the Federal Government. This canal is twelve feet in depth, nearly one mile in length, and has two locks, each seventy-five feet wide and three hundred and fifty feet long. The commerce which seeks this outlet and which has been developed by it is already large. But in view of the mineral resources of the shores of Lake Superior, the development of northern Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Dakota, and of the valley of the Red river of the North, the annexation of Canada, the construction of the North Pacific railroad and the consequent probable diversion of a portion of the silk and tea trade from its wonted highway from China and Japan to England, it would probably be no less vain to attempt to measure the commerce which will seek this outlet at the end of fifty years than it was fifty years ago to essay to predict the present commerce of Lake Erie.

The peculiarities of the Upper Mississippi navigation necessitate one species of improvement different from that required anywhere in the valley of the great lakes except at the St. Clair flats. Aside from the ice in winter, the difficulties consisted mainly of shifting sand-bars and snags and the Des Moines and Rock Island rapids. Here sand-bars and snags were to be overcome, not by permanent works like the Welland canal or the St. Mary's canal, but by annual expenditures made in accordance with the best possible plan of systematic improvement. It is necessary not only to clear the channel but to keep it cleared. This necessity will be perpetual, because the action of the river upon the loose lands which form its bed will be perpetual, while snags could not cease to vex its commerce as long as forests stood upon its banks or the banks of its upper tributaries.

In addition to this, works of another kind are necessary at the Rock Island and Des Moines rapids. Here we have to deal with rock. The first cost of these works will be greater, but the improvements, once made, will be more permanent. Both of these rapids were surveyed in 1837 by Lieutenant Robert E. Lee, who has since been more conspicuously though less creditably engaged upon the Potomac, Rapidan, Appomattox, and other Virginia rivers. In his report he states that the Des Moines rapids of Keokuk are 11,300 miles long, with a fall of 24,300 feet, and the river flows with great velocity over an irregular bed of blue limestone reaching from shore to shore, at all times covered with water, through which channels have been worn by the action of the current; that the rock lies in reefs, the passage of which becomes very difficult in low stages of the river in consequence of the shallowness of the water, its great fall and velocity, and the narrow and crooked character of the channel through them. "The upper or Rock river rapids," he says, "distant about one hundred and fifty miles from the Des Moines, commence fourteen miles above Rock Island and extend to its foot. Within this space the Mississippi falls 25,300 feet, descending over a rocky bed broken by reefs, which at some points reach entirely across the river, affording at low water a shallow channel, and, projecting at others from opposite sides, interlock and form a winding, difficult, and dangerous passage."

The history of Federal benefactions on the Upper Mississippi is very brief. Forty years ago the snags were the worst enemies of the navigator of the Mississippi and its branches. The national Government, soon after the enactment of the law of 1824 for the improvement of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, undertook to remove the snags from the rivers by means of snag-boats, and to prevent accessions to their number by cutting the trees from the banks before they should be washed into their channels. These efforts, persisted in for many years, added to the immense consumption of wood by the river steamers and the gradual clearing up of the country, have at length nearly subdued this most formidable obstruction. And posterity, in the peaceful use of these mighty western rivers, will see little to remind them of this terror of the hardy pioneers of river navigation. The theater of this warfare upon the snags included the Upper Mississippi. In 1836 Congress appropriated $75,000 for the improvement of the Upper Mississippi and the Missouri rivers.

In 1856 the sum of $200,000 was appropriated for the improvement of the Des Moines rapids over a veto of the President. General Warren, in his report of June 21, 1867, states that some cuts were made through the two islands in front of Dubuque in 1853 and prior thereto at the expense of the United States; and also that some improvements had been made on a small scale, from time to time, in different localities by private or municipal enterprise. On the 23d of June, 1866, Congress appropriated $200,000 for the Des Moines rapids and $100,000 for the Rock Island rapids, and able and energetic men are already at work organizing a victory over those natural enemies of the Northwest, which will prove most auspicious to the interests of Illinois, Minnesota, and Wisconsin.

I have now indicated all the improvements in water transportation heretofore made for the Northwest. Their utter inadequacy has stimulated the construction of the following auxiliary railway lines, namely, the Ogdensburg and Lake Champlain, New York Central, New York and Erie, Pennsylvania Central, and Baltimore and Ohio roads, with their numerous connections within the United States, and the Great Western and Grand Trunk roads in Canada. Having thus shown what has hitherto been done by the Federal Government to enable the Northwest to get to market, I will proceed to indicate those further improvements which are in my judgment demanded by the interests of these northwestern States and of the whole country.

An examination into the condition of the several freight lines from the Northwest to the sea at once discloses the cause of and remedy for our sufferings. In my opinion these two propositions rest upon established facts, and are beyond the reach of successful controversy. First, our products will not bear railway transportation to the sea-board. Second, our water carriage to the sea is now altogether inadequate.

The committee on canals in the late New York constitutional convention, in their reports to that body, record the following conclusion:

"The increased expense by rail is another insuperable objection. The actual cost to the railroad from Buffalo to New York for the past three years, as appears by the returns made under oath on behalf of the New York Central Railroad Company, has been double all the charges upon the Erie canal, and in excess of the water carriage from Chicago to New York."

They state the cost to the railroad per ton per mile and the canal freight and tolls per ton per mile for 1864, 1865, and 1866, as follows, namely: 1864, railroad 2 cents, canal, 1 $\frac{3}{4}$ cents; 1865, railroad 2 $\frac{5}{8}$ cents, canal 1 $\frac{3}{4}$ cents; 1866, railroads 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents, canal 1 $\frac{3}{4}$ cents.

Senator RAMSEY, in his speech delivered in the Senate in advocacy of the measure now under consideration, fixes the cost of transportation per ton per mile on the Mississippi river at 3 mills, and by railroad at 12 $\frac{1}{2}$ to 13 $\frac{1}{2}$ mills. Mr. McAlpine, late New York State engineer, in his report to the Legislature of that State in 1855, fixed the cost of transportation per ton per mile for railroads from 12 $\frac{1}{2}$ to 13 $\frac{1}{2}$ mills; canals, 4 to 6 mills; river, 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ to 3 mills; lake, 2 to 4 mills; and ocean, 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ to 6 mills. While it is impossible to give any particular figures which will be permanent or universal in their application, all who have inquired into the subject concur in the conclusion that the cost of transportation is one hundred per cent. greater by rail than by canal, and that the Northwest cannot be prosperous without some cheaper carriage to the sea than railway transportation.

Now, in 1865 the average value of one bushel of corn in New England, New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, taken together, was 90 cents, and in Illinois 29 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents. The difference is 60 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents, and must, I think, approximate to the cost of transportation. Mr. Robb, of Dubuque, puts the freight from the Mississippi to New York at 65 cents, and the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, [Mr. ELLIOT,] in his speech in the House on the last river and harbor bill, puts it at 65 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents. The canal committee of the New York convention put the cost of railway transportation at 2 $\frac{5}{8}$ cents per ton per mile for 1865. That makes the freight on one bushel of corn 1,000 miles 70 cents. The approximation of these results to each other brings irresistibly to my mind the conviction that the average freight of corn from the Northwest to New York in 1865 was virtually fixed by the railroads, and was not less than 65 cents. But such freights the Northwest cannot pay.

Practically the Mississippi river and the New York canals are our only water routes. I leave out of view the St. Lawrence, because it is under a foreign flag.

Citizens of western New York earnestly assert that their canals are sufficient for all our wants, and show us how many bushels of wheat they could transport for us in a year by keeping all their boats busy every day from the first of May to the first of December. But the committee on canals in the New York constitutional convention entertain a different opinion. The following is an extract from their report:

"Entertaining these views, your committee have devoted much of their time to the question as to what improvements, if any, are necessary, and whether the revenues will be sufficient for the purpose of such improvements without resort to taxation, or without any abandonment of the pledges of the existing constitution. Your committee found these questions very fully considered and discussed in the reports upon the subject made by the canal committee to the Legislature during its last session, and in the official reports of canal officers for several years past. They have also taken the examination of engineers, public officers, and practical operators who were deemed to possess the most reliable knowledge upon the subject.

"From these sources it appears that in the enlargement of the Erie canal about seventy miles of the eastern section (being the first portion enlarged) was constructed with what we term wall benches, and is from six to ten feet narrower on the bottom than the remainder of the channel. The reverse should be the case, and the eastern the wider portion, to accommodate the accumulation of boats as they come in from the other canals and approach the Hudson river. The removal of these wall benches, so as to make this portion of the canal as wide at least as the remaining portion, is indispensable to secure the full navigable capacity of the Erie canal. They are also of the opinion that the present locks upon the Erie, Oswego, and Cayuga, and Seneca canals do not furnish to the canals more than one quarter of such navigable capacity. The locks will not admit of the passage of boats carrying over about two hundred tons, and for considerable portions of the season of navigation they are not sufficient to accommodate the business now offered. The published estimates and tables, based upon an equal distribution of lockages through the entire season of such navigation, show that not over seventy-five or eighty per cent. of the capacity of the locks has yet been reached. But these estimates are fallacious in practice, as the main business is crowded into a much shorter period of time. The lockages cannot, in practice, be so distributed; and when boats are crowding for lockage the time of passing will always be more or less delayed by irregularities which unavoidably will occur. In the mode in which the business is now done the locks are taxed during the season, from harvest to near the close of navigation, to their full capacity, and at times beyond that. This is shown to have been the case for several years, resulting at times in serious and protracted delays in navigation."

In the introduction to the census report on agriculture for 1860 it is asserted, as the result of statistics given, that from three fifths to two thirds of our production is transported by railroad to our Eastern market. If this estimate is correct or any where near accuracy, what becomes of the assertion that the canals of New York are now adequate for our trade.

It is clear to my own mind that while we cannot spare our railway routes from the Northwest to the sea-board, it is absolutely indispensable that our great water routes should receive prompt and careful attention. Our interests in the present and immediate future, to say nothing of that more distant future so vast and brilliant as to overwhelm and bewilder the mind that attempts to grasp it, demand the prudent and expeditious improvement of all available water routes to the sea.

First, as I have said, the upper Mississippi must be made and kept clear, so that its trade may freely move to New Orleans or New York or Europe, as its exigencies or interest may require, so that wheat may be transported from Minnesota and western Wisconsin via New Orleans to New York for thirty-three cents per bushel instead of sixty-five, and for thirty-seven cents to Liverpool, when for the last five years it has averaged, in our currency, $1 90. And if, when the South shall have put on the beautiful garments of freedom, it shall be found that the trade of Europe and the Northwest can better meet at New Orleans than New York, there is no divine law, there ought to be no human law, against it. In the next place, the nuisance of the St. Clair flats, where stranded propellers so often detain impatient fleets, ought to be abated. A wide and deep channel should be promptly made, and henceforth perpetually maintained, so that our wheat ships may plow the way not only to Buffalo, Oswego, and Ogdensburg, and eventually to New York, but also to London and Liverpool, if the day shall come, as I doubt not it will come, when Europe and the Northwest will make their exchanges on the Thames or Mersey or Lake Michigan, with no tribute to middle-men in New York.

The third measure necessary for our relief is the excavation of a ship-canal, through American soil, around Niagara falls. This project encounters most violent opposition from interests located at Buffalo, and between Buffalo and Syracuse on the Erie canal. We shall presently discover the secret of this hostility. Its enemies tell us in the first place that the ship-canal is not needed, because the harbor accommodations and elevating facilities of Buffalo are adequate to the transshipment of all our grain, and the New York canals to its transportation. But if the history of the eastward movement of our grain and meal has demonstrated anything, it has demonstrated that the New York canals are not sufficient for its transportation. And as I have shown, the canal committee of the New York constitutional convention declares that they are not sufficient. If the canals are inadequate what relief can we find in the character of the Buffalo harbor, or the capacity of Buffalo elevators? The adversaries of this project tell us, in the second place, that it will be unconstitutional for the national Government to attempt it. The friends of this project find its constitutional warrant in the power to regulate commerce among the States, and some also in the war power, and in the power to lay and collect taxes in order to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the country.

The grant of the power to regulate commerce is made in these words: "The Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States." The opponents of this measure say that the power to regulate is not the power to relieve, or aid, or improve, or advance. But the power to regulate foreign commerce and the power to regulate domestic commerce are conveyed by the same sentence, the same words; and the word "regulate" confers no power for the benefit of foreign commerce which it does not also confer, to precisely the same extent, for the benefit of commerce between the States. If, therefore, the word does not authorize the relief, assistance, or advancement of commerce, internal as well as external, every single expenditure of the Government, from the first session of the First Congress to the last session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress, for beacons, light-houses, breakwaters, harbors, the coastwise trade, the fisheries, and for removing obstructions to navigation from seaports and their approaches, and from creeks, rivers, sounds, and bays, has been made in violation of the Constitution. These expenditures have all been made for the relief, promotion, and benefit of commerce, external or internal; and their constitutionality can be vindicated on no other ground unless by a resort to the other powers to which I have referred. If it be unconstitutional for Congress to provide for the construction of this link in a chain of connection between more than twenty different States, it was also unconstitutional for Congress to make any one of these expenditures, hundreds if not thousands in number. The opponents of this measure tell us that the Convention which framed the Constitution rejected Dr. Franklin's motion to give Congress "power to provide for cutting canals when deemed necessary." But Mr. SHERMAN's objection shows what the proposition really was. Mr. SHERMAN said:

"The expense in such cases will fall on the United States, and the benefit accrue to the places where the canals may be cut."

This shows that the scope of Dr. Franklin's motion embraced not merely canals connecting several States, but also the shortest local canals which could not be links in the commerce between the several States. And certainly the incident seems to afford but little aid in the construction of the general power to regulate commerce conferred by the Constitution. We are told, too, that the construction of this canal will involve injustice to the State of New York, by impairing the value of her Erie and Oswego canals, constructed at such great expense for our benefit. But our answer to that is, that we have already paid her in tolls on these canals millions of dollars more than she has expended in their construction, repairs, and operation. The report of the canal committee, to which I have already referred, contains these words:

"The canals we propose to have improved (including the Erie and Oswego) are creditors to the amount of over thirty-eight million dollars."

And yet in 1866 New York received as tolls $4,436,689, most of which was paid by the West. Senator Harris, of New York, in the debate on the Niagara ship-canal bill, in July, 1866, stated that the State of New York had expended on her canals, in construction, repairs, enlargement, superintendence, and interest, $166,000,000, and had not received back in all over $90,000,000. But Senator Howe, of Wisconsin, promptly read from the report of the New York canal board, made March 12, 1866, the following statement:

"No direct taxation upon the people on account of the canal remains to-day unpaid; but on the contrary the treasury of the State has been reimbursed principal and interest in full, and has now in its coffers nearly one million dollars from the canal revenue in advance of any taxation for canal purposes. The Erie canal account shows the gratifying result of a credit of over nine millions above all cost to the State."

Furthermore, the auditor of New York reports to the late constitutional convention that the entire cost of all the canals and feeders, both productive and unproductive, and of maintenance and repairs, with interest at seven per cent., amounts to $210,093,502 25, and the entire income, with interest, to $202,619,510 08, leaving the canals debtors to the State in the sum of $7,473,992 27. But the Champlain, Erie, Oswego, and Cayuga and Seneca canals, which alone carry western freights, are creditors to the State to an amount exceeding, as I have stated, thirty-eight million dollars. For that enterprise which gave to this region the inestimable benefits of the Erie canal our debt of gratitude to New York is indeed very great. Our debt in money was long ago all paid, and vastly overpaid. She now enjoys an annual revenue of $3,000,000 from canals, the cost of which we have long since paid. But I shall presently show you that New York herself has an infinitely greater interest in the construction of this ship-canal than any other single State. I shall show you that it will enable her, if she is wise, to perpetuate her preëminence as the Empire State and that of her great city as the emporium of American commerce.

In my judgment, this ship-canal ought to have a depth of fourteen feet, and to admit the passage of vessels of fifteen hundred tons burden. The Welland canal has only a depth of nine to ten feet and is insufficient for vessels of over four hundred tons burden.

How shall it be constructed? Can the Northwest, can the nation, afford to have this highway subject to the control of any single State? Can we permit any one State to fix and regulate the tolls, to discriminate directly or indirectly in favor of her own citizens at the expense of other States, to fill her own treasuries with the wealth of contributions levied upon the industry of the Northwest? Can we intrust such powers to the still more dangerous hands of a private corporation, whether created by State or Federal law? In my judgment this would be suicidal folly. I think the canal should be subject to no tolls, unless possibly enough to defray the cost of its operation and repairs. I think it should be the work of the General Government. How shall the General Government construct it? Two plans are proposed. The first is to delegate the powers of the Government in the premises to a private corporation created by the laws of some State; the other is to construct it by using the engineer's and quartermaster's departments of the Army. The first was the plan of the bill which passed the House of Representatives of the Thirty-Ninth Congress. The second is the plan of the bill now pending. Each has its advantages. Without stopping now to discuss them I will say that my mind strongly inclines to the plan of this bill, and I earnestly hope it may become a law. The cost of this work ought to be no fatal obstacle to its execution. Its friends ask for $12,000,000. The corn crop of Illinois in 1865 was 177,095,858 bushels. The Erie canal tolls on that crop alone at the rate then levied, 4³/₈ cents per bushel, would have been $8,558,730 69, more than two thirds of the amount required to build the canal in one year.

The next improvement to be made after the Niagara ship-canal is a ship canal of fourteen feet depth from Oswego to the navigable waters of the Hudson, to be constructed by the enlargement of the present canal. In my judgment this canal, too, should be subject to no tolls except such as shall be necessary for its maintenance and operation. In my judgment this, too, should be a national work. It seems to me utterly impossible to overestimate its value to the Republic. But I confess that the State of New York has an advantage here which, wisely used, will inevitably perpetuate her commercial supremacy and that of her great metropolis. She already has a canal seven feet deep from Oswego to the Hudson, with a cut-off of smaller dimensions by the way of Oneida river, lakes, and creek. If she shall promptly and adequately enlarge this she will occupy the whole ground, and make the Northwestern States her tributaries for many generations. But if she will not act promptly in this, let her surrender her canal from the Oswego to the Hudson river, for which we have already so largely overpaid her, to the United States, to be transformed at the cost of the nation into a great national highway, open to the commerce of all the States, subject to the control of none. While New York would thus lose three millions of tolls she would gain unspeakably more in the advantages of her improved and assured position as the Empire State of the Republic.

The completion of a ship-canal around the Falls of Niagara, and of another from Oswego to the Hudson, and the employment of steam-tugs upon those canals, will enable the wheat ships of Lake Michigan to reach the Atlantic without touching foreign territory. And if the experiments now in progress shall result in the utilization of petroleum for fuel, so as to enable us to shake off the heavy burden of coal which now so hampers ocean steamers on long voyages, there will be nothing to prevent American propellers, laden with wheat in Lake Michigan, from discharging their cargoes in Liverpool without ever touching anything foreign except the Liverpool docks.

There are certain other improvements that will at some future time demand the attention of the people of the United States if not of the Government. They are the improvement of the St. Lawrence from Lake Ontario to Montreal; the construction of a ship-canal from the St. Lawrence to Lake Champlain; the enlargement of the canal from Lake Champlain to the Hudson; the opening of a water route from Lake Huron to the Hudson, by way of the French and Ottawa rivers in Canada, and another from the Georgian bay to Lake Ontario. But we shall find it convenient to defer all or most of these until the American flag floats over the "Dominion of Canada."

There is another improvement auxiliary to all these demanded as well by the interests of the Northwest as by the interests of the whole Republic. It is steam navigation from the waters of the valley of the St. Lawrence to those of the valley of the Mississippi. The recent surveys of Generals Wilson and Warren show that the Rock river and Fox river routes are practicable, as well as that of the Illinois and Michigan canal. These works will be pre-eminently national works. They are required for military and naval as well as commercial uses. One or more of them ought to be constructed by the Federal Government, so that the nation may use them, paying tribute to no States. But if the Federal Government shall neglect these works the States of Illinois and Wisconsin ought not to throw away this golden opportunity. I trust that very many here present will see the day when steamers will pass from Lake Michigan to New Orleans. When that day shall come, and the way to the Atlantic and the Gulf shall have been cleared, figures will indeed be inadequate to measure the rapidity of your growth. Every dime expended by the nation upon these great works will return to it a dollar in your developed ability to meet the burdens of the national debt, in better prices for the farmers of the West, and in cheaper food for the manufacturers of the East. And above all, better than all, every expenditure so made by the Federal Government will come back again, freighted with priceless blessings for a consolidated and perpetuated Union.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire, before the House adjourns, to have some understanding in regard to the time which it is proposed this debate shall run.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that to-morrow being private bill day this bill will come up after the morning hour, unless the House shall set aside private business during the morning hour. By the rules, on private bill day the morning hour cannot be dispensed with except by a majority of the House.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that after the morning hour to-morrow the rest of the day will be devoted to speeches in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Several gentlemen desire to speak in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on general topics.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Before proceeding to address the House, if I address it at all—and I do not wish to do so this evening—I would like to come to some understanding when the debate shall be closed on this bill. I would ask my colleague, [Mr. JUDD,] who I understand desires to speak, if he would like to proceed this evening?

Mr. JUDD. I should prefer not to proceed this evening, and I hope there will be no special time fixed for closing this debate. There are several gentlemen who desire to be heard upon the bill, and it is a measure of sufficient public importance to be fairly discussed in the House. I think this is really "public business;" I may be mistaken, but I think so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed of eight gentlemen who desire to speak upon this subject in addition to those who have already spoken.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Well, Mr. Speaker, so far as the public business is concerned, so far as the appropriation bills are concerned, it is now the middle of January and the House has only passed three of them; the longest bills, and those that will take up most time, are yet behind, and have not gone to the Senate. It is a matter of the first importance that we should act upon those bills so that the Senate may have them, because they have to be passed before the 4th of March. I hope it will be understood that the debate on this bill shall close at three o'clock to-morrow. That will afford my colleague and other gentlemen an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. MAYNARD. Cannot those bills go over till the next Congress?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Which bills?

Mr. MAYNARD. The appropriation bills.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Not very well.

Mr. MAYNARD. Why not?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Because I presume there will not be much business done at the next session of Congress; I hope not, at any rate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would ask the gentleman from New York, [Mr. VAN HORN,] who has charge of this bill, at what time he expects to demand the previous question upon it?

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. I have no desire to hasten the close of debate on this bill. I would be glad to see it go on to-morrow after the morning hour for two hours and a half. That will be satisfactory to me. There are several gentlemen who desire to speak fifteen or twenty minutes or half an hour, and I think that will be long enough. I wish to suit the temper of the House and accommodate as many gentlemen as possible.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would like to make a suggestion in behalf of the Committee of Ways and Means, as our chairman [Mr. SCHENCK] is absent on account of ill health. The tariff bill, which is in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union as the unfinished business there, ought to receive early consideration that it may go to the Senate. It will be remembered that it is not a general revision of the tariff, but relates to a few exceptional articles in regard to which the present law seems, in our judgment, to require some amendment, and some articles that have been brought to our attention by changes in processes and in the course of trade. I hope the House will not so shape its affairs as that we shall have no opportunity to press that bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cook] to give notice that he would call up the contested-election case to-morrow after the morning hour.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. What case is that?

The SPEAKER. The case of Switzler vs. Anderson, from Missouri.

Mr. COOK. I will let that go over; I will not call it up to-morrow.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I believe, from what I can gather from members around me, that we can come to an understanding by which we can have a vote on this bill to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know whether that understanding can be had unless we can know how the time to-morrow will be occupied. I desire, in the interest of my constituents, to make some remarks upon this subject. And I cannot tell at what time to-morrow, if at all, I can obtain the floor for that purpose. I trust, therefore, that no arrangement will be made upon this subject to-night; we can to-morrow control the business of the House as well as we can do it to-day.

Mr. BLAINE. Will this subject come up to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I would suggest to my colleague [Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois] that "sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." There is no use to attempt to say to-day what shall be done to-morrow. If I had charge of this bill, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN HORN] has, I would not want to fix three o'clock or even four o'clock to-morrow to vote upon it, but I would allow such time to be devoted to it as the House might be willing to give.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. It is not only very proper but very usual for the House to fix the time for closing the debate upon any particular subject. If we give to-morrow to the discussion of this bill we will have devoted two days to its consideration.

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. I would suggest that we renew the debate upon this bill immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. That will require unanimity.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I object, and call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order having been called for, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURNE] must proceed with his remarks or surrender the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I do not yield for any such motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. My colleague on the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] desires the unanimous consent of the House to take up a bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Not quite. Mr. INGERSOLL. I insist upon my demand for the regular order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move to proceed to business upon the Speaker's table, for the purpose of taking up the bill for the relief of the destitute poor of the District of Columbia.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I object.

The SPEAKER. It is in order to move to proceed to business upon the Speaker's table after the expiration of the morning hour, and that motion will take a member from the floor.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Very well; then I make that motion.

SUPERINTENDENT OF EXPORTS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the House of the 6th instant, relative to postponing the time of the discontinuance of the office of superintendent of exports and drawbacks at the port of New York, &c.; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

MILWAUKEE HARBOR.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, presented a report of the sub-committee in regard to Milwaukee harbor; and the same was ordered to be printed for the use of the committee, and recommended.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted for one week to Mr. ECKLEY.

SERVICE ON A COMMITTEE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. DAWES was excused from service on the select committee appointed to accompany the remains of the late Mr. Finney from the city of New York to his former residence, and Mr. GLOSSBRENNER was appointed in his place by the Speaker.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, to proceed to business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. SPALDING. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS.

The following petitions were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. HILL: The petition of Robert B. Clark, Rowland Johnson, and 68 citizens of Orange, New Jersey, asking for the revision of the naturalization laws.

By Mr. LINCOLN: The petition of Catharine Duffy, asking for a pension.

By Mr. LYNCH: The petition of Lorenzo Day, for a pension.

Also, the petition of Isaac Bickford, for a pension.

Also, the petition of T. C. Hersey, for an amendment of the tariff.

By Mr. MCKEE: The petition of Dupey & Company, of Flemingsburg, Kentucky, for change in revenue laws.

By Mr. MOORE: A petition from owners and masters of vessels of Baltimore, Maryland, representing over six hundred vessels, praying Congress to protect all engaged in navigation from illegal exactions by State and municipal corporations.

By Mr. MORRELL: The petition of Elizabeth Radigan, widow of John Radigan, company A, forty-ninth regiment Pennsylvania volunteers, for pension to herself and child.

Also, the petition of Mary Aurand, widow of Joseph R. Aurand, company F, seventh regiment Indiana cavalry, for a pension for herself and two children.

Also, the petition of John A. Parker, company K, fifth Kansas cavalry, for a pension.

By Mr. SCHENCK: The petition of the Ohio Chicory Company, asking for an increase of duty on chicory.

Also, the petition of Commodore Charles Steedman, United States Navy, praying Congress to grant him relief in the settlement of accounts while acting as paymaster, &c.

By Mr. WARD: The petition of citizens of Hume, Alleghany county, New York, in favor of the reduction of taxation and public expenditures.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 15, 1869.

Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Interior, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 6th instant, correspondence relating to supplies of stationery to the Patent Office and the contract for the same; which was referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Congressional Printer, communicating his annual report, showing the condition of the public printing, binding, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to the application of Hugh McCormick for additional allowance for his services as disbursing clerk in the Patent Office; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to printing the maps and illustrations accompanying the annual report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. POMEROY. The Committee on Public Lands last year reported in favor of printing those very maps, but owing to some disagreement between the Committee on Public Lands and the Committee on Printing they were not printed. I wish to call the attention of the Senate at an early day to the subject again. A most important part of our public service connected with the public lands would be promoted if we only had correct maps published. We have not got them, and cannot get them until these maps are printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What disposition does the Senator propose to make of this communication?

Mr. POMEROY. I move that it be printed, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands. The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented three petitions of citizens of New York, one of which was signed by Henry Ward and Theodore Tilton, praying that the right of suffrage be extended to women in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the memorial of Rev. Charles King, D. D., remonstrating against the removal of the political disabilities of rebel officers of the State of Virginia; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONKLING. I present the memorial of a number of citizens and merchants of the State of New York, remonstrating against the passage of a joint resolution amendatory of the act entitled "An act to provide for an American line of mail and emigrant passenger steamships between New York and one or more European ports." The memorialists set forth at length arguments on this subject, going to show that the passage of this resolution will inflict an injury upon commerce and upon the public interests. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE presented the petition of Agnes Ellen Kleiss, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Daniel Cole, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HENDRICKS presented the petition of Mon-go-se-quah and sixty other Miami Indians of Indiana, praying to be established in their rights under certain treaties made June 5, 1854; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HOWARD. I present a petition of numerous persons, the most of whom are Indians or of Indian descent, resident in the State of Michigan, belonging heretofore to the Ottawa and Chippewa tribes, alleging that their affairs have fallen into confusion as connected with the Government, and that great injustice has been done them by the officers of the United States who have had the management of their affairs, and asking that a full and thorough investigation may be made of the relations between them and the United States in reference to their reserves and other property. I move that this petition be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY presented three petitions of citizens of the United States, praying that the right of suffrage be extended to women; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. POMEROY. I also present a petition from ladies in West Royalton, Massachusetts, reading as follows:

"We, the undersigned, want the right of suffrage."

I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of Dempsey Nash, praying a removal of the civil disabilities imposed on him by acts of Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOWE presented the petition of William A. Wheeler praying to be reimbursed the amount of his losses on several contracts made with the Navy Department during the years 1863 to 1866; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the petition of William Pitt Putnam and David Putnam, praying to be relieved as sureties on a bond to Isaac N. Cook, additional paymaster United States Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CATTELL presented the petition of captains and owners of vessels, citizens of different States, representing that States, cities, and sea-port towns have passed laws exacting harbor tonnage tax, pilot, license, and half pilotage laws, &c., contrary to the laws of Congress regulating commerce, and praying the intervention of Congress to protect all engaged in navigation from illegal exactions; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. WHYTE, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of John Robb be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. PATTERSON, of Tennessee, it was Ordered, That the memorial and papers of Susan Coady and others be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. THAYER. I presented a memorial the other day praying for relief in the case of Chauncy A. Horr, and had it referred to the Committee on Claims. It should have gone to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I move now that the memorial and accompanying papers be taken from the Committee on Claims and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 404) providing for the disposition of certain papers relating to military claims accruing in the department of the West, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; which was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 679) to amend an act granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military road from Eugene City to the eastern boundary of said State, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred a petition of citizens of the United States, praying the passage of an act authorizing the Postmaster General to contract with the National Steamship Company for the conveyance of the mails between New York and Europe, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads; which was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 907) to provide for the sale of certain lands and lots on Sea Island in Beaufort district, South Carolina, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. WILLEY, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the memorial of Mahlon Loomis, M. D., praying an appropriation to enable him to demonstrate his discovery of telegraphing, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the memorials of the Lake Shore Grape Growers' Association, praying the enactment of a law to grant letters-patent on new horticultural varieties, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Alpheus C. Gallahue, praying an extension of his patent for an improvement in machines for pegging boots and shoes, reported a bill (S. No. 781) for the relief of Alpheus C. Gallahue; which was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1558) to amend an act entitled "An act to prescribe the mode of obtaining evidence in case of contested elections," approved February 19, 1851, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 568) explanatory of the act entitled "An act declaring the title to land warrants in certain cases," reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills and joint resolutions, reported adversely thereon:

A bill (S. No. 234) to authorize the removal of causes in certain cases from the district courts to the circuit courts of the United States;

A bill (S. No. 245) to fix the terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the district of Oregon, and increase the salary of the judge thereof;

A bill (S. No. 254) to change the terms of the district court of the United States for the district of Maine;

A bill (S. No. 294) to regulate procedure in cases of impeachment, and to enforce the orders and judgments of the Senate in such cases, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. No. 87) to further define the qualifications of members of Congress;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 158) to extend the act establishing the Court of Claims to the claims arising under the act of the 2d of March, 1861, providing for the payment of the expenses of the Washington and Oregon war of 1855 and 1856; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 167) in relation to the prosecution of claims before the Executive Departments.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 133) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, declaring that no person elected President or Vice President who has once served as President shall ever be eligible to either office, have instructed me to report it back to the Senate with a recommendation that it do not pass. I would state that the same committee at a former Congress reported in favor of that resolution, and that I am in favor of it now; but a majority of the committee are adverse at this time to the resolution, and I report it under the instructions of the committee adversely.

The same committee, to whom was referred a joint resolution (S. R. No. 86) declaring the adoption of the amendment to the Constitution known as article fourteen, have directed me to report it back, with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed, the two Houses of Congress having already passed a concurrent resolution to the same effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In order to relieve the Calendar from these adverse reports, if there be no objection the bills reported adversely will be considered as indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SUMNER. There are some that I should like to look into. I am not sure about all of them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to have the bill providing for additional terms of the district court in the State of Oregon, and for raising the salary of the district judge excepted. I desire to take the sense of the Senate on that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports can only be considered at this time by unanimous consent.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Perhaps they had better go on the Calendar.

Mr. SUMNER. They had better go on the Calendar, and some day they can all be called up.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 8) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills and joint resolutions, reported adversely thereon:

A bill (S. No. 111) to regulate the elective franchise in the United States;

A bill (S. No. 124) to enforce the several provisions of the Constitution abolishing slavery, declaring the immunities of citizens, and guarantying a republican form of government by securing the elective franchise to colored citizens;

A bill (S. No. 650) to enforce the several provisions of the Constitution abolishing slavery, declaring the immunities of citizens, and guarantying a republican form of government by securing the elective franchise to citizens deprived of it by reason of race, color, or previous condition;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 59) submitting to the Legislatures of the several States a proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 179) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following petitions and resolutions, asked to be discharged from their further consideration:

A petition of General James S. Brisbin and thirty thousand colored men, praying for negro suffrage in the State of Kentucky;

A petition of officers of the Pennsylvania

Equal Rights League, praying such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States that there shall be no legislation against any portion of the inhabitants on account of race or color, and that all such legislation now existing be declared void ;

Two petitions of citizens of the United States, praying Congress to adopt a law investing all men with the equal exercise of the elective franchise in all the States ;

Two petitions of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying the passage of a law investing all men with the equal exercise of the elective franchise in all the States ;

A petition of the delegates of the colored people of Kentucky, praying Congress to grant black men the right of suffrage in that State ;

Three petitions of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States as to provide that there shall be no legislation or the enforcement of any law, rule, or regulation within the United States or Territories against any portion of the inhabitants on account of race, color, or birth ;

A petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying the adoption of a law investing all men with the equal exercise of the elective franchise in all the States ;

A petition of the Pennsylvania Equal Rights League, praying an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to secure to all the citizens of the several States equal political rights, privileges, and immunities without regard to class, creed, birth, race, or color ;

A petition of citizens of Georgia, praying the adoption of measures for the protection of their rights as American citizens ;

A petition of citizens of the United States, praying the adoption of a law investing all men with the equal exercise of the elective franchise in all the States ;

A petition from citizens of the United States, living in Louisiana, praying an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to secure to all citizens equal political rights ;

A petition from professors and students of Lincoln University, Oxford, Pennsylvania, praying for an amendment to the Constitution which will secure to all citizens equal political rights ; and

A resolution adopted at a mass meeting held in the city of New York, in favor of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States that will recognize and guarantee the right to vote and hold office to all persons, both white and black.

Mr. SUMNER. What disposition does the Senator propose of those papers ?

Mr. STEWART. I ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of these petitions. We have reported a constitutional amendment on the subject.

Mr. THAYER. Providing for universal suffrage ?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir. The amendment reported is very short ; I ask that it be read.

The Secretary read the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary to Senate joint resolution No. 8. The committee propose the following article of amendment to the Constitution :

ART. 15. The right of citizens of the United States to vote and hold office shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or any State, on account of race, color, or previous condition or servitude. And Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of this article by appropriate legislation.

WILLIAM H. BAGLEY.

Mr. STEWART. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1673) to relieve William H. Bagley, of Wake county, North Carolina, to report it back and recommend its passage. This is simply to remove the disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment upon the clerk of the court in North Carolina, and I should like very much to have it passed now. This man has been appointed by the supreme court, and they desire to have him enter upon the discharge of his duties.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLUMBIA INSTITUTION REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print additional copies of the report of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage. This resolution was once passed by the Senate, but recommended to the committee on my motion. I was under the impression that the expense of printing the report would be much larger than was supposed, but I find it will not. I therefore ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows :

Resolved, That the Superintendent of Public Printing be, and he is hereby, authorized to print fifteen hundred copies of the report of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, with its appendix, for the use of the Institution.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 860) for the relief of Luther C. McNeal, late postmaster at Lancaster, Erie county, New York, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HENDRICKS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 779) for the relief of certain Miami Indians of the State of Indiana ; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 780) for the relief of William Pitt Putnam and David Putnam, of Ohio ; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. YATES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 782) to enable the people of Colorado to form a constitution and State government and for the admission of said State into the Union on equal footing with the original States ; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWARD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 198) in relation to certain testimony to be used before the court of inquiry now in session in the case of General Dyer, chief of ordnance ; which was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. HOWARD. I ask that this resolution be passed at this time. There is a necessity for it, I am informed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think it had better lie over until to-morrow. I want to look into it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution cannot be considered to-day.

CREDENTIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the credentials of Hon. William A. Buckingham, elected a Senator by the Legislature of the State of Connecticut for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1869 ; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 860) for the relief of Luther C. McNeal, late postmaster at Lancaster, Erie county, New York, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

GRAND RIVER BAND OF INDIANS.

Mr. HOWARD submitted the following resolution ; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to :

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to communicate to the Senate a statement of the tracts of lands selected by members of the Grand River band of the Ottawa and Chippewa Indians under treaty with those tribes of July 31, 1855, with the lists of the names of such Indians of said Grand River bands as were under said treaty entitled to land, with the date of making out said lists, and the date at which such selections were made ; and also a full list of the names of persons belonging to said Grand River band, to whom patents have been issued, and whether and at what time said patents were actually delivered to the respective patentees ; and also whether any and what tracts of land lying within the several townships withdrawn from sale for the use of said Grand River band have been sold to persons other than members of said band, with the dates of such sales.

POLICE OF THE CAPITOL AND GROUNDS.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, I feel it my duty to call the attention of the Senate to an affair which occurred last evening, about nine o'clock, upon the sidewalk adjoining the Capitol grounds, near the Senate Chamber. An aged and very respectable gentleman—I may say he is the father of the gentleman with whom I have rooms here on Capitol hill—walking quietly on the sidewalk adjoining the Capitol grounds, about nine o'clock last evening, was knocked down, severely wounded, left senseless on the sidewalk, and robbed. It occurred so near the Capitol building, upon the very sidewalk adjoining the grounds, that it becomes a question of personal safety which may concern not only the citizens of Washington but any member of the Senate, and I therefore feel it to be my duty to call the attention of the Senate to the subject. I have drawn a resolution, if it meet the approbation of the Senate, asking the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to inquire into the circumstances of this case and to see what, if anything, should be done for the better security of the Capitol grounds and better police regulations. I send the resolution to the desk, and, if there be no objection, I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. SUMNER. Let it be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows :

Whereas at about the hour of nine o'clock of last evening a respectable citizen of Washington, aged sixty years and upward, upon the sidewalk adjoining the Capitol grounds, between First street west and the Senate wing of the Capitol, was knocked down and robbed, and left wounded and senseless upon the sidewalk ;

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be authorized to inquire into the facts, to send for persons and papers, and to report what measures should be taken for the better police regulations for the security of the Capitol.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the resolution is a very proper one, and I hope the committee will also see if we cannot get a sufficient police force to keep the Capitol and the Capitol grounds free from beggar boys. The Capitol is perfectly invested with them. I was accosted by six in going from my committee-room to the door of the Capitol the other evening. If we have not a sufficient police force to keep them out I think we ought to improve it.

The resolution was adopted.

AMOUNTS PAID TO RAILROAD COMPANIES.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1460.

Mr. SUMNER. What does that relate to ?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is the copper bill.

Mr. SUMNER. I would not bring that up to-day. There is a little bill which I should like to call up.

Mr. CHANDLER. I cannot help it. I must insist on my motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to it until we get through with the morning business.

Mr. CHANDLER. I thought you were through. You have been passing bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is in order in preference to anything else.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to offer a resolution of inquiry, and after that is disposed of I shall make no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of the Senator from Ohio will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to the Senate the amount paid by the United States to the Baltimore and Ohio railroad for transportation of men and supplies each year from 1861 to 1866 inclusive, designating separately the sums paid for such transportation from Washington to the Relay House, and also the rate of such transportation.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. CAMERON. Before that resolution passes I desire to say a word upon it, and to move an amendment to it in some words like these: that the Secretary of the Treasury be directed also to state the amount paid to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company above the price paid to other railroad companies for the same services.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think that amendment is necessary, because we know what that rate is.

Mr. CAMERON. I think it is necessary.

Mr. SHERMAN. We know the rate that has been paid to other companies; but as there is some dispute in regard to the rate paid to the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, and I do not wish to do any injustice to them, I should like to ascertain the rate.

Mr. CAMERON. The Senator's resolution, as it stands, will not obtain the information that I desire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania, to add to the resolution:

And that he also state the amounts paid to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company in excess of what was paid to other railroad companies for similar services.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHYTE. I desire to add the Northern Central also.

Mr. CAMERON. I will accept that.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I should like to hear the resolution read as amended.

The Chief Clerk read it, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to the Senate the amount paid by the United States to the Baltimore and Ohio railroad for transportation of men and supplies each year from 1861 to 1866 inclusive, designating separately the sums paid for such transportation from Washington to the Relay House, and also the rates of transportation. And that he also state the amounts paid to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company in excess of what was paid to other railroad companies for similar services.

Mr. CAMERON. Now, Mr. President, I desire to state that in 1866 my colleague offered a resolution inquiring into the amount paid by the Government to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company for services rendered, to which there has been no reply. Shortly after I came here, in 1867, I introduced a resolution which received the sanction of the Senate, asking for the same information, to which the then Senator from Maryland (Mr. Johnson) added the Pennsylvania Central and the Northern Central. That, it was supposed, would bring some additional information that I did not want; but that is not so. The object I have in view is this: the War Department, in 1861, called together the principal railroad presidents of the country and made an arrangement with them by which they were to receive two thirds of the ordinary rates charged by the different companies as a full compensation for their services in transportation for the Government during the war. The other railroads have stood by that arrangement, but the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, as I understand—I do not know the fact, but I am so informed—have got one third more than was paid to any other railroad company in the United States. That belief, in my mind, is very much strengthened by the difficulty I have had in getting that information. Three years have passed since it was called for by the Senate; it is two years since I made the application myself; and yet there is no response. Why it is I do not know. If the War Department, or the Treasury Department, or the President, or anybody else, gave the Baltimore and Ohio railroad one third more than other railroads received it is right that the country should know why they received so much more. If they earned it, very well. If they did not, we ought to know it. That is my object.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will inquire if there is not a rule which requires that resolutions calling for information shall be considered by some committee with a view to ascertain the amount of labor in the Department necessary to furnish that information. I presume, though I know nothing about it, that this information has not been given, because it would require a vast amount of labor in the Department. I suppose that the business of that railroad company during the progress of the war was of enormous magnitude, and that a detailed statement of it furnished to the Senate would require the entire force of the Department for a very considerable time to furnish it.

Now I should like to know of the Senator from Pennsylvania what course the Congress of the United States can take, supposing the statement made by him to be in all respects accurate. Can Congress now pass a law which will enable the Secretary of the Treasury to recover the amount that has been paid over and above the contract price, and to pay it back again into the Treasury? I should like to know before a great labor is imposed upon any of the Departments what is the practical good to be arrived at by securing the information. If the object is simply to make an attack upon a railroad company here, I think it is not the business of the Senate of the United States to pander to purposes of that sort, and as a representative from the great Northwest I will not consent to it unless the public good calls for it.

I have heard the criticism of the Senator from Ohio on the conduct of the Baltimore and Ohio road; and it has not changed my judgment in regard to the great importance of that mighty channel of commerce to the Northwest. I feel that the men who invested their money, who undertook the great enterprise of constructing that road and the Pennsylvania Central road across the Alleghany mountains, overcoming difficulties that it was supposed prior to that time could not be overcome by the most skillful engineering, have contributed a great benefit to the commerce and business and wealth of the Northwest; and for no purpose except the public good will I consent that the Senate shall become a party to an attack upon these great works—works that are of so much benefit to our part of the country. And when I speak in regard to the benefit of these works to the great West I would extend the same remark to the roads that go through the State of New York, all contributing to bring the trade and commerce of the interior to the sea-shore.

If this be a controversy between different railroad companies I hope that the Senate will not become a party to it. I do not ask that there shall be a report in regard to the Northern Central road. I have heard much said in regard to that road. I have heard much said in regard to the Baltimore and Ohio road with respect to the peculiar privileges that they were supposed to enjoy during the progress of the war; but I suppose that the accounts are closed, the money has been paid by the Department with a full knowledge of all the facts; and I cannot conceive of any state of case in which Congress can pass a law to recover any of that money again. If it be the purpose here to raise a comparison between railroad companies to gratify an idle curiosity or in order to benefit any particular road at the expense of another, I shall not give my vote in favor of any such measure.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Indiana in all that he has said eulogistic of these great railroad companies. I believe I understand just as well as any other Senator does the services which they have rendered the country. I am not going to detract an iota from that; nor have I any personal interest in this matter. Two years ago, when I offered my resolution on this subject, the Senator from Maryland, (Mr. Johnson,) supposing that the resolution was invidious in its character, added the Northern Central and the Pennsylvania railroads. I happen to have some interest in those roads, though not so much as gentlemen usually suppose; but I have some interest in knowing why one railroad company got millions of dollars more than any other railroad company for the same services. The Senator might just as well say that if a fraud had been committed on the Treasury we could not at this day open the books and investigate it, and have that fraud, if there has been one, corrected. I do not understand that sort of logic, nor do I understand that sort of honesty which will prevent the investigation of an account, whether it be right or wrong. We, the representatives of the States here, have a right to know what has been done with our money. If we cannot get it back, we can at least hold up the example of those who did the wrong to those who are to follow us hereafter.

The Baltimore and Ohio railroad has done a great deal for the country. It was one of the first great improvements of the country, and it was carried through by the energy of that great city, for no city in the whole United States has shown more energy in behalf of its interests than the city of Baltimore. Her merchants (and many of them were originally Pennsylvanians) are among the ablest men in their profession in the country. Baltimore has many advantages which have been much improved. But there is no reason in my mind, if that road has received improper pay, why we should not know it. If no injustice has been done to the Treasury by them or those who paid them it is their interest that it should be known, for there is an impression that many millions more were paid to them for the same service than was paid to other roads. I desire to have that impression removed if it is incorrect, and I can see no wrong in asking for the information. You may add the Pennsylvania road if you like, and the Northern Central, and I believe I have a little interest in a road called the Shamokin road, and you can put that in if you will. I have an interest in various other roads, and you can put in if you like all the railroads in which the Senator from Pennsylvania happens to have a little stock.

Mr. WHYTE. I understood the Senator from Pennsylvania to accept the amendment which I proposed.

Mr. CAMERON. I did.

Mr. WHYTE. And therefore I ask that it be entered upon the resolution that the Northern Central railroad shall also be inquired into, and the amounts received by that company during the same period of time shall be stated by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to say in reply to the observation made by the Senator from Indiana that I have not the slightest feeling against the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. This resolution of mine is not offered with any hostile feeling against that road, nor have I any choice as to either of these railroads, or any interest in any of them. The reason why I offer this resolution is that Mr. Garrett, in the official report that I read the other day, stated that the amount paid by the Government to him, or to his road, was one dollar to one dollar and ten cents per passenger. I have heard that allegation controverted, and I have heard it stated by officers of the Government that the full amount of $1 50 was paid. The only object of this resolution is to show to the Senate by the extraordinary or exorbitant charges of this road, more than other roads charged for the same service, the necessity of providing against such a contingency again; not with a view, however, to disparage the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, because I appreciate its importance in the railroad interests of the country.

As for the difficulty in getting this information, these disbursements are all paid by the quartermaster, as a matter of course, as all transportation charges are. They can be easily ascertained from the reports in the Third Auditor's office, and I do not suppose it will take a competent officer of that bureau more than a day or two to furnish the information. No details are required, but simply the aggregates and the rates. I supposed the information was in our official papers until I inquired for it and found it was not there. Although the contract with the other railroad companies is on our files the contract with the Baltimore and Ohio road is not published, so far as I can ascertain, and I desire to have it.

Mr. POMEROY. I have not the least objection to this resolution so far as it relates to any railroads. But the Committee on the Revision of the Rules reported a rule to the Senate, which I believe the Senate did not adopt, although the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] urged it very strongly, that these resolutions calling for information where it was not known definitely what amount of clerical labor would be required to furnish it should first go to a committee, and there should be a report on that subject. I have seen resolutions so drawn here that when a Senator wanted only one item of information it required the Departments many months, and the report made a book. And yet we are constantly caviling at the Departments for the amount of clerical force that they keep employed, while we are continually loading them down, without a report from any committee as to its propriety, with labor. I said last year that I would not vote for another reference to a Department for information unless we had some reasonable assurance, or some knowledge or information was furnished the Senate that the expense of it would not be very considerable. I believe we ought to have a standing rule on that subject. I do not think, if the matter was up again in the Senate and it was fairly understood, we should vote down the rule that was proposed. I shall vote against any of these calls, simply because I do not know what they may cost. We cannot get anything printed until it is referred to the Committee on Printing and they report in favor of it with an estimate of the probable cost. Why should we subject a Department to the expense when we do not know the probable cost?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment pending which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The resolution, as proposed to be amended, now reads:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to the Senate the amount paid by the United States to the Baltimore and Ohio railroad and the Northern Central railroad for transportation of men and supplies each year from 1861 to 1866 inclusive, designating separately the sums paid for such transportation to the Baltimore and Ohio railroad from Washington to the Relay House; also the rates of such transportation. And that he also state the amounts paid to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company in excess of what was paid to other railroad companies for similar services.

Mr. POMEROY. That involves what was paid to every railroad in the United States.

Mr. HARLAN. I do not think the objection urged by the Senator from Kansas ought to control the action of the Senate. If the head of a Department is called on for information by either branch of Congress, and shall ascertain that it cannot be furnished without interrupting the ordinary business of the Department, it will be an easy matter for the Secretary to so inform the House asking for that information, and to state the amount which will be necessary to employ the additional clerical force requisite to make out the statements called for. I apprehend the Secretary of the Treasury will do this. But if he can avail himself of the force now in the Department without interrupting the ordinary business of the Department and comply with the request of the Senate he will do so. I have no doubt that the failure heretofore to respond has been an inadvertence and oversight.

In relation to the objection urged by the Senator from Indiana, I have to say this—perhaps I ought to say it on account of my connection with the business that appertains to the District of Columbia—that there is no implied censure, as it seems to me, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company in the passage of this resolution. If the company was paid more for the amount of service rendered the Government than was paid to other similar corporations it was with the concurrence of the officers of the Government, and doubtless for what they deemed a sufficient reason. There was a reason for it that satisfied the officers of the Government at the time, and that reason may weigh very materially in the decision of the Senate when they come to consider the railroad bills now on the files of the Senate. Perceiving, therefore, no implied censure of the railroad company named in the passage of the resolution, and no material obstruction to furnishing the information growing out of the consideration mentioned by the Senator from Kansas, I must vote for the resolution.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I should like to have the yeas and nays on the resolution.

MISS SUE MURPHEY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it is the duty of the Chair to call the attention of the Senate to the unfinished business of yesterday, which is the bill (S. No. 625) for the relief of Miss Sue Murphey, of Decatur, Alabama. That bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the pending question is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. WILSON.]

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, last evening I attempted to show, and I think did successfully show, that there was nothing in the past action of the Committee on Claims which should dissuade the Senate from giving their assent to the pending bill. I tried to show, and I think I did successfully show, that there was nothing in the past action of the Senate which should prevent them from giving their assent to the bill. On the contrary, I think I did show successfully that no man or woman had ever presented an honest claim for property taken and used by this Government and had been denied payment because of his or her residence in any particular portion of the Union. Up to this time we have known no distinction, the committee has known none, the Senate has known none, between the resident of one portion of the United States and the resident of another portion.

If there is, then, nothing in the past action of the committee nor in the past action of the Senate which should prevent us from giving a fair consideration to this claim I ask what there is in the nature of the claim itself which should lead the Senate to hesitate or to refuse? Looking at the formidable opposition which this bill has encountered perhaps I have some reason to be deterred from pursuing its support. Looking at that long muster-roll of distinguished Senators who have presented themselves here, one after another, to protest against the payment of this claim, perhaps I ought to conclude that I am wrong, and I believe I should so conclude if it were not for one little circumstance, and that is that I know I am right and not wrong, and I am so constituted that when I know I am right it takes a good deal of testimony to convince me that I am wrong.

For weeks every species of opposition has been offered to this bill that I ever heard of, I think. Every sort of plea, dilatory and in bar, has been made here. Pleas for delay; pleas to the jurisdiction; pleas of bankruptcy without number; pleas of infancy; and yesterday my distinguished friend, the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. SREWART,] really stood up here in the Senate and set up the large sums of money you have appropriated from year to year for the support of the Freedmen's Bureau as a set-off against the claim of Sue Murphey. I know in our practice but one form of defense which has not been interposed here, and that is the statute of limitations. That has not been set up yet.

The honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] first sounded the alarm. I do not think he felt much alarm himself; but he said the bill required careful consideration. Well, sir, that injunction of his has been attended to. I trust the honorable Senator is prepared by this time to give his certificate that the bill has been carefully considered. The honorable Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] was the first to take the alarm. He seemed to think, although he did not insist upon his position, that there had been somewhere some decision which militated against the principle of this bill, and he wanted precedents. On a former occasion I thought I had pointed the Senator and the Senate to precedents. I showed the Senate that there had been paid out of the Treasury, upon the adjudication of the head of a bureau, for property taken by the Government, taken within these very districts and appropriated to the use of the Government, more millions of money than ever will be paid out of the Treasury hereafter upon the adjudication of the Committee on Claims or of any Congress under the principle involved in this bill.

And the Senator from Kansas [Mr. POMEROY] interposed his objection, which was that we should not make a pet or a favorite of Miss Sue Murphey; that she was no better than anybody else in Decatur, and that as everybody in Decatur suffered under the orders of the general who commanded our Army, we should pay them all. I replied, as well as I could to the Senator, that we could investigate but one case at a time, and the case of Sue Murphey happened to be the individual case that was then before us.

The Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] with his eye always fixed upon the interests of the Treasury, interposed in the name of the national necessities, and he undertook to inform us, as other Senators have informed us since, that the Treasury could not stand up under the immense drain that would follow upon the passage of this bill. I have already said, in reference to that objection, that if the principle of this bill be just, if it imposes an honest obligation on this Government, I would stand here and defend it although it drove the Treasury to bankruptcy. Bankruptcy rather than dishonor and dishonesty! If it imposes no honest obligation upon the Government, then do not pay it, no matter how able your Treasury may be to meet it. But upon that allegation I shall have something more to say hereafter; I pass it for the present.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. YATES] offered his objection that Congress ought not to consider these things; that they were more proper subjects for the consideration of the Court of Claims. I quite agree with the Senator. My judgment is that that would be the better tribunal of the two to investigate them. I am not very positive upon the point; but that is my judgment. But, sir, Congress has passed upon that question, and has excluded the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and has positively commanded the court to abstain from taking jurisdiction of this class of causes, and has commanded the heads of your quartermaster's and commissary bureaus to abstain from doing the same; and unless there is relief here there is relief nowhere.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PATTERSON] following in this debate, I think, on the whole, furnished the most unanswerable argument that I have heard in the course of the debate. His objection was founded, if I understood him, on the doctrine that "some things could be done as well as others." The honorable Senator did not tell us from which one of the writers on the rights of war he found the text of his doctrine; but I know the accuracy of his scholarship; I do not doubt that he quoted correctly, and I shall not undertake to controvert the principle. There may possibly be an answer to the application he made of it. He pointed us to the case of Mr. Lay, I think, who had some property near the line of the District of Columbia—a building which was knocked to pieces, as I understood him to say, by the guns in the hands of our troops, and as I understood him, by the command of the President of the United States. He says that has not been paid for. He points us to some other cases, and he wants to know why Mr. Lay and others are not paid. I will tell the honorable Senator candidly that I do not know why they are not paid; but in view of the objections that are urged here I submit to him and to the Senate if it be not a fair conclusion to come to that whenever their claims are presented to the quartermaster or other department somebody as well informed as my friend has said to the head of the Department, "Do not pay this at present; Miss Murphey has not been paid yet." Would it not be as good a reason for the quartermaster refusing payment to Mr. Lay that Miss Murphey had not been paid, as for us to refuse payment to Miss Murphey because Mr. Lay has not been paid?

Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. HOWARD] has repeatedly, or at least more than once, urged his objections to the payment of this claim. He has told us, over and over again, that there is no principle known in the science of government which requires a Government to protect its citizens against the destruction of property in war. So stated, I do not controvert it. We are not asking for any such protection as that. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. WILLIAMS] reiterated that statement, and replied to that doctrine as if it were the doctrine upon which this bill stands, as if it were the doctrine for which I had contended. But I had, over and over again, said to the Senate that I insisted upon no such doctrine. I do not stand upon the idea that the Government is bound to protect its citizens against all spoliation and all loss in time of war; but when the Government inflicts the loss, when the Government imposes the spoliation, it is no answer to turn round and say, "The Government does not undertake to indemnify and to protect its citizens." That plea was overruled long ago. That plea was interposed to the first case we have on record. When Cain was arraigned for the murder of his brother he met it with just such an objection. Said he, "Am I my brother's keeper?" And when Miss Murphey comes here and asks the Government to pay her for property which the Government has taken the representatives of the Government stand up and say, "Is the Government bound to take care of Miss Murphey's property?" The Almighty demurred to the plea of Cain, and the demurrer was sustained. It has not been tried since until this case came up. The Almighty was of the opinion that Cain was the keeper of his brother to the extent that he must keep his hands off. It is my deliberate judgment that the Government is the keeper of the property of all its liege subjects to the extent that it shall keep its hands off from the property, or taking it shall make compensation for it.

The Senator from Nevada, [Mr. STEWART,] I think, struck a new theory into the soul of the Senate by telling us that we must not assume any such obligation as this bill imposes upon us; we must not undertake to discriminate between loyal and disloyal down South, because we do not know enough to do it; we cannot determine one from the other. It is really impossible and impracticable, says the Senator from Nevada; and therefore—what? Conclude that they are all disloyal; treat them all on the footing of enemies. It is the simplest rule of government I have heard of in my life. So, then, murder is sometimes very difficult to detect; why not adopt the rule suggested to us by the Senator from Nevada, and when we find a murder committed in some district, instead of charging the officers of government with the duty of ascertaining who the man was that committed the murder, let the executive of the government place the inhabitants of some district in which the murder was committed, of certain limits, all under the ban of murder and hang them all? The doctrine stands upon precisely the same reason. You will not pay a loyal subject of the Government, because if you consent to pay a loyal subject of the Government there is some danger that you will by-and-by get fooled, and pay somebody who was not loyal.

And the other day the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] even, who, if he were as full of learning as he is replete with reading, I think really would suffice for a Congress himself, employed his gorgeous rhetoric here, not to make the Senate the palladium of the citizens' rights and safety; on the contrary, with a hostility almost vandalic, you saw him fling the image of Pallas from the boundaries of the Capitol and invoke the nation to become the spoliator of its liege subjects and citizens.

Mr. President, others have appeared here in opposition to this bill, denouncing it in the name and by the authority of that rule of international justice which they say is violated by the exactions of this bill. One might be deterred from meeting this array of authority; and yet I propose to meet it as well as I can; and I ask the Senate in all soberness what is this claim which has thus been battled, fore and aft? It is a request that the nation will pay for a piece of property taken by its authority and for its use, and applied to the occupation of an army and to the building of a fort. That the use made of the property is a beneficial one, that the kind of property taken is such as all law recognizes to be property and to be compensated for, nobody doubts, nobody denies. My colleague read the express words of Vattel; nay, everybody concedes that if such property was taken for such purposes elsewhere or from other persons it should be paid for. If the character of the property is such as that it should be paid for, and if the use made of it is such as to call upon the Government to make compensation, then there must be something in the character of the claimant or in the conduct of the claimant which should prevent payment. Now, who is the claimant? A citizen of the United States; a subject of the United States, owning allegiance to the Government of the United States, paying allegiance to the Government of the United States. So the case finds. This is the hypothesis upon which the case has been supported so far. I wish to say right here that upon this latter allegation as to whether this individual has paid due allegiance to the Government of the United States, I have been led to doubt by information which has been laid before the Senate since this debate opened. Upon that question I desire to be further informed. A motion has been offered here to recommit this bill to the Committee on Claims for a further examination upon that point. To that disposition of the bill I have no sort of objection, and indeed I am in favor of it; but so far the bill has been disputed upon the hypothesis that the claimant was loyal and did pay that allegiance which every subject owes to the Government which is over him. Then I say the claimant is a citizen and a subject of the United States, and a loyal subject of the United States. Then why should she not be paid? Why, we are told there was a war pending; "a civil war," says the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING;] "a flagrant war," says the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. HOWARD.] Yes, Mr. President, that is a fact. There was pending a civil, flagrant, double and twisted war, if you please. What then? Inter arma silent leges, says the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN.] So then there was "chaos come again." The felonious taking of property was no longer larceny, for there was no law defining larceny. The forcible taking of property was no longer robbery, because there was no law defining robbery. The taking of human life with malice aforethought was no longer murder—there was no law defining murder—the laws were silent. Who told the Senator from New Jersey that in the midst of arms the laws are silent? Why, Marcus Tullius Cicero told him. For what purpose—upon what occasion did he avow that doctrine? There was an election pending for the consulship, and his friend Milo was a candidate, and Claudius was an opponent of his; and we are told that the feeling around there was high, as is sometimes the case in elections elsewhere than Rome; and on the eve of the election Milo and Claudius met, they say, on the Appian Way—I wish we had the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] to tell this story, [laughter]—with their followers, and a collision ensued, and Claudius was slain, and Milo was put upon his trial for the murder of Claudius, and Cicero defended him. Against Milo the stern precept of the Roman law was thundered, "He who takes a human life is not fit to live." Cicero said that Claudius lay in wait for Milo, and that Milo took his life in self-defense; but the Roman law knew of no such defense; its precept was general and universal, as is the law with almost all barbarian nations: "He who takes a human life is not fit to live." That is so, said Cicero; that is the law, said Cicero; but in the midst of arms the laws are silent, said he. What lawyer since Coke's time would have ever urged any such defense of Milo upon the facts, as Cicero stated them, as he did urge? Upon Cicero's version of the facts the law was not silent, but the law commanded Milo to defend himself even at the sacrifice of the life of his assailant. There is no principle of law better understood, no one principle, perhaps, more frequently applied than that. Cicero, unfortunately, had not heard of it; unfortunately I say for his reputation if he were to enter upon practice in our courts at this time; and yet he left quite a reputation behind him in spite of his not having been made acquainted with this principle; and I am told left quite a little property which he had accumulated in the practice of his profession.

I am not here to deny that Cicero was a man of very respectable parts. I am here to deny the proposition which he laid down on that occasion. Our faith requires us to believe that the sun and the moon stood still while Joshua thrashed the Amorites, but my faith will not enable me to believe that the laws were suspended while Milo and Claudius had a street fight. It was no war; it was a mere election broil.

Mr. President, that sophism so uttered in the very cradle of jurisprudence, set to the music of Cicero's oratory, has survived to our time; and now, two thousand years after it was uttered, it is made a stalking-horse to bring into the American Senate a rule of national conduct which dissolves the relation of sovereign and subject, which confounds all distinction between guilt and innocence, which denounces against loyalty the penalties that are due to treason, and which resolves the Government of this model Republic into that odious thing which no monarchy has dared to be since King John met his barons at Runnymede, a common marauder and a mere snatcher of purses.

Mr. President, I say the great Roman advocate uttered an untruth; and I call upon the Senator from New Jersey, not one whit behind him in the graces of the orator, not to help perpetuate that falsehood, but to help bury it. The laws are never silent. High above the roar of the cannon at Gettysburg and Antietam, above the whirl of Sheridan's cavalry as they swept up the valley of the Shenandoah, everywhere and always resounds the supreme law, the voice of the civil State always commanding what is right, and prohibiting what is wrong, and every loyal man hearkens to and obeys it. For different purposes the State prescribes different forms of procedure. A deficient fence is provided for by one; the title to property is tried by another; criminal trials are conducted by another; commerce is regulated by another law of procedure; and armies are marshaled by yet another. The healthful ministers of peace are guided by one code; the hellful agencies of war are controlled by another; but the State prescribes them both, and one or the other is always supreme.

And now, Mr. President, I ask if this war did not hush the voice of law, how is this bill pending before the Senate affected by the existence of the war? The rights of this claimant and the obligations of this Government are to be determined in the light of the laws of war. Does any Senator claim any more from the existence of the war than that the right of this bill and the obligation of this Government are to be settled and adjudicated in the light of the laws of war? Well, then, what are the laws of war as bearing upon the questions involved in this bill? I am going to state my understanding of them, and I think I shall state them liberally enough to satisfy even the Senator from Michigan or the Senator from Massachusetts.

What may this Government do, then, in time of war and under the sanction of its laws? Why, sir, according to my understanding of that code, this Government may, in the administration of the laws of war, seize and confiscate every dollar of property owned by an enemy wherever the Government can find it, and within enemy's territory the Government may capture and confiscate all property, let it be owned by a friend or an enemy. When I say that, I am making all the concession that I hope will be asked of me. I think that is the doctrine of war to-day. I say to my distinguished friend from Kentucky, [Mr. DAVIS,] who does me the honor to listen to me, that I would fight against that definition, as able men than I have protested against it time and time again; but, after all, I think it is the doctrine to-day. The Senator from Massachusetts says that Bynkershoek is the highest authority, Bynkershoek's testimony is emphatic. The Senator says he is the authority of last resort. I am inclined to think the Senator is right; and that I may not be understood as having made this concession to the laws of war without a pretty respectable backing I will read from this writer of the highest authority his definition of war. "War is a contest by force," says Bynkershoek:

"I have not said by lawful force, for in my opinion every force is lawful in war. Thus it is lawful to destroy an enemy though he may be unarmed and defenseless; it is lawful to make use against him of poison, of missile weapons, of fire-arms, though he may not be provided with any such means of attack or defense; in short, everything is lawful against an enemy."—Bynkershoek's Law of War, p. 2.

So Bynkershoek said. I think myself that while he discusses the laws of war with a good deal of the genius of John Milton, he discusses them very much in the spirit of a Dutch butcher; but so he said, and although others have caviled at and remonstrated against it, I do not find very satisfactorily the authority which overthrows and denies it. Even the great John Marshall, whose intuitions revolted against against this monstrous doctrine, could do no more in the light of authority than to hang his head and to say in the language I am about to read to the Senate—

"Respecting the power of government no doubt is entertained. That war gives to the sovereign full right to take the persons and confiscate the property of the enemy wherever found is conceded. The mitigations of this rigid rule, which the humane and wise policy of modern times has introduced into practice, will more or less affect the exercise of this right, but cannot impair the right itself. That remains undiminished, and when the sovereign authority shall choose to bring it into operation the judicial department must give effect to its will."—Brown vs. The United States, 8 Cranch, 122.

But, Mr. President, while Chief Justice Marshall bowed his head in submission to this rule as within the scope of sovereign rights in war, he said one thing which must not be lost sight of, if we mean to do justice and to execute law, upon the simple bill which is before us. While he declared that the sovereign could confiscate the property of an enemy wherever it was found, and could capture all property in enemy country, he said that only the sovereign could do it—not that General Granger, not that any subordinate could do it. The national will must be declared upon the point; and if the national will said seize and confiscate, or capture and confiscate the property, it could be done. What has the national will said about that? What act has ever been put upon your statute-book or been proposed on your journals which has offered to put a loyal citizen and subject of the United States on the footing of an enemy? That no one insists.

War, you see, Mr. President, introduces new distinctions, both geographical and political. War divides all human society into three classes: one is composed of friends; one is composed of enemies; one is composed of neutrals, neither friends nor enemies. How distinguished? Not by a visible line drawn between one and the other. That is impracticable. The line which separates or the marks which distinguish between the loyal and the disloyal are more like those blood stains which, as my friend from New Jersey knows, were drawn upon the doorposts in Egypt to designate the houses from which the first-born should be taken from those which should be passed over. But it makes another distinction, not political, but geographical. It divides all the world into three districts. One portion is friendly territory, another portion is enemy's territory, and another portion is neutral territory.

That mark is not invisible; those divisions can always be traced. You need not blunder in pursuing those. That Sue Murphey stood on the right line of the first division, that she was among the friends and not among the enemies of the country, is true, if she was loyal. That is what we mean by a friend. If she was not, (and that question is to be tried hereafter,) then she was on the wrong side, and her property was open to the confiscation of the Government. But if she was loyal, then where was her property? If that was in enemy's territory the Government could pursue it; at what cost and upon what terms is another consideration. The Government could pursue it; but was it in enemy's territory? Over and over again I put the question, what facts constituted Decatur, Alabama, in March, 1864, enemy's territory? and finally I put the question to the Senator from Michigan, and whoever puts him a question is likely to get an answer. Immediately I got one from him. If he does not always get a right answer I am sure it is rather the misfortune than the fault of the Senator, for I know he always intends to give the right answer. He gave me one. Several facts, he said, constituted that condition of affairs; first, the proclamations of the President.

Mr. HOWARD. No; first, the statute of 1861.

Mr. HOWE. Well, first the proclamation of the President, issued in accordance with the statute of 1861. Sir, do you know just where the President gets his authority to make one portion of the United States enemy's territory, and so to distinguish it from other portions of the United States? He has the power to pardon crime; and recently and very sternly we have heard on this floor his right denied to spread the grace of amnesty over a large district of country. If he cannot grace any portion of the country with an amnesty in the exercise of the pardoning power, where, in the name of law, does he get the authority to conclude a large portion of the country under the ban of guilt? He has no such authority. It was never breathed in my ears that he had any such authority until this debate came up. But, Mr. President, I ask when he undertook to exert any such monstrous power? In his proclamations? Not a word of it. What are those proclamations, of which so much has been said? That he declared Alabama, South Carolina, and Virginia to be in insurrection? No, sir; not that. There are several of them.

The first proclamation looking in this direction which he issued bears date on the 15th of April, 1861. That was to call out the militia. That was the object of it. What was his reason for calling out the militia? That half of the country was in insurrection? Why, he said that "the laws of the United States have been for some time past and now are opposed, and the execution thereof obstructed in the States of South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama," and others; and he wanted the militia to help to execute the laws. A little later than that he issued another proclamation, in which he said, not that Alabama was in insurrection, but that an "insurrection against the Government of the United States has broken out in the States of South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama," &c., and therefore I order a blockade of the ports of those States; and a little later came another proclamation, in which he said an insurrection had broken out in Virginia and North Carolina and some other States. Then comes another proclamation:

"Whereas an insurrection exists in the State of Florida, by which the lives, liberty and property of loyal citizens are endangered; and whereas it is deemed proper that all needful measures should be taken for the protection of such citizens and all officers of the United States in the discharge of their public duties in the State aforesaid: Now, therefore, be it known that I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, do hereby direct the commander of the forces of the United States on the Florida coast to permit no person to exercise any office or authority upon the islands of Key West, the Tortugas, and Santa Rosa which may be inconsistent with the laws and Constitution of the United States; authorizing him at the same time, if he shall find it necessary, to suspend there the writ of habeas corpus, and to remove from the vicinity of the United States fortresses all dangerous or suspected persons."

There was an insurrection in Florida, as there was in Alabama, as there was in Georgia, but was all Florida enemy's territory? Did the President mean that? What was his object in issuing that proclamation? To protect the lives and property of the citizens of the United States; and these proclamations are paraded to us day after day as evidence of a purpose on the part of the President not to protect the property of the citizens of the United States, and they are pleaded here as the authority by which and under which any officer commanding in the name of the United States any portion of your armies could plunder at will all property within all those States! It was in the light of this language, employed in these proclamations, that I ventured to ask my friend, the Senator from New York, the other day, if we were necessarily to conclude because the President said that an insurrection existed in a State that it involved the whole State.

My friend at my left [Mr. EDMUNDS] instances an insurrection which broke out in Pennsylvania; another one which broke out in Massachusetts; but I instance portions of the territory of the United States involved in these very proclamations. Several of these proclamations included the State of Virginia, and if we are to conclude that all Virginia was enemy's territory because these proclamations described Virginia as one of the districts in which the insurrection had broken out, why then the honorable Senators from that State were representing enemy's territory on this floor. Will Senators tell me that that portion of old Virginia which now constitutes what is known as West Virginia was ever enemy's territory, or was made so by these proclamations? Always on the eastern side of the Chesapeake bay there have been portions of what is still Virginia, always a part of Virginia, always included in this general term, which were never occupied by the enemy, and which I think no Senator here will pretend was ever enemy's territory.

But, Mr. President, all these proclamations had just one of two purposes: either to lay the grounds upon which the ports of these States should be blockaded, or to assign the reasons for calling out a larger military force to enforce the laws of the United States. Here is another proclamation to which the attention of the Senate has been repeatedly called, which had a different purpose. Its purpose was to regulate trade between that portion of the country which was friendly and that portion of the country which was hostile territory. There it was necessary to be a little specific. This is the proclamation which I understand was issued specifically in pursuance of the act of Congress to which the honorable Senator from Michigan referred.

Mr. HOWARD. The proclamation of August 16, 1861.

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir. This proclamation, after reciting that an insurrection "against the laws, Constitution, and Government of the United States had broken out within the States of South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Mississippi," &c., goes on to say:

"Now, therefore, I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, in pursuance of an act of Congress approved July 13, 1861, do hereby declare that the inhabitants of the said States of Georgia, South Carolina, Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Mississippi, and Florida, (except)—"

Naming these States first, and then excepting and reserving—

"the inhabitants of that part of the State of Virginia lying west of the Alleghany mountains, and of such other parts of that State and the other States heretofore named as may maintain a loyal adhesion to the Union and the Constitution, or may be from time to time occupied and controlled by forces of the United States engaged in the dispersion of said insurgents, are in a state of insurrection against the United States."

And he then goes on to interdict all trade between the inhabitants of the friendly territory and the inhabitants of the hostile territory described and bounded in that proclamation; and from those boundaries are excluded in express terms certain portions of Virginia and every portion of the United States, where ever it may be, which maintained a loyal adherence to our Government, or which was, or might be thereafter, occupied by our forces. Sir, it is not enough for those who contend that Decatur, Alabama, was enemy's territory in 1864 to show that Decatur is in Alabama, and that Alabama is named in the proclamations of the President as one of the States within which an insurrection had broken out. They must show that it is not a part of those States which was occupied by our forces.

But, Mr. President, if the proclamation did not make Decatur enemy's territory we are told that the Supreme Court did in the prize cases; or if they did not make it so, they decided that it was such. Either the Senators who assert that have misread or misunderstood the judgment of the Supreme Court in the prize cases, or I have strangely misunderstood it. I assert here that so far from holding that Decatur was enemy's territory, the language which they used in those celebrated cases expressly excludes Decatur from enemy's territory. The particular locality within the insurrectionary districts about which they were inquiring, and to which their judgment applied, was Richmond in Virginia, the capital, the political metropolis of the rebellion, the headquarters of the rebellion, the seat of its principal army always. They said that was enemy's territory. But did they say that it was enemy's territory because of the President's proclamation? By no manner of means. The President's proclamation had nothing to do with making it enemy's territory. The enemy made it their territory, and made it their territory by occupying it, by possessing it. At one time they made Decatur enemy's territory, but it was no longer enemy's territory; it was not enemy's territory in March, 1864. Do I misunderstand the effect of this decision? The Court say:

"Several of these States have combined to form a new confederacy, claiming to be acknowledged by the world as a sovereign State. Their right to do so is now being decided by woe of battle. The ports and territory of each of these States are held in hostility to the General Government. It is no loose, unorganized insurrection, having no defined boundary or possession."

That is almost the language used by the Senator from Michigan, and in using that language he is supported by the Supreme Court.

"It has a boundary marked"—

How? By the description in the President's proclamation? By the description contained in any statute? No, sir—

"marked by lines of bayonets"—

That is a visible line—

"and which can be crossed only by force. South of this line is enemy's territory"—

Why?

"because it is claimed and held in possession by an organized hostile and belligerent Power."

Not because it is named in the President's proclamation at all. Decatur was not south of that line of bayonets; Decatur was north of it. Trade between Decatur and New York, the commercial metropolis of the nation, was as free as between New York and Albany; but trade between either Decatur or New York, and any point south of that line of bayonets, which the Court says traces the boundary between enemy's and friendly territory, was pursued under great difficulties.

To corroborate my interpretation of this decision of the Supreme Court, by way of excluding the idea that that language is misunderstood by me, or can be misunderstood by anybody looking at it reasonably, I beg leave to read an extract from a letter published by Mr. Richard H. Dana, a lawyer of national reputation, who was of counsel in the prize cases, and a letter written for the purpose of explaining, or popularizing rather, really what was and what was not decided by the prize cases. I remember to have heard the late President of the United States say of that letter that until he read it he did not himself accurately understand what was the true scope and meaning of the judgment of the Court in the prize cases. The letter is not long, but I will only read a few extracts from it. He undertakes to reduce to a series of propositions both what the Court did not decide and what the Court did decide. He says:

"What the Court did not decide:

"1. The Court did not decide that the passing of the ordinances of secession made the territory of the insurgent States enemy's territory, or its inhabitants alien enemies.

"2. The Court did not decide that the passing of the secession ordinances terminated, or in any way affected, the legal relations of the insurgent States as bodies-politic with the General Government or with their respective States.

"3. The Court decided absolutely nothing as to the effect of the passing of the secession ordinances on the civil or political relations of the inhabitants of the insurgent States with the General Government or with their respective States, or on the relations of the insurgent States, as bodies-politic, with the General Government.

"4. The Court did not decide that the inhabitants of the seceding States are alien enemies at all, or that the territory of those States is enemy's territory.

"What the Court did decide:

"1. That in case of domestic war the Government of the United States may, at its option, use the powers and rights known to the international laws of war as blockade and capture of enemy's property at sea.

"2. That to determine whether property found at sea is 'enemy's property,' within the meaning of the law of prize, the same tests may be applied in domestic as in international wars.

"3. One of those tests is that the owner of the property so found has his domicile and residence in a place of which the enemy has a certain kind and degree of possession.

"4. Richmond, Virginia, was, at the time of the capture and condemnation of those vessels, under such possession and control of an organized, hostile, belligerent power as to render it indisputably 'enemy's territory' within the strictest definitions known to the laws of war."

That is Mr. Dana's understanding of it; and that this is the true understanding of it will be apparent to any lawyer who considers the reason of the rule that property may be captured at will within enemy's territory. The rule is because it is general; you can capture property there which is owned by your friends as well as that which is owned by your enemies. The reason is not because the owner of the property has subjected himself to any penalties, but because the property itself is guilty, so to speak; it is because the property is in that predicament that it is liable to contribute to the resources of the enemy. It is liable to do that only where it is within the jurisdiction of the enemy; only while it is in a locality of which the enemy has possession and has control, in the language of the Court and in the language of Mr. Dana. Decatur was no such place. When this property was taken the enemy had no control over Decatur, and from that time to this, and I humbly hope, if this Government continues that example of justice which it has heretofore shown, it never will again be under the control of any enemy of the United States.

But, Mr. President, if it were enemy's territory, I have said, the sovereign might capture property on land or on the sea within that territory at Decatur. But should the sovereign do it? Because the laws of war would permit it; because Bynkershoek says it may be done, does it follow that the sovereign should do it or would do it? Without permission of the sovereign, says Chief Justice Marshall, it cannot be done; no subordinate can do it. Should the sovereign give permission? As to the effect of giving such permission or as to the probability of such permission being given by this Government we have a little evidence. Mr. Halleck says:

"In the invasion of the Spanish peninsula, Napoleon had to choose between methodical operations, with provisions carried in the train of his army or purchased of the inhabitants and regularly paid for, and irregular warfare, supplying his troops by forced requisitions and pillage. The former was adopted for some of the main armies, moving on prescribed lines, and the latter for the more active masses. Soult and Suchet, in favorable parts of the country, succeeded for a considerable length of time in procuring regular supplies for their armies, but most of the French generals obtained subsistence for their troops mainly by pillage. Napoleon, at St. Helena, attributed most of his disasters to the animosities thus created among the Spanish people."—Halleck's International Law and Laws of War, p. 459.

But you see Napoleon did not exert the rights which the laws of war vested in him, according to the authority I have read; which the laws of war vested in him according to the authority as it is given by the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Michigan. He did not go within a summer's march of those rights. He did supply the outlying flanks of his army in this irregular way, but the main lines were supplied by regular trains and regular purchases, and were in a country which was foreign and alien to that which he represented. Spain was a foreign country. All its inhabitants were his enemies, bound by their allegiance to their own Government to be the enemies of France. He was in that country; and yet so far from asserting this extreme doctrine of the laws of war, that all that territory was his and all that property belonged to him as the conqueror, he only consented, and that as a measure of military necessity, to supply a portion of his army by these forced contributions.

General Scott was charged with the conduct of a war also upon enemy's territory, in an enemy's country, in Mexico. At first, as I said to the Senate the other day, he issued strict orders that not an article of food should be taken without just payment. Finally, and near the close of the struggle, under instructions from our Secretary of State, he did depart from that practice to some extent and did levy contributions upon the country in which he was prosecuting war, contributions as a compensation for the protection he furnished by his forces to the people and to the balance of the property in the country. But neither General Scott nor any other general who has been charged with the conduct of war at home or abroad has ever asserted the doctrine, or attempted to practice upon the doctrine which has been asserted over and over again here in the Senate in this debate, that all the property of the conquered country belonged to the conqueror; that private rights were blotted out forever.

I say then, Mr. President, in the light of the experience detailed to us by Napoleon and of the advice given by General Scott, as well as in accordance with the judgments of the best jurists and the best writers on international law of modern times, that the Government of the United States would not have asserted the right to capture any property of friends within Decatur if Decatur had been south of the line of bayonets. My judgment is that the Government of the United States never would have deliberately decided to venture upon the right of capturing the property of friends, although it was within enemy's territory.

But I am not left to conjecture on this point. We know exactly what the Government did decide upon. They considered it, and they put their decision on the statute-book. I will read it to you. It was arrived at not without a long and somewhat heated debate. There were two questions which were in debate. What do you suppose they were, Mr. President? How much of the property of our friends we should capture within those districts within enemy's territory? Do you suppose that was one of the questions we debated? Not at all. From the beginning to the end of that debate no voice was heard in the Senate Chamber, no voice was heard in the other wing of the Capitol, suggesting that a dollar of the property of a loyal man might be applied to the uses of the Government without compensation. The questions were, how far we might go in exercising the right to capture and confiscate the property of enemies—enemies in fact, rebels in law—for past offenses, and how far we should go in the future. We put a statute on the book which describes minutely the very classes of rebels whose property might be seized and confiscated for offenses already committed, and then we put this further section upon the book as a caution to those within that country for the future. I will read it:

"And be it further enacted, That if any person within any State or Territory of the United States, other than those named as aforesaid, after the passage of this act, being engaged in armed rebellion against the Government of the United States or aiding or abetting such rebellion, shall not, within sixty days after public warning and proclamation duly given and made by the President of the United States, cease to aid, countenance and abet such rebellion and return to his allegiance to the United States, all the estate and property, moneys, stocks, and credits of such persons shall be liable to seizure as aforesaid; and it shall be the duty of the President to seize and use them as aforesaid, or the proceeds thereof."

Is that anything like the assertion of a right to seize, to capture, and to confiscate the property of your friends in that district? No. Sixty days for repentance and reform were allowed to your enemies in arms; but if within sixty days after notice and admonition they did not cease to make war upon the Government or to aid those who did make war upon the Government, so many as did not do that your law said became enemies whose property you might seize, capture, and confiscate.

But, Mr. President, that is not all. That is what the Congress said about it. But the Commander-in-Chief of your armies issued instructions upon the advice of a distinguished civilian, Professor Lieber. Under those instructions your armies went down there. I will read you a clause from them:

"The United States acknowledge"—

This was published for the instruction of your armies moving upon that portion of the United States which you are now told was enemy's territory. Those enemies were told that—"The United States acknowledge and protect, in hostile countries occupied by them, religion and morality; strictly private property; the persons of the inhabitants, especially those of women; and the sacredness of domestic relations. Offenses to the contrary"—

Offenses which do not respect all those interests, private property among the rest—

"shall be rigorously punished."

That was the command of the Government whose representatives here insist upon their right to appropriate all property, both of friends and enemies, within that country!

Mr. President, I did not quite conclude the argument upon the question whether Decatur was within enemy's territory or not. I have read you the language of the Supreme Court in the prize cases, that very decision which has been cracked about the Senate Chamber ever since this debate opened as if it were a cat-o'-nine tails got up expressly to scourge Miss Sue Murphy. I have read you the language of that court excluding by express words, and for the very reason and the whole reason upon which the doctrine stands, Decatur from enemy's territory. But I am told that in another case, in the case of Mrs. Alexander's cotton, the court held that one district in Louisiana did not cease to be enemy's territory, although our Army was within it. That is true. The court said the occupation of our Army was so brief, so unstable, they were driven out so suddenly, that to hold that the district in which Mrs. Alexander lived was no longer enemy's territory was to expose that property to the very perils to prevent which this whole doctrine was invented. Your right, I say, to take property in enemy's territory, that is, the property of your friends, springs from the fact that it is liable to contribute to the support of the enemy. Mrs. Alexander's cotton was in that predicament, because our troops were there at one time; they were not there to stay. The Senator from New Jersey says, however, that it was because they had not been there long enough. He thinks that was the reason why the court held that Mrs. Alexander's cotton was still in enemy's territory, and he argues that our troops had been there in the neighborhood of Mrs. Alexander as long as they had been in Decatur. I do not know how long they had been in Decatur; the case does not show; but I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that that does not turn upon the question of time at all. The troops had been in that country, I think, for more than six weeks. I will give you another case where our troops had not occupied a district but six days when the court held that it was no longer enemy's territory. In April, 1862, a citizen of New Orleans, I believe a British subject by birth, but he had been for many years a merchant in New Orleans, purchased a vessel, New Orleans then being occupied by the rebellion, and loaded her with cotton. The lading was completed by the 17th of April, and on that day she was run down into Lake Ponchartrain, and anchored. On the 1st or 2d of May following, General Butler took possession of New Orleans with our troops, and on the 6th of May he issued some sort of a proclamation to the people there. There was some resistance shown between the 2d and 6th. The flag I believe was pulled down on the 2d. On the 15th, or some day later, our forces went down and took possession of that vessel and her cargo, and took her to Key West, I think. She was libeled. Our troops had been there, I say, but six days when this proclamation issued. The court found in that proclamation evidence that our troops had gone there to stay, and found as matter of history that they had stayed, and they held that from the time that proclamation issued New Orleans ceased to be enemy's territory, and therefore that this vessel, although purchased before our troops went there, and loaded before our troops went there and run down into Lake Ponchartrain and lay there at anchor when our troops took possession of New Orleans, was not enemy's property and was not liable to confiscation, and the libel was dismissed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Was it on account of the proclamation or on account merely of the facts recited in the proclamation?

Mr. HOWE. The court fixed the date on the day of the proclamation, and there are a variety of facts which they recite as their reasons why they fix upon that date. Some of the statements in the proclamation were among the reasons; but they say it is fair to conclude that from the 6th New Orleans ceased to be enemy's territory. The great reason, the only reason is, that it was then no longer in possession or occupation of the enemy, but was in the permanent possession and occupation of the troops of the United States, and property there was not liable to contribute to the uses of the enemy more than it was in Washington, in Baltimore, or in New York.

Mr. President, those who have resisted the payment of this claim have all stood upon a rule of technical law. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FREELINGHUYSEN] is the only Senator, so far as I now remember, who has ventured into the field of ethics and has ventured to dispute the passage of this bill upon the grounds of its inherent injustice; and I wish to call his attention more than the attention of the Senate to that portion of his argument. I think I have mislaid the paper; I do not find it here; but the general idea inculcated in it I remember, and shall remember longer than I want to. There are a great many men who might have uttered the same sentiment and it would not have surprised me so much. I am bound to say that the Senator from New Jersey is almost the last man within the circle of my acquaintance from whom I should have expected a defense against the payment of this claim, supposing this claimant to be loyal upon the ground of its inherent injustice. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] apologizes for the principle he espouses here. He denounces it himself as harsh, but he says it is war. The Senator from New Jersey says it is just. He calls our attention to the fact that we went at great cost of blood and treasure down there upon the appeal of our loyal friends to rescue them from the grasp of the rebellion, and now he protests that it is unjust and wanting in magnanimity on their part for them to turn round and ask us to pay for property of which they have been despoiled.

Mr. President, did we go down there? Does the Senator from New Jersey really mean to insist that the nation went down to Alabama or elsewhere within the country of the rebellion upon the invitation of our loyal friends, or did the nation go there in its own interests and by its own authority, and to protect and preserve itself? Is it to be supposed that the citizens of Decatur would not rather live with their property protected under the government of the confederacy than to have it stripped from them by the Government of the Republic? Was it a beneficent thing in this Government to go down there upon the cry of our distressed friends to rob them and plunder them? I put it to the Senator from New Jersey if, when his house is on fire, he will not put out his hand to extinguish the flames, except upon the privilege of being allowed to rifle the pockets of all the guests in the house? The Union was tumbling about our heads, and is it to be said that we must not put forth an effort to sustain the Union except upon the privilege of being allowed to plunder all those citizens upon whose heads the falling rafters are pressing most sorely? I think not. I think we went there in the discharge of a national duty, and that that national duty was to preserve all the territory belonging to the United States intact, and to preserve the rights of every one of the loyal and obedient citizens of the United States, so far as it was possible to do so.

But, Mr. President, before I conclude I wish to call especial attention to some matters in the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER.] He urges the same general doctrine which has been urged by others, the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. HOWARD,] the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. FREELINGHUYSEN,] and the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.] But with that extraordinary command of language which is habitual to him, he has defined and stated that doctrine with that clearness and precision which make it not only entirely intelligible, but make it to stand out so prominently that I feel entirely authorized to plead to it the general issue and go to the country upon it. He states this doctrine in these terms:

"Here it is proper to observe three things; one concerning the petitioner, and two concerning the property taken: first, that the petitioner was domiciled in a rebel State, or, to use more technical language, in a State declared by public proclamation to be in rebellion; secondly, that the property was situated within the rebel State; and thirdly, that the property was taken under the necessities of war, and for the national defense. On these three several points there can be no question. They are facts which have not been denied in this debate."

"Bearing in mind these facts, several difficulties which have been presented during this debate disappear."

Again, he says:

"Three men once governed the mighty Roman world. Three facts govern the present case, with the power of a triumvirate. The domicile of the petitioner; the situation of the property; and the exigency of war. If I dwell on these three facts, it is because I am unwilling that either should drop out of sight; each is vital."

Mr. President, I altogether misunderstand the law of this subject if the Senator from Massachusetts is not utterly wrong in that statement. Each of these facts is vital. What? "The domicile of the petitioner, the situation of the property, and the exigencies of the war." First, the domicile of the petitioner within a rebel State. The prize cases were suits on behalf of those who were not all of them domiciled in any rebel State. Some of the claimants there were Mexicans; some were subjects of Great Britain; and there was no evidence that they had ever seen a rebel district. Secondly, says the Senator, the situation of the property. Why, the cargo of one of the vessels which was in dispute in those cases never saw a rebel district. It was taken in Hampton Roads, outside, on the high seas. And the exigencies of war, says the Senator. Why, sir, the exigencies of war, unless I am terribly mistaken, have nothing to do with the rights of the Government. If property belongs to an enemy, or if it is so situated that it may contribute to the success of the enemy, you may destroy it; although you have not the slightest occasion for the use of it yourself. I understand that to be a familiar principle of the laws of war. But the Senator calls this a rebel State because it was described as a rebel State in the proclamation. The captures referred to in the prize cases were made before that proclamation was issued.

The character of the claimant I understand to be a proper subject of inquiry. If the claimant is an enemy, then you may exclude him from your tribunals; but if the claimant be a friend, I say there is no pretext of law, international or national, upon which you can exclude him from your tribunals; and unless his property was in that predicament that it was liable to contribute to the success of your enemy, you have no excuse whatever for the capture of it.

Mr. HOWARD. There may be a national necessity for it.

Mr. HOWE. I am obliged for the suggestion of my friend. I stated the principle too broadly. There may be other excuses. There may be a national necessity which will warrant the taking of the property, but not warrant the taking of the property without making compensation. It may justify the taking of the property, but it will require the Government to make compensation for it.

But, Mr. President, the feature in the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts which most astounded me was not this particular statement of this doctrine of international law; but it was, I was about to say the audacity—I will not use that term—it was the fearlessness with which he went on with his citations of history to illustrate the enormity of it. Side by side with his bold declaration that we must not put our hands into the Treasury to pay our friends for property which we have taken, he cites us to the example of two illustrious British statesmen who, when their country had been involved in a civil war, a war with a rebellion, and a war with a triumphant rebellion, did not hesitate to put their hands into the national treasury, not to compensate loyal citizens for property of which their Government had despoiled them, but to compensate them for property which was taken from them by their enemies; and that speech is going down in the parliamentary history of this country. There you have the doctrines of an American statesman and of British statesmen in sharp contrast.

I say Great Britain was confronted with a rebellion. Within the district of that rebellion there were subjects still loyal to the Government of Great Britain. In the effort to put down that rebellion Great Britain failed, as we did not. Great Britain was in debt, overwhelmed with debt, overwhelmed with disaster, but the loyalists who had suffered by the acts of their enemies appealed to the sense of justice of the British Parliament. The Senator from Michigan, the Senator from New Jersey, the Senator from Oregon were not members of that Parliament, and there was not a word heard there of their having been exempt from taxation, and that therefore the treasury was to be released from the obligation to make good their losses, or to help to make good their losses. Nay, sir, with every one of the pretexts which have been pleaded here to exclude this class of our fellow-citizens from the justice of the United States pressing upon the British people, and pressing upon British statesmen with double the force that they press upon us, there were two eminent and bold statesmen standing up in that Parliament, and in the name of national justice striking upon the rock even of national adversity until great streams of refreshing tenderness gushed forth to the healing of oppressed loyalty.

Mr. HOWARD. If the Senator will allow me, he makes an illusion, I suppose, to the remarks of Mr. Pitt upon the petition of the loyalists for relief presented to the British Parliament. If he will look into the debates he will discover that Mr. Pitt expressly stated that the claims did not rest upon strict right or justice. I quote Mr. Pitt's exact words,

Mr. SUMNER. "Strict justice."

Mr. HOWARD. "Strict right or justice." So that after all it was a mere gratuity, an act of benevolence on the part of the Parliament to extend the relief which was prayed for; a mere act of brotherly kindness, and nothing else.

And while I am up I beg to say one word further, if the Senator will allow me. I know of no evidence to support his declaration when he says that those claims were founded upon the destruction of property by the American insurgents, for they were such at that time. It does not appear whether those losses accrued in consequence of the violence of the Americans or the necessities of the British armies then in the field in this country.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator was entirely right when he says that Mr. Pitt protested that this was not an obligation which he asked the nation to fulfill. He held that it was a duty which in common gratitude they owed to the loyalists who had suffered in their cause, not an obligation; and it was not any more than it was an obligation on the part of New York to pay her citizens for property which had been taken from them by the act of Vermont. But said Pitt, but said Burke, but said others: "These men were our friends, and notwithstanding our misfortunes we owe them compensation for the losses, not which we have imposed upon them, but the losses which they encountered in our service." The language which has been quoted from Mr. Pitt and from Mr. Burke was not the only language which was employed during that great debate. In the treaty of peace negotiated between the representatives of the two Governments the question what should be done with those loyal subjects of Great Britain who had been stripped of their estates by the colonial authorities was one of the greatest questions to be settled. The Federal Government refusing to enter into any stipulation on their behalf further than that they would recommend to the States some sort of consideration for them, it was finally settled upon that basis, and that settlement was attacked in the House of Commons. Let me read you a few statements of how the British statesmen looked upon the claims of their loyal subjects:

"In the House of Commons Mr. Wilberforce said that 'when he considered the case of the loyalists'—"

Loyalists stripped by their enemies, and not by their Government—

"...he confessed he there felt himself conquered; there he saw his country humiliated; he saw her at the feet of America; still he was induced to believe that Congress would religiously comply with the article, and that the loyalists would obtain redress from America." Lord North said that "never were the honor, the principles, the policy of a nation so grossly abused as in the desertion of those men."

What men? Loyal subjects of Great Britain despoiled by the acts of Great Britain's enemies.

Mr. SUMNER. Let me remind the Senator that was the desertion in the treaty.

Mr. HOWE. Exactly.

Mr. SUMNER. That, the Senate will understand, was a discussion in Parliament, where the treaty was arraigned; and the politicians of that day found occasion to criticize it, because, as they said, the loyalists were not sufficiently provided for. John Adams and our commissioners at that time resisted the appeals of the British commissioners.

Mr. HOWE. Yes, Mr. President; they were complaining of the desertion of those British loyalists, because ample compensation was not made for their losses in the treaty, instead of standing there to assert this great modern doctrine of international law that those who were fools enough to be loyal were fit subjects to be plundered by everybody, friendly Governments and hostile Governments alike:

"Lord North said that 'never were the honor, the principles, the policy of a nation so grossly abused as in the desertion of those men, who are now exposed to every punishment that desertion and poverty can inflict because they were not rebels.'"—Sabine's American Loyalists, vol 1, p. 99.

It was precisely to those punishments that these people were subjected during the reign of the rebellion and this duty is enforced not upon an unfortunate sovereign beaten in the conflict. It is an instruction laid before a victorious country, ample in resources, able to meet every one of its obligations, and with not an obligation now that it can shrink from without subjecting itself to that lowest depth of infamy to which ever national honor was subjected:

"Lord Mulgrave declared that 'the article respecting the loyalists he could never regard but as a lasting monument of national disgrace.'" Mr. Burke said, that "a vast number of the loyalists had been deluded by England, and had risked everything, and that, to such men, the nation owed protection, and its honor was pledged for their security at all hazards."

That is Burke; that is in the British Parliament. They had risked everything in the royal cause, and the nation was pledged to make them compensation at all hazards, not compensation for what their own Government had taken, but compensation for what the enemies of that Government had taken from them:

"The Lord Chancellor declared that the stipulations of the treaty are 'specific.'"

That is, that the Federal Government would recommend some consideration for these people to the States.

"And," said he "my own conscious honor will not allow me to doubt the good faith of others, and my good wishes to the loyalists will not let me indiscreetly doubt the dispositions of Congress," since the understanding is, that "all these unhappy men shall be provided for."

There was no such understanding:

"Yet, if it were not so, Parliament could take cognizance of their case, and impart to each suffering individual that relief which reason, perhaps policy, certainly virtue and religion required."—Ibid., p. 102.

That is the lord chancellor; that is Burke, Mulgrave, Wilberforce, that even the rights of men who had no other claim upon the consideration of their Government than that they had been true and loyal to it, that they had been deluded into an unfortunate and a losing cause, but had been faithful to it, should be respected. Sir, I came to the Capitol this morning with one who is now a Representative of one of these rebel districts, as Senators delight to call them, a Representative from Tennessee, who told me that the bitterest moment he had been called upon to experience during his whole life was that on which he was visited by a mission from the rebellion; and he was ordered to choose one of three propositions: either to take the oath of fidelity to the rebel cause, or to absent himself from the rebel dominions, or to be hung by the neck until he was dead. Those were the alternatives offered to him. That he hesitated upon the three will not be thought strange, I think. It is more singular and more noticeable that he finally chose, upon the instinct and upon the advice of his heroic wife, who told him to accept the second, to turn his back on his home and on his family; to take the second of the propositions; to leave all that he loved, and to go into that portion of the Union where she fondly believed, "deluded," in the language of Mr. Burke, there might be protection for loyalty and devotion. He acted upon that advice. He did turn his back upon all he loved, and he did seek the flag of the Union, and under that flag he rallied a regiment, and he went back to his own home, and it was with his help and by his aid that your flag floats everywhere to-day. And now, when that class of men come here and ask no indemnity for the property of which they have been despoiled by their enemies, but ask only a just compensation for that property, which you and your Government have taken from them, they are told here in the council chambers of the nation that they were legitimate subjects of the spoil of their own Government, for whose success they had risked everything.

Mr. MORTON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I met this morning a very eminent citizen of the State of Arkansas, who lost a large property taken from him by the rebels, and was for a long time incarcerated in Fort Smith by them, who was under sentence of death for some two weeks, expecting every day to be executed; and he told me that the greatest humiliation that he had suffered since the end of the war was in listening to a debate in which he was told that if his property had been taken by our Government instead of by the rebels he would have been denied all compensation upon the ground that he was a constructive traitor.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate much longer. I was obliged to confess my astonishment, not so much that the Senator from Massachusetts should have asserted this doctrine which I have been opposing as well as I could, but that he should have ventured to cite the Senate to illustrious examples so utterly at war with this doctrine; that in almost one breath and by one gesture he should unfold to us those two statesmen and others surrounding them, standing up there and appealing to an impoverished and a defeated country to make, out of its generosity, compensation to its friends who had suffered in its cause, and that then, speaking with reference to the very identical class, he should turn round and tap upon the tills of the Treasury Department, exclaiming, as I almost thought I heard him, in an under tone: "Pass by that sentiment of Wilberforce and of Burke; you have the duty of statesmen to discharge; it is not your duty to make compensation to those who have suffered in your cause; it is your duty to despoil them; strip the soil from under their feet; take the roof from over their heads; on the spot where the cradle stood plant your cannon; turn the orphan girl out of home shelterless into the world, and make havoc with the roar of your artillery in the very spot in which her childhood was put to sleep by the mother's lullaby."

Mr. President, when I am to be counseled to any such doctrine as this, I must not be admonished against it by any such examples as the Senator from Massachusetts has cited from British history.

Sir, I had thought to say a word upon the question of the amount involved in the principle of this bill. The Senator from California, [Mr. COLE,] who went into that subject more astutely, I believe, than any other Senator, made it out, if I understood him aright, something like five thousand million dollars. I read an editorial of a column or so in a leading newspaper of the Northwest which gravely asserted as an ascertained fact that if this bill was adopted, at least a million more would follow it, and that they would take out of the Treasury from five hundred thousand to one hundred thousand million dollars, which would make the estimate of the Senator from California a very beggarly estimate, and would make your final payments amount to somewhere from five thousand to five hundred thousand million dollars. This proposes to pay nothing to anybody unless one who was loyal; nothing for anything unless it was property taken by the United States; and is any friend of the United States prepared to say that that handful of paupers within that portion of the country we robbed of more value than we raised in all the rest of the Union by taxation and otherwise? I would not make the confession if I thought it was true, and you know it is false.

But, Mr. President, let me say one word more, and I will conclude. Now, I am about to express a matter of opinion. I am about to tell these Senators who have asserted this doctrine in what they call the interests of the Treasury, that they have mistaken the interests of the Treasury as broadly as they have mistaken the law of the land. I tell the Senators that in my deliberate judgment it is time for you to hear all these claims, to decide now between the loyal and the disloyal, when there is a difference between them, when you can get some testimony. I admit we shall be deceived. I admit you will sometimes make appropriations to those who were not as true as they ought to have been. Take that risk; it belongs to you; but if you venture to close your doors against all classes alike to-day, year after year to shut your ears against the cry of the really loyal, I tell you you cannot stand upon that doctrine; and by-and-by, when these distinctions are blotted out, your doors will be opened and the Treasury will be opened to all classes as you now exclude all classes from it; and when you try these questions at the greatest disadvantage you will have the most of them to try. I am as confident that the interests of the nation as I am that the honor of the nation demand that you should meet this bill on the principles upon which it rests, and meet it squarely.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I do not rise to continue this discussion. I have listened to the finished and eloquent argument of my friend from Wisconsin with much pleasure; and although perhaps there may have been in it some strictures upon my own views, I do not intend to undertake a reply. I rise to say a word in reference to the amendment introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. WILSON,] (now the pending question,) and to submit that it is not germane to the original bill. Whether loyal men of the South should or should not be paid where the Government, or where its military agents agreed directly, by implication or by effect of law, to pay for Army supplies, is by no sense the question before us. Neither is the question how far we should emulate the example of the British Parliament, of Burke and Pitt and Wilberforce, in the bestowment of bounty or giving indemnity to loyal sufferers. I hope that the Senators will suffer their minds, after they have been led away by the eloquence to which they have listened, to come to the consideration of what is the issue before us. The question is whether the Government is under the obligations of law or of strict justice to pay the southern loyalists for the ravages of war; to pay for the thousands of houses which have been occupied and damaged by our troops; to pay for the thousands of mills filled with flour and of barns and granaries filled with produce, which have been destroyed; whether we are bound to pay for all the cotton belonging to loyalists which has been burnt.

You have not failed to observe that even the discriminating mind of my friend has failed to distinguish the case where property is taken for a fortification from these cases to which I have referred. Where property is taken to weaken the enemy it is just as much devoted to the use of this country as where it is taken to erect a fortification, and no one yet has been able to draw any line of distinction.

Mr. President, the true question is whether when we take part of the property of a loyalist, as the materials of which the house is constructed, for the purpose of preserving the residue of her property at a time when the whole was valueless had we not interposed, being by the laws of nations and the laws of the confederacy subject to confiscation, we are bound to make payment for that part which we take in order to effect this rescue? The question is whether when my house is on fire and the firemen extinguish the flames I can sue the firemen for the damage the water has done my household property? The question is whether the property of the North, which for years has been subject to taxation in order to carry on the war and rescue Miss Murphey's property, is now to be taxed to make compensation for property which has borne no part of that expenditure? The question is whether this Government shall be bound to pay damages for the results of a war for which, unlike the British Parliament at the time of the American Revolution, it is in no wise responsible? I am free to say, even although it surprises my friend, that while the nation may be as generous and as tender-hearted toward the southern loyalists as their merit and the kind instincts of the nation dictate, that I am willing to be understood as holding the doctrine that this nation is under no legal obligation to pay the class of claims involved in this controversy.

Senators have grown indignant and eloquent that loyal men at the South have been called enemies. Why, Mr. President, that is a mere technical term. The feeling thus aroused reminds me of a case I remember once to have tried when defending a corporation under the plea of inevitable accident. I used the familiar term "act of God," and the opposing counsel read me quite a solemn lecture on account of my profanity. [Laughter.] When we in this argument speak of an enemy, we use a technical term. I would remind my friend that while he correctly classified the inhabitants of the country as friends, that he omitted to tell us enemies, and neutrals, the class termed enemies has a significant subdivision among enemies; one is known as hostis, and another as inimicus—a hostis being merely technically and in legal contemplation an enemy, while the inimicus is a virulent, inimical citizen. Therefore it is no disparagement for those who understandingly use technical terms to speak of the enemy country and enemy property. But although these are technical terms, they are of much importance. Involved in and associated with these technical words, is a doctrine which protects this nation from claims which would prevent its meeting its legal obligations—a doctrine which determines that the debt of the nation is to day only $2,500,000,000, and not, perhaps, $3,500,000,000. I do not object to the broadest liberality and bounty that the conscience of Congress will permit it to extend to the loyalists of the South; but I do object to this nation recognizing the position that we are under a legal obligation to pay as debts that which, by the law of nations, is no debt, because just here we may be determining on the ability of the nation to meet its obligations.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] said the other day that he would cast to the winds the doctrine which made any distinction between the legal rights of the northern man and the southern loyalists. Let me tell him that he cannot move the doctrine which distinguishes enemy property from friendly property than he can uproot the sturdy oak which has been anchored in the earth for centuries, and which has been growing more firm wrestling with the winds of time. That principle has lived through a thousand wars, and has not yielded even to the negotiations and diplomacy that have always succeeded them, and to-day has the sanction of every writer of authority and of all the Governments of the world. And I insist that whatever may be the proper extent of the bounty of the country toward southern loyalists, claims of the class in controversy are not a matter of debt.

The Senator from Wisconsin has painted the horrors of this war at the South; but have its effects been less fearful at the North? What northern heart has not bled? Has the South on this plea any claim on the tax-paying North?

Is the southern loyalist to be indemnified for the horrors of this war, while the expenditure, the blood, and the tears of the North are unrequited? Let us be content to suffer the consequences of the conflict to fall where they have been directed to fall. We cannot adjust them.

Let me refer to one or two positions of the Senator from Wisconsin. He still seeks to use the fact that the Government paid loyalists for their cotton seized as a precedent for this case. It is no precedent. There is a distinction so broad that all can see it between the duties which are incident to trusteeship the Government assumed in reference to this cotton and the liability of wrong-doers. We, as trustees, paid out the net proceeds of what we received, and that fact cannot be used as a precedent to hold the Government liable for such a use of property as is here in question in enemy territory. And as to the strictures upon my using the familiar maxim, "silent leges inter arma," let me say I invoked it only to show that the clause of the Constitution which says that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, was entirely silent in enemy territory during the war. And in that position I know the Senator agrees with me.

As to the position that our Army had such an occupation of Decatur as to make it one of the exceptional cases mentioned in the President's proclamation of 16th of August, 1862, and therefore not enemy territory—let me call the attention of the Senator to the fact that on the 31st March, 1863, so much of the prior proclamation as excepted from the effects of the war localities occupied from time to time by the forces of the United States was revoked, on the ground that the exception was found to create embarrassment. The exceptions being thus revoked, the inhabitants of the several States were declared in a state of insurrection, and all commercial intercourse between them and the rest of the United States declared unlawful until the insurrection should cease or be suppressed, and notice thereof given by proclamation. This proclamation of 1863 is found in 13 Statutes-at-Large.

But, aside from all this, it cannot be insisted that as soon as our forces advanced into a territory, so that it became possible for them to seize and use its property to erect a fortification, that eo instanti it became friendly territory and not subject to the rules of war. If that position be true, we could never seize enemy property, as our very approach converted it into friendly property. The fact that our forces continued subsequently to hold the place does not affect the character of the taking, for events are to be judged of at the time and in the relations in which they occur.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I rise to renew the motion of the honorable Senator from Arkansas, to recommit this bill to the Committee on Claims, with instructions that they examine two points: first, was the claimant, Miss Sue Murphey, loyal before the occupation of Decatur by the United States forces; second, was she the owner in fee simple of the property before that time, and if so, for how long. I move to recommit the bill with these instructions to the committee.

Mr. WILSON. I hope we shall send this bill back to the committee to investigate the case in every respect. I do not believe there is any merit in the claim; but that has been lost sight of in the general discussion. I have information which satisfies me that this woman was a disloyal woman. I have not a doubt, nor a shadow of doubt, on that point. I hope, however, that the bill will be recommitted, and that with it the amendment I proposed will go to the committee, and I hope the committee will take up the subject and settle it on some general principle. I hope the committee will not only investigate this particular case thoroughly in all respects, so that the facts may be established, but will at the same time consider the question of proposing some general plan, such as is suggested in my amendment, to settle other cases. I do not believe it is going to take the tens of millions of dollars which are spoken of to settle these claims. I know that that is not the opinion of the quartermaster's and commissary departments. The cases where property was taken under orders of this kind and damaged are very few indeed.

I think the whole matter should be settled, and settled within a few months, and settled forever, and kept out of our deliberations hereafter. We should adopt some plan of that kind; and I think we ought to have done it two years ago.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. President, I have doubts whether these instructions ought to be given to the committee. I suppose the honorable Senator from South Carolina does not desire to establish any rule for the examination of claims by the committees of this body, and another and a different rule for the examination of claims before the judicial tribunals of the country. Congress at the last session established a rule which I suppose ought to be applied in such cases as these, if indeed these are to be examined with a view to their payment. I read from the statutes of the second session of the Fortieth Congress, forty-fifth page. The third section of the act provides:

"That whenever it shall be material in any suit or claim before any court to ascertain whether any person did or did not give any aid or comfort to the late rebellion, the claimant or party asserting the loyalty of any such person to the United States during such rebellion shall be required to prove affirmatively that such person did during said rebellion consistently adhere to the United States, and did give no aid or comfort to persons engaged in said rebellion; and the voluntary residence of any such person in any place where at any time during such residence the rebel force or organization held sway shall be prima facie evidence that such person did give aid and comfort to said rebellion and to the persons engaged therein."

This rule is applied in the examination of cases before the Court of Claims; it is a rule already established by solemn act of both branches of Congress; and I think that rule is quite sufficient in its application to other claims not included in existing laws. The instruction proposed by the honorable Senator seems to contemplate that if the petitioner in this case was loyal before the acquisition of the territory on which this house was situated, that would be sufficient. The rule contained in the law is that it must be shown that she was loyal during the rebellion; and it must be shown also, as it seems to me according to this rule, that she did not voluntarily live within the rebel lines during the war. If this is the rule to be applied to all other claims, why shall it not be applied to this? It is the law of the land now; and if this bill with the amendment shall be recommitted to the Committee on Claims generally, I suppose they will examine it with reference to the rule now existing. And this suggests a reason why it should be recommitted, for when this case was examined heretofore by the committee this law had not been enacted; it is a rule established since the report of the committee was made; it is now the law of the land, and this case ought to be tried by the law as it exists, or if the rule is to be relaxed in any way it ought to be relaxed generally, so as to apply to claimants who appear before the Court of Claims.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President—
Mr. ANTHONY. If my friend from South Carolina will permit me, I wish to suggest to him that a mere recommitment will effect all the purpose which he has in view, and I think it will be more in accordance with our custom, which is not to instruct committees except to inquire into the expediency of matters.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I was rising to withdraw the instructions which I had moved, so that my motion is simply for a recommitment generally. As I have the honor to be on the committee, I will make it a point to inquire into the matters which I suggested in the instructions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is simply to recommit the bill to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SUMNER. Before this debate is closed

I ought, in justice to a gentleman who is not a member of this body, to whom I have referred in the course of the discussion, and whose name has been somewhat opprobriously mentioned by Senators on the other side of the Chamber, to make an additional statement with reference to him.

I have seen that gentleman since. I had the honor of seeing him at my own house last evening, and conversing with him more than an hour; and I feel that it is my duty after this long conversation to bear my testimony to the impression that he made upon me. He had resided in this very place or in this neighborhood as an editor of a paper, going down there from Ohio filled with loyalty and with sentiments of liberty. He, while there, was shocked by the conduct of this very family now so much in question. I believe his testimony. I could not listen to his conversation and witness his refinement of manner and the sensibility which he displayed not only on this subject but on all others to which we referred, without giving him my confidence; and I deem it my duty now to make this statement, especially as Senators on the other side, pressed by the letter which I introduced the other day, undertook to brand him so unjustifiably.

He has placed in my hands a further letter in the nature of testimony dated at Decatur, December 23, which I have shown to both the Senators from Alabama, and I have also shown it to the Senator from Rhode Island, whose name is mentioned in it. It is signed "Mary E. Austin." I mention the name so that the Senators over the way may make their criticism if they see fit. I believe there is no question about her loyalty. She writes as follows; I do not read the whole letter:

"I wish Mr. ANTHONY would visit Decatur. The Union people and rebels could tell him about her [the claimant's] pretended loyalty during the war. They could tell him of her devotion to the southern confederacy; how she urged every young man into the rebel army whom she had any influence over. Rebels here laugh enough about her going to Washington and playing off on the Senators."

I have received other letters also relating to this claimant. I make no further allusion to them, however.

There is another point on which I forebore to dwell with sufficient particularity when I spoke before. It is this. Assuming that this claimant is loyal, I honor her that she kept her loyalty under the surrounding pressure of rebellion. Of course, this was her duty; nor more nor less. The practical question is, shall she be paid for it? Had she been disloyal, there would have been no proposition of compensation. As the liability of the nation is urged on the single ground that she kept her regard for the flag truly and sincerely, it is evident that this loyalty must be put beyond question; it must be established like any other essential link of evidence. I think that I do not err in supposing that it is not established in the present case, at least with such certainty as to justify opening the doors of the Treasury.

But assuming that, in fact, the loyalty is established, I desire to go further, and say that not only is the present claim without any support in law, but it is unreasonable. The rebel States had become one immense prison-house of loyalty; Alabama was a prison-house. The nation, at every cost of treasure and blood, broke into that prison-house, and succeeded in rescuing the loyalists; but the terrible effort, which cost the nation so dearly, involved the loyalists in losses also. In breaking into the prison-house and dislodging the rebel keepers, property of loyalists suffered. And now we are asked to pay for this property damaged in our efforts for their redemption. Our troops came down to break the prison-doors and set the captive free. Is it not unreasonable to expect us to pay for this breaking?

If the forces of the United States had failed then would these loyalists have lost everything, country, property, and all: that is, if really loyal according to present professions. It was our national forces that saved them from this sacrifice, securing to them country, and, if not all of their property, much of it. A part of the property of the present claimant was taken in order to save all else, including country itself. It was a case, such as might occur under other circumstances, where a part is sacrificed in order to save the rest. It was in some respects a case of jettison where a part of the cargo was thrown overboard in order to save the rest of the cargo, and the ship itself. According to all analogies of jurisprudence, and the principles of justice itself, the claimant can look for nothing beyond such contribute as Congress in its bounty may appropriate. It is a case of bounty, and not of law.

It is a mistake to suppose, as has been most earnestly argued, that a claimant of approved loyalty in the rebel States should have compensation precisely like a similar claimant in a loyal State. To my mind this assumption is founded on a misapprehension of the Constitution, the law, and the reason of the case—three different misapprehensions. By the Constitution property cannot be taken for public use without "just compensation;" but this rule was silent in the rebel States. International law stepped in and supplied a different rule. And, when we consider how much was saved to the loyal citizen in a rebel State, by the national arms, it will be found that this rule is only according to justice.

But I have no disposition to shut the door upon claimants. Let them be heard; but the hearing must be according to some system, so that Congress shall know the character and extent of these claims. Before the motion of my colleague I had already prepared instructions for the committee, which I will read as expressing my own conclusion on this matter:

That the committee to whom this bill shall be referred, the Committee on Claims, be instructed to consider the expediency of providing for the appointment of a commission whose duty it shall be to inquire into the claims of the loyal citizens of the national Government arising during the recent rebellion anywhere in the United States, classifying these claims, specifying their respective amounts and the circumstances out of which they originated; also, the evidence of loyalty adduced by the claimants respectively, to the end that Congress may know precisely the extent and character of these claims before legislating thereupon.

As this is a resolution of instruction simply to consider the expediency of what is proposed, I presume there can be no objection to it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the honorable Senator takes his seat I should like to ask him a question, as he seems to have examined this British precedent. Is it not the fact that the persons for whom provision was made were persons who were compelled, in consequence of the success of our Revolution, to leave the United States and abandon everything and go and live within the British empire, so that they were completely separated from the inhabitants of the United States?

Mr. SUMNER. There were three different classes. The first was the class which the Senator has described; the second was a different class of persons residing in England whose property in the colonies had been confiscated; and the third class was placeholders, officeholders who had lost their appointments, which were usually for life. These three different classes in the report of the commission were put on different footings, and they were described under these different heads by Mr. Pitt on making the motion that he did.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is quite different from the condition of our southern loyalists.

Mr. SUMNER. Of course it is very different. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts move the paper he has sent up as an amendment to the motion to recommit?

Mr. SUMNER. I move it as an amendment to the motion to recommit—to recommit with instructions.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, of course this bill will be recommitted. Sue Murphey has long since dropped out of this debate, and this case would have excited but little interest had it not been for the assertion of a doctrine, which in effect cuts off the claim of every loyal man in the South, no matter how true his loyalty or how great his sufferings or sacrifices for the Union. Hence this is not simply the case of Miss Sue Murphey; and a personal character cannot be given to this argument just in the conclusion of it.

Again, Mr. President, we have the illustration made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] that a part of the cargo may be thrown overboard to save the ship and the residue of the cargo. The comparison is in point; but, as I understand the law, the ship and the rest of the cargo must contribute to pay for that which is lost, and the owner whose goods are thrown overboard shall not sustain the whole loss.

Again, sir, we are told by the distinguished Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] that if my house is on fire and the firemen come and extinguish the flames and damage my furniture I am not to sue them for damages. Did that distinguished Senator suppose that was a case in point? Did we send our armies to the South simply to save the houses of the loyalists. No, sir; it was the Union that was the fire, it was the Government that was about to be consumed, in which I and you and all of us were interested as much as the loyalist of the South was interested. The Senator's comparison fails.

Mr. President, if we cannot recognize the claim of any loyal man in the South because by so doing we shall recognize the claims of rebels to a large amount let us put the case upon that ground. Let us tell our southern friends honestly that we cannot recognize any of their claims, because if we do so we shall have a vast mass of rebel claims that will sink the Government in insolvency. If we put it upon that ground they will be satisfied. Or if we cannot pay the claims of genuine loyalists in the South without making the Government bankrupt let us lay the case honestly before them and tell them that we cannot pay them for that reason, and they will be satisfied. But do not let us put it upon the ground, which is as unfair to them as it is dishonorable to us, that we cannot pay them because they are constructive traitors.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will my friend be good enough to let us know whether, according to his view, the ship and cargo have not yet contributed to the jettison?

Mr. MORTON. I can answer the question. The Senator wants to know if the ship and cargo have not yet contributed. Ay, they have, and they will be called upon to contribute more. They have contributed to pay the loss of that man who lived in the North whose goods were thrown overboard; and all we ask is that the loyalist living in the South whose goods were thrown overboard shall be paid in the same way and upon the same principles.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I wish to make one single remark, and I trust the honorable Senator from Indiana will excuse me for so doing. He insists that we are calling our southern loyalists constructive traitors. That is entirely a mistake. We do not call them constructive traitors. We impute no treason to them at all; nor has any such intimation, to my knowledge, fallen from any gentleman who has participated in the debate on this side of the question. We call them technically, as has been very properly remarked by the honorable Senator from New Jersey, constructive enemies. That becomes inevitable, unless we abandon the ground taken by Congress in 1861, by which the rebel territory was substantially and in law declared to be enemy's territory. It is simply a technical designation of the people residing upon the particular territory.

Now, let me say to the honorable Senator from Indiana that there is a very broad distinction between a traitor and an enemy. A traitor is one who has committed treason under the Constitution of the United States by waging war against the United States, or by adhering to their enemies. He may also be an enemy, and so the books declare. He may be punished as a traitor when he is apprehended, and during the war he may also be treated as an enemy or as a belligerent. Nothing is plainer; there is no distinction more transparent in the books than this to which I have alluded.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I want to ask the attention of the Senate for only one moment to the illustration this case now affords of the hazard, and, as it seems to me, the futility of entertaining upon any view of the law such claims as this, one by one, as is proposed, before the committees of Congress. The honorable Senator from Wisconsin, anticipating what I am now going to suggest, admonished us of the importance of hot-foot in this business, if I may say so, of allowing the testimony to be taken at once before it should be eaten by the tomb or covered by the dust of time. Now look at the case. This woman came here while the rebellion was still raging in fact; in 1865 her case was here and her proof was proffered; it was before a committee of the House of Representatives more than once and was the subject of reports there. It was here, actually passed this body, coming to the Senate from a committee.

Now, it is presented again by a committee of the same designation, but composed of different Senators; and after a debate which has wearied the Senate by the mere accident of the procrastination and weariness of that debate, it drops out that this claimant, in place of being that heroic woman—I borrow a phrase from my eloquent friend from Kentucky—and that conspicuous example of non-combatant loyalty which we thought she was, is upon the balance of evidence as it stands, not only prima facie within the statute to which the Senator from Iowa calls attention, but conclusively and in point of fact one of the last women in the South to receive anything either in law or generosity from this Government. That is the case of a person diligent as a suitor who presented her claim and challenged scrutiny while all the men were yet upon the stage the eye-witnesses of her loyalty or her treason.

Now, sir, without amplifying it, I beg of Senators to consider what, even at this distance of time, is to be the fate of claims hereafter presented, no matter how diligent we may be; and if that view of the law is to prevail which has been presented so ably by the Senator from Wisconsin, which makes enemy's country in this territorial war, as I understand it, a peripatetic institution, a thing ever fluctuating as the tides fluctuate, always ebbing and flowing, and not only so, but existing in spots which themselves were shifting like snow-drifts or the sands of the desert—if the view of the law is to prevail that where the Army bivouacked it was no longer enemy territory, and as it struck its tents in the morning and marched enemy's territory receded step by step before our advancing columns; if that is true for the sake of fancy or of fact, then I beg that we may have some general provision which shall sift these claims, which shall perpetuate the testimony upon which they are to be indorsed as loyal or branded as traitorous, which proceeding will involve, of course, some provision by which counsel, agent, or representative is to appear for the United States to cross-examine witnesses, and armed with some process to compel their attendance on the other side. If this can be done it will be something more than chance-medley; otherwise it will be a lottery in which anybody may draw a prize, an auction in which the pushing and the brazen are most likely successfully to bid.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts has read a letter, which with his usual courtesy he showed to me before he laid it before the Senate, in which my name is used. All I have to say is that if I have been imposed upon in this matter the officers of the Army who were at Decatur were imposed upon first. The testimony which I bore to the loyalty of this lady, and which is commented upon so sneeringly in that letter, is not my testimony; it is the testimony of our officers. They said before the committee that they were received hospitably and kindly into that house. Perhaps they were not. Perhaps the writer of this letter knows better than they do whether they were so received or not. They stated that they had received from this lady valuable information. It is not strange, with such evidence before us, that I, and that members of the committee much more astute than I, should have come to the conclusion that these officers knew what they testified to, and testified to the truth. If it is possible that this lady, a rebel, was capable of convincing our officers there during their long sojourn that she was loyal, and capable of so convincing the Committee on Claims, composed of men such as the late Senator from New Hampshire and the present Senator from Wisconsin, his successor in the chairmanship of that committee, then I think a woman of such remarkable talents could find much better employment for them than in trying to get her just dues out of the United States and this Congress.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I shall vote against the motion to recommit this bill. I have heard nothing on this floor that in my judgment impugns the loyalty of this woman. I never saw Miss Murphey but once that I remember, and that has been some two years ago; but after the Senate have heard the testimony of the military officers and the statements of the former chairman of the Committee on Claims in relation to the proof of the loyalty of this woman, I do not think the Senate ought to doubt. There is nothing that has been said or produced in the course of this debate against the loyalty of Sue Murphey that, in my judgment, ought to influence the decision of a single Senator in relation to the point of her loyalty, so far as it has been impugned in the course of the progress of this debate. Whatever has been brought up in that form, in my judgment, deserves the scorn and contempt of universal manhood.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, I never refer to private correspondence in the Senate, except under very extraordinary circumstances. I act upon the report of the committee, supposing that this case was investigated by them; but when a letter comes in at the end of the discussion which is to throw a doubt over the claimant's loyalty, I feel under the circumstances constrained to state a fact which under other circumstances I would not state.

Some year or two years ago, precisely the time when I do not remember, Judge Dox, a friend whom I knew at college, who graduated the year before I did, wrote a letter to me introducing Miss Sue Murphey, from Alabama, and speaking of her in high terms and as a loyal citizen of the United States. I feel bound to state that.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator state the date of that letter?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I cannot state the precise date, but it is a year or two since Judge Dox wrote to me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What was the status of Judge Dox?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Judge Dox, I believe, was a loyal man always, in the State of Alabama. He was originally from the State of New York, a resident of Ontario county, and went to Alabama many years ago. That is my understanding of his position during the war in Alabama.

Mr. HENDRICKS. My confidence in the judgment of the committee on this question has not been shaken. I have had some little experience in courts, and I say the kind of evidence that has been introduced here, in my opinion, would not disturb the judgment of a judge or of a court in the most trivial case that could possibly come before them.

In regard to this claim upon the pending point, the judgment of the committee is supported by the testimony of the officers who commanded at Decatur, in Alabama. Those officers had opportunities to know. They state not only their judgment about it, as I understand; but they state the conduct of this person, and that conduct establishes the fact that she was true to the Union during the war. Now, the Senator from Massachusetts made his argument, it seemed to me, mainly for one purpose. A few days ago he had introduced the testimony of a witness who was impeached—some person unknown to the Senate for any very respectable purpose—and the Senator comes up to-day with a view to support that impeached witness; and what is his support?

Mr. FOWLER. I should like to mention another fact, with the Senator's permission?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Very well.

Mr. FOWLER. I stated the other day what I meant to say in regard to Mr. Humphreys. I had friendly feelings toward him. I wish now to state another fact that transpired last night. Mr. Humphreys made two visits last night. For the first time in his life he visited Miss Sue Murphey and told her that he was sorry he had written that letter, and he blamed her step-father for not informing him that the Ku-Klux were going to drive him out of the place, and also for a matter in connection with some money that was owing him. This was the first time he had ever seen Miss Murphey.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is the witness introduced to overcome the testimony of the commanding officers at Decatur. As I was going to suggest, the Senator from Massachusetts does not undertake to fortify the character of this witness by any knowledge of his character and his habits of life, which is the usual mode of supporting a witness in court; but he supports it by a conversation that he had with this witness last night, and wants the Senate to believe the witness because of the sweetness of his style and the consistency of his statements. Why, Mr. President, there are many of the most objectionable witnesses that ever come into courts who come in with a smooth tongue and a very delightful style. Of course, this witness is not to be credited here in opposition to the testimony of the officers known to the Senate, and such support as the Senator has been able to give to him will not establish him in the confidence of the Senate, in my judgment.

I am willing that this bill shall go back to the committee. If any Senator has any doubt on the question let the subject be considered again by the committee; but I do not vote that it go to the committee because of any supposed force found in the testimony that has been introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Then, who wrote the letter he read from a little while ago? Who is she? What is she? What are the motives that govern her in trying to defeat a bill in favor of her own sex here? We do not know anything about it. It is better to rely on the testimony of the officers, who have no motives to govern them for any improper purpose.

The Senator's illustration will not serve his purpose, in my judgment; his effort to illustrate a principle of law by a figure of speech will not do. He says Alabama was a prison-house; therefore his argument is the people were all criminals. As a matter of fact that will not do. That is the only logic there is found in his illustration.

I had supposed that the debate was closed by the argument of the Senator from Wisconsin, and I was surprised at the Senator from Massachusetts reopening it; but unquestionably he felt a desire to support the witness whom he had called to the stand, and in that view perhaps is justified. When the witness fell here, of course it was his business to try and hold him up. I have done that many a time in court; but if the witness was not himself tolerably strong, my efforts generally did not do much good. I believe just what these officers have said about this girl. I do not think there is anything now before the Senate to weaken our confidence in their statements. I do not think the case stated by the Senator from New York furnishes any illustration or any admonition to the Senate against this class of cases.

Mr. President, my principal purpose in rising was to inquire whether the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] yesterday goes with the bill to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. I suppose it does, if the motion covers the bill and the amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That amendment does not relate to the bill; it does not relate to the class of cases of which the case of Sue Murphey is one, but to altogether another class, as I understand—claims for supplies furnished to the quartermaster and commissary service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands now that the motion was that the bill be recommitted, and it did not mention the amendment. The motion, therefore, only covers the bill, and does not carry the amendment with it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am glad the amendment does not go, because I think it ought not to be attached to this bill. It is not a part of the bill; it does not relate to it; it is not germane to the subject.

Mr. WILSON. I should like to make an inquiry of the Chair. I desire to know where the amendment goes to? [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDRICKS. The amendment stays on the table, I suppose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment has not been adopted, and therefore it does not go with the bill.

Mr. SUMNER. Then I suggest that the motion for reference be modified so as to include the bill and all pending amendments, which will carry the amendment of my colleague.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If that amendment is proposed I shall oppose it, and I should oppose it upon principle if it were an original measure. In the first place, I do not think it is right to try to burden one measure with another measure not kindred to it. It is hardly fair legislation upon a private bill to thrust another subject which ought not to be connected with it, and which has no natural relation to it. I would not support such a proposition as that made by the Senator from Massachusetts. I think if these claims are to be considered at any time by any accounting officers of the Government it ought to be by those officers already provided for by law. I do not think military men are specially qualified to audit accounts. This proposition that a civilian in office is not to be trusted, but that he is to be displaced and military men appointed to settle accounts against the Government, I do not agree to.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply say to the honorable Senator from Indiana that in preparing the amendment originally I put into it a provision that would cover this case; but I was not satisfied that it was clearly drawn and well defined enough, and I supposed if the bill was to be recommitted the amendment would follow the bill and that the committee could make such modifications as they saw fit to cover that point, and could do it in a way to be perfectly safe.

I want to say a word to the Senator in regard to another matter. There have been twenty-five thousand claims made before the quartermaster and commissary departments. They have examined nearly twenty thousand of these claims. Their practice is to send into the sections of country where the claims originate to ascertain them, and they have the most thorough system of investigation. They find a great many officers who have either forgotten the facts or make statements that cannot be relied upon, as probably some may be in this very case now pending. I hope the bill, the amendment, and everything pertaining to it will go to the committee, and that they will report some general measure guarding all cases that ought to be covered and that we ought to act upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] to the motion to recommit.

Mr. SPENCER. The honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DOOLITTLE] has mentioned the name of Judge Dox as being a loyal citizen. I know Judge Dox well, have known him for many years. I have known him since 1862. At the time of the breaking out of the rebellion in Alabama he went North and remained until the Union armies occupied the place. His loyalty is unquestioned, and he is a distinguished citizen, an honorable and high-toned man in every particular.

A word now in reference to Miss Murphey. Living in the town in which she resides, knowing all the parties, I have but simply a word to say. She came here first in 1865, at the suggestion of a distinguished general officer of the Army, the general officer who tore down her property, General John G. Stevenson, and pressed this claim. She relies upon the evidence principally of General John G. Stevenson and General Robert S. Granger, who know her well. She denies in toto her having committed any disloyal acts, and claims, upon the other hand, that she can establish by undisputed evidence that she has performed acts of distinguished loyalty toward the Government of the United States while the rebellion was in progress. I hope that her claim will not be unnecessarily prejudiced; and I do not stand here to defend it; but she is willing to furnish the evidence, and I hope the committee will give her ample opportunity to do so.

Mr. WARNER. As the name of Mr. Humphreys has again been brought before the Senate, I feel bound, as a duty to a constituent, to say a word in addition to what I said the other day. In the report of my remarks in the Globe appears my testimony to this gentleman's character; but it does not appear quite as distinctly as I should wish it to be, and therefore I propose now to say a word. He is known to me as a man of good character, a man of honesty, and a man of intelligence. At the time I spoke of him the other day, I had in my pocket a recommendation to the Secretary of the Treasury, indorsing him as a worthy man, signed by every member of the Alabama delegation in both Houses of Congress.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am in favor of the recommitment of the bill with all the amendments that Senators may choose to offer; but I do not wish any instructions to go to the committee. That is not our custom.

Mr. SUMNER. I propose only instructions to consider the expediency of a certain thing. That there can be no objection to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SUMNER. I purposely put it in that form to avoid all objections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts by way of instruction.

The question being put, it was declared to be carried in the negative.

Mr. SUMNER. Which amendment have we been voting on?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts now on the floor.

Mr. SUMNER. It could not have been understood.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the Senator from Massachusetts had better offer his proposition as a resolution of inquiry separately, and let this bill go to the committee on its merits.

Mr. SUMNER. Let all the pending propositions go to the committee.

Mr. ANTHONY. After the bill is recommitment the Senator can then offer a resolution, if he thinks proper, instructing the Committee on Claims to inquire into the expediency of the proposition which he makes.

Mr. SUMNER. Why is not that all accomplished by one vote, that all pending propositions now go to the committee? That settles the whole question.

Mr. ANTHONY. Without instructions?

Mr. SUMNER. Without instructions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That alters nothing. The committee can report as they please, whether they be instructed or not. The instructions fall, in all parliamentary rules, when the main proposition is referred. The committee have full power to report on the subject whether instructed or not.

Mr. SUMNER. Well, I move that the bill and all pending propositions be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator withdraw his instructions?

Mr. SUMNER. They go as one of the propositions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina moves to refer the bill to the committee that reported it, the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SUMNER. I move to amend that motion, that the bill and all pending propositions relating to the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CATTELL. I hope the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts will not prevail. Let this bill be referred back to the committee in its original shape. I understand, then, the practice is that all the papers go with it to the committee as accompanying papers merely, and I think the Senate are not disposed to send these as instructions to the committee.

Mr. SUMNER. Nothing is moved as instructions. The Senator misunderstands the proposition.

Mr. WARNER. Allow me to state that I understood the Senator from South Carolina to withdraw his motion to refer with instructions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina has withdrawn the instructions; so that his motion is a mere motion to refer. The Senator from Massachusetts offers an amendment to refer with instructions; which is the question now pending.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg pardon of the Chair. There is an amendment there of mine directing the committee to consider the expediency of reporting a certain bill. Now, I move that the bill with all pending propositions, which would include my amendment and include also the amendment of my colleague, be referred to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator modifies his motion so that all the papers which have been offered shall go to the committee with the bill, with instructions—

Mr. SUMNER. There is no instruction. Simply that they go to the committee. My proposition is one of the papers, and they all go together.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate has heard the motion stated.

Mr. SUMNER. That the papers go to the committee. The committee can do what they choose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Of course they can, whether they are instructed or not. The question is on the motion to refer, as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 1673) to relieve William H. Bagley, of Wake county, North Carolina; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES.

Mr. STEWART. I desire to withdraw the motion that I made some days ago to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 1598) to relieve from disability R. W. Best and Samuel F. Phillips, of North Carolina. I entered the motion for the purpose of examining into some reports in regard to one of the parties.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be withdrawn if there be no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1460, regulating the duties on imported copper and copper ore, merely for the purpose of getting it before the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let me take it up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have something to say on that point if I can get the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan, to proceed to the consideration of the bill mentioned by him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Chair will permit anybody to say anything on this question before the motion is put I should like to say a word. It was stated some time ago, when the Sue Murphey case was not expected to last so long, that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. DAVIS] desired to have a resolution, which was reported not favorably from the Committee on Finance touching the national debt, taken up, that he might make some remarks upon a proposition that he had to submit, and that I was desirous of making some brief remarks upon the same question; and I believe I had the assent of my honorable friend from Ohio, [Mr. SUMNER,] though not binding the Senate, of course, that when this case was disposed of that resolution might be taken up for this purpose; not his assent that the thing should be carried to a final vote, but the Senate could then lay it aside if they thought fit. That proposition has been before this body for a long time, and I think it of importance, and therefore I hope that the Senate will be willing to take it up, particularly as through some action of mine the Senator from Kentucky was prevented, voluntarily to be sure, from addressing the Senate upon the proposition that he had to submit when a kindred proposition was before us. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will not take up this copper bill at this moment, although I am not opposed to the bill that I know of, and will proceed to consider, at least for a time, the resolution which I have mentioned.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next at twelve o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion can only be entertained by unanimous consent. If there be no objection the motion will be put.

Mr. NYE. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the motion cannot be entertained now. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senate will permit this bill to be taken up. I do not wish, of course, to consider it to-day at this late hour. I understood my friend from Vermont to agree to stand by me on that bill in taking it up the day before yesterday.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did; to take it up in the morning hour.

Mr. CHANDLER. Precisely; and to stand by me until I could get a vote upon it. I hope the Senate will take it up and leave it as the unfinished business, and to-morrow I am in hopes that in an hour we shall dispose of it. Therefore, I ask the Senate to take it up before the adjournment, so as to leave it as the unfinished business.

Mr. CONKLING. I rise to inquire of the Chair whether it is not in order, a motion having been made by a Senator and he having surrendered the floor, as he does of course after he makes the motion, to submit a motion that when the Senate adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Two motions cannot be pending at the same time.

Mr. CONKLING. No, sir; the motions would not be at the same time; but when a motion is made and pending certainly it seems to me that a motion to adjourn or to adjourn over must be in order. I have no objection to taking up the bill of the Senator from Michigan at the proper time. The House of Representatives has adjourned over until Monday, and I think it will be inconvenient for a number of reasons to have a session to-morrow. There will be no Saturday, perhaps, during the session which it will be convenient to so many Senators to have in reference to departmental and other business as to-morrow. I should not like to vote upon the motion to take up this bill, and then have a motion at once to adjourn, so that we should not be permitted to take the sense of the Senate on the other motion. I shall be glad to vote with the Senator at the proper time, but I do not think it would be well to press his bill in such a way as to prevent an expression of the Senate on the other question. If he can prevent an adjournment over, that is all very well; but I should like to vote upon it. If the Senator has no objection, suppose we take a vote on that question now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to submit a motion which, I believe, is always in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No motion is in order until this is disposed of.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think a motion to adjourn is always in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to adjourn is in order, if a Senator has the right to the floor to make it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe I have the floor unless somebody is speaking.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill I have mentioned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the motion pending.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I ask for a vote upon it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, upon that motion, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CONKLING. Now, Mr. President, pending that motion to adjourn under the rules I move, as a privileged question, that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next; and that motion, the rule says, shall be put first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not a privileged question.

Mr. SHERMAN. The motion to adjourn is a higher motion.

Mr. CONKLING. I appeal to the rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Chair rule that, pending that motion, it is not in order to move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. We hold that doctrine very strong. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONKLING. The shorter way is to submit, although I think the rule and parliamentary law are otherwise.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. Is it in order now to make a motion for an adjournment over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order because another motion is pending. The Senator from Michigan moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill mentioned by him, which is called the copper bill.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 26, noes 15.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Now, I move that when the Senate adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next at twelve o'clock.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I voted with the Senator to take his bill up, and supposed that after that there would be no factious opposition to this other motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. I want to pass the bill to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to adjourn, which is not debatable.

The motion was not agreed to—ayes sixteen, noes not counted.

Mr. CONKLING. Is it in order now to move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is never in order while one motion is pending and undisposed of to make another, unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONKLING. Is there one pending now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is. The bill is before the Senate now as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONKLING. And does the Chair rule that it is not in order at that time to make a motion to adjourn over until Monday?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It cannot be. That motion is not a privileged motion at all. A motion to adjourn supersedes it, but not a motion to adjourn to a certain day.

Mr. CONKLING. I yield the floor to the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. TRUMBULL.]

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CONKLING. I believe I had the floor and was trying to yield it to the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York has not yielded the floor.

Mr. CONKLING. No, sir. I do yield it now to the Senator from Illinois, who asked me to do so.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the pending bill and all prior orders be laid aside for the purpose of making the motion suggested by the Senator from New York.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope that will not be done. I have got the bill just where I want it, and I hope the Senate will not lay it aside.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is only for the purpose of submitting the other motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will withdraw the motion to postpone I shall not object to its being laid aside informally for the purpose suggested, but I do object to any postponement.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Very well; that is sufficient.

Mr. CONNESS. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONKLING. Then, if the bill is laid aside informally, I submit the motion to adjourn over.

Mr. POMEROY. That can only be done by unanimous consent, and I object.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I move, unless the Senator's motion is before the Senate, to postpone the pending bill in order that the motion may be made to adjourn over. Is that in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order to move to postpone the present business.

Mr. CONKLING. For that purpose I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the present bill and all other prior orders be postponed for the purpose of submitting a motion that when the Senate adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope that motion will not be agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CONKLING. Now I make the motion, that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to—ayes twenty-eight, noes not counted.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move that the Senate resume the consideration of the bill which was just laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan moves the Senate resume the consideration of the bill just laid aside.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question on the motion; and declared that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I addressed the Chair before the vote was announced, and I desire to be recognized.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then it ought to be put over again if that is the case.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I desire to make some remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order for the Senator to do so.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If I am recognized by the Chair, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CHANDLER. The bill is up already, I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Friday, January 15, 1869.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY D. MOORE, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being Friday, the first business in order is the calling of committees for reports of a private nature, commencing with the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, which on Friday last reported a bill by the gentleman from California, [Mr. JOHNSON,] which bill is still pending.

Mr. ELA. I rise to make a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. If it is on public business it cannot be received on private bill day except by unanimous consent.

Mr. ELA. I desire to report a resolution from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read; after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That twenty thousand copies of the report of the Special Commissioner of the Revenue, with the appendices complete, be printed for the use of the House, and one thousand copies of the same for the use of the Treasury Department, five hundred of which are to be bound.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, this resolution is before the House, and the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ELA] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ELA. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. KELLEY. I ask the gentleman from New Hampshire to allow me to be heard on this resolution.

Mr. ELA. For how long a time?

Mr. KELLEY. I cannot say precisely.

Mr. JUDD. I must object to the introduction of the resolution if it is to give rise to debate.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to say a few words on this resolution whenever it may come up. I have a copy of the report in my hands, and would like to invite the attention of the House to several points in connection with it.

Mr. ELA. I withdraw the resolution for the present.

REPRESENTATIVE FROM GEORGIA.

Mr. DAWES. I rise to a question of privilege. The Committee of Elections, to whom were referred the credentials of John H. Christy and John A. Wimpy, claimants for a seat in this House as Representatives from the sixth congressional district of Georgia, have instructed me to submit a report, accompanied with three resolutions. I ask that the resolutions may be read, and the report laid on the table and printed.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That J. H. Christy, having voluntarily given countenance, counsel, and encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility to the United States, is not entitled to take the oath of office as a Representative in this House from the sixth congressional district of Georgia, or to hold a seat therein as such Representative.

Resolved, That John A. Wimpy, not having received a majority of the votes cast for Representative in this House from the sixth congressional district of Georgia, is not entitled to a seat therein as such Representative.

Resolved, That the Committee of Elections be discharged from the further consideration of the question of removing political disabilities from John H. Christy, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Reconstruction.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the report will be laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection.

ELECTION CONTEST—SWITZLER VS. ANDERSON.

Mr. STOVER. Mr. Speaker, I was not present yesterday when the report of the Committee of Elections in the case of Switzler vs. Anderson was presented, and I desire now to state that while I agree with the majority of the committee in a portion of their report, I entirely dissent from the resolutions as reported and concur with the former minority report. I may add that I shall have something to say upon the question when the report shall be called up.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CULLOM. This being private bill day, I desire to inquire what committee is entitled to be called during the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has one bill undisposed of. When that shall have been acted on the Committee for the District of Columbia will next be called. The bill first in order during the morning hour is House bill No. 860, for the relief of Luther McNeal, late postmaster at Lancaster, Erie county, New York. The gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is entitled to the floor on this bill.

Mr. TIFT. I ask the gentleman from California to yield for a moment that I may introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I must object to the gentleman yielding, on account of the consumption of time during the morning hour. I desire that the Committee for the District of Columbia shall be reached as soon as possible.

LUTHER M'NEAL.

The House resumed, as the first business in order during the morning hour, the consideration of the bill pending at the expiration of the morning hour last Friday, being the bill (H. R. No. 860) for the relief of Luther McNeal, late postmaster at Lancaster, Erie county, New York; on which Mr. JOHNSON was entitled to the floor.

The bill proposes to pay to Luther McNeal, for money and postage stamps belonging to the United States, and which were stolen from the post office at the town of Lancaster, Erie county, New York, while he was postmaster, $178 35, which sum he has paid to the Government on settlement with the Post Office Department; the money to be paid out of the Post Office fund by the Postmaster General upon McNeal making satisfactory proof that the money and stamps were stolen without fault on his part.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I apprehend it is unnecessary for me to explain this bill again, having made an explanation of it on last Friday. I will state again, however, that the committee were unanimously of the opinion that Mr. McNeal ought to be repaid this amount. The burglars are now serving out their term in the penitentiary. We are satisfied that the robbery was not the result of any carelessness on the part of the postmaster, but that he used all the care that could be used under the circumstances. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time; and passed.

Mr. JOHNSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COURT OF CLAIMS.

On motion of Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1646) extending the act of July 4, 1864, limiting the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, &c., to the loyal citizens of all the States now represented in Congress; and the same was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

On motion of Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Military Affairs was also discharged from the consideration of the communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a list of payments made and balances certified under the act of March 3, 1868; and the same was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

JOHN HEGEMAN.

On motion of Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Military Affairs was also discharged from the consideration of the memorial of John Hegeman, for the use of his pontoon bridges; and the same was referred to the Committee of Claims.

S. S. POTTER.

On motion of Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Military Affairs was also discharged from the consideration of the memorial of S. S. Potter, for payment for use of his buildings as hospitals; and the same was referred to the Committee of Claims.

SCOTT AND BRINDLEY.

On the motion of Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Military Affairs was also discharged from the consideration of the claim of Scott & Brindley, for payment of rent of building in New Albany, Indiana, for hospital purposes; and the same was referred to the Committee of Claims.

RILEY'S MANUAL.

Mr. McCULLOUGH, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 406) for the purchase of Riley's Manual; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

FREDERICK SCHLEY.

Mr. THOMAS, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 407) for the relief of Frederick Schley; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. HAMLIN, one of its clerks, announced that that body had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1673) to relieve W. H. Bagley, of Wake county, North Carolina, of political disabilities.

E. M. SARGENT.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON, by unanimous consent, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads was discharged from the consideration of the memorial of E. M. Sargent; and the same was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

UNIVERSITY FOR THE BLIND.

Mr. INGERSOLL, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1563) to incorporate the University for the Blind in the District of Columbia, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The substitute was read. The preamble recites that an effort has been put forth to establish a national institution to advance the educational interest of the blind, by building up a library for their use in raised letters, preparing apparatus addressed to the sense of touch, and by erecting a university in which they may acquire a liberal education; that it is desirable to secure the coöperation of the friends of the enterprise in every part of the United States; that the blind of each State are to receive the benefits accruing from said library and university in proportion to the amount of money contributed in their State; that with a view to promote this object boards have been organized in various States and will be in other States, and a general organization is needed in order more effectually to carry out this effort; and that said institute has been located in the District of Columbia under the name of the American University for the Blind. The bill, therefore, incorporates a board of regents to control and manage the said institution, defining their powers, &c.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. What is the proposition before the House? I understand there is a substitute for the bill, and I want the substitute read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk has just read the substitute.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Very well; then I ask to have the original bill read.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Is not that rather too late now?

The SPEAKER. It is not; it may be asked at any time before the passage of the bill.

Mr. INGERSOLL. My colleague is just as factious as ever. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read the original bill.

Mr. INGERSOLL. If I can have the attention of the House for a few minutes I will endeavor so to explain the bill that I imagine there will be no objection to its passage. The whole and sole purpose of this bill is to advance the educational interests of the blind throughout the United States. The purpose of the bill is set out in detail in the preamble, which perhaps has been read by many members, and if not, they will find the whole scope of the bill expressed in the preamble. The committee that has had charge of this bill, fearing that this institution if located in the District of Columbia might become a charge on the United States Government, struck out that portion of the first section of the bill contained between lines eight and twelve, as follows:

Together with one other person to be appointed by the President, one by the Chief Justice, one by the President of the Senate, and two by the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States of America.

We struck out those words for the purpose of disconnecting this institution entirely from the Government, so that it will stand now as a benevolent institution organized by the friends of the blind throughout the United States, selecting the District of Columbia as a sort of neutral ground between the North and the South, the East and the West, with the sole purpose of promoting the educational interests of the blind. It can in no event become a charge upon the Government of the United States, for it is entirely disconnected from the Government; not like the institution for the deaf and dumb or for the insane located within the District of Columbia; they have become charges upon the Government, and were so intended at their organization. But this institution is intended to be supported by contributions from benevolent and philanthropic persons throughout the United States without any claim whatever upon the Government of the United States. The feature of the bill which has been stricken out by the committee was perhaps liable to an objection, for the reason that if the President of the United States could appoint one of the trustees, the Vice President one, the Speaker of the House two, and the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court one, it would connect it so far with the Government, and might be made the basis of a claim against the Government for some aid. This bill disconnects the institution altogether from the Government. It is to be supported by voluntary contributions; and I will state here to the House that there was an institution similar to this once located in the State of Louisiana before the war; it has a fund accumulated of $20,000 of cash capital which it proposes to turn over to this institution. Philanthropic men everywhere, I understand, propose to contribute for the support of this institution for this very benevolent and praiseworthy object. This is the sum and total of the purpose of the bill.

I move now to amend section ten of the substitute by inserting in line two, after the word "property," the words "owned by said university;" so that it will read:

That any and all property owned by said university, personal, real, mixed, or otherwise, be, and is hereby, exempted from taxation.

Mr. CHANLER. I would like to ask the gentleman, first, whether there is any petition before the House asking for this institution; and if so, by whom it is signed? Is this measure petitioned for from any section of the country?

Mr. INGERSOLL. Yes; it is.

Mr. CHANLER. By whom?

Mr. INGERSOLL. By gentlemen of very high character, one of whom was for a long time president of an institution of this character—an asylum for the blind in Ohio and another in Pennsylvania; and by other gentlemen of high character throughout the United States.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I suggest that the petition be read at the Clerk's desk, so that we may know who the parties are.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. CHANLER. I would like to ask the gentleman what prevents these benevolent gentlemen from moving their institutions here without an act of Congress?

Mr. INGERSOLL. It is evident that no institution of this character could be established and conducted without an incorporation, so that there might be somebody in charge of it that would be responsible to the contributors. You cannot have an institution of this character without an organization—there is not one in existence, and never will be, without an organization—based upon some legislative authority, so that its rights may be respected and protected and the rights of all connected with it preserved and enforced.

Mr. CHANLER. I would also ask the gentleman what there is particularly attractive in this District at this time which should require the blind of Pennsylvania and Ohio to remove here to be instructed? There are enough blind already in the District without providing for the removal here of the blind from other sections of the country.

Mr. INGERSOLL. In reply to the gentleman, I will say that even the blind can see the purpose of locating this institution in the District of Columbia. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANLER] cannot see it I certainly am not in fault.

Mr. CHANLER. I ask to have the petition read.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I have the floor.

Mr. CHANLER. Will it be in order to call for its reading at some time during the consideration of this bill?

The SPEAKER. It will not, because the petition is not to be acted upon by the House.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I will state to the House very candidly why it is sought to establish this institution here. The benevolent people of the United States living in the northern States object to this institution being located in Richmond or Louisville or New Orleans because they think it would then be, perhaps, too much subject to southern influence. The southern people object to its location in Boston or Chicago for a similar reason. But they have all agreed on the District of Columbia as to them neutral ground where the interests of all would be best protected. That is the only reason, and it is a very good one. Now, with this explanation of the bill, I call for the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope not. Mr. INGERSOLL. I hope it will be seconded.

The question was then taken on seconding the previous question; and upon a division there were—ayes 44, noes 50; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. INGERSOLL and Mr. CHANLER were appointed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask my colleague [Mr. INGERSOLL] to withdraw for a few moments his call for the previous question.

Mr. INGERSOLL. No, sir; there is no use in withdrawing.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I want to state a few facts.

Mr. INGERSOLL. The bill is perfectly understood now.

The House again divided upon seconding the previous question; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 61, noes 56.

So the previous question was seconded.

The question was upon ordering the main question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the bill and pending amendments be laid on the table; and on that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 81, nays 68, not voting 78; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Axtell, Bailey, Baker, Baldwin, Beaman, Benjamin, Benton, Boyer, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Cary, Chanler, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Cook, Cornell, Delano, Eggleston, James T. Elliott, Fields, Fox, Getz, Golladay, Haight, Harding, Holman, Hotchkiss, Asabel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Hunter, Johnson, Thomas L. Jones, Judd, Kerr, Knott, William Lawrence, Loughbridge, Marshall, McCarthy, McCormick, McKee, Mercer, Moore, Morrill, Mullins, Newcomb, Niblack, Nicholson, Paine, Peters, Polesley, Randall, Raun, Root, Sawyer, Scofield, Shanks, Stigreeves, Spalding, Starkweather, Stover, Sypher, Taber, Taffe, Taylor, Tift, Lawrence S. Trimble, Trowbridge, Van Aiken, Burt Van Horn, Van Trump, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Thomas Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, and Young—81.

NAYS—Messrs. Arnell, James M. Ashley, Banks, Barnes, Beatty, Beck, Bingham, Boles, Boutwell, Boyden, Buckland, Roderick R. Butler, Callis, Sidney Clarke, Clift, Corley, Cullom, Deweese, Dodge, Beckley, Thomas D. Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferriss, French, Goss, Gove, Gravely, Heaton, Higby, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Alexander H. Jones, Julian, Kelley, Koontz, Lash, Marvin, Maynard, McCullough, Miller, Newsham, Norris, Perham, Pierce, Platts, Poland, Price, Prince, Ross, Schenck, Shellabarger, Stevens, Stokes, Stone, Thomas, Twichell, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Whittemore, William Williams, James F. Wilson, and John T. Wilson—68.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Allison, Ames, Archer, Delos R. Ashley, Barnum, Blackburn, Blaine, Blair, Bowen, Bromwell, Buckley, Benjamin F. Butler, Cake, Covode, Dawes, Dickey, Dixon, Dockery, Donnelly, Driggs, Edwards, Ela, Eldridge, Ferry, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Griswold, Grover, Halsey, Hamilton, Haughey, Hawkins, Hill, Hooper, Hopkins, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Kellogg, Kelsey, Ketcham, Kitchen, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Logan, Lynch, Mallory, Moorhead, Morrissey, Mungen, Myers, Nunn, O'Neill, Orth, Pettis, Phelps, Pike, Pile, Pomeroy, Prudden, Robertson, Robinson, Selye, Smith, Stewart, John Trimble, Upson, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Wyck, Vidal, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Windom, Wood, Woodbridge, and Woodward—78.

So the bill and amendments were laid on the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote last taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired; and the next business in order is the bill pending at the adjournment yesterday, to provide for the construction of a ship-canal around the Falls of Niagara. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MAYNARD. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield a moment that I may introduce a resolution inquiring into the efficiency of the police force in this District?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I have agreed that, with the consent of the House and the Speaker, my colleague [Mr. JUDD] shall have the floor at the present time, and that I shall follow him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that by an arrangement between the friends and opponents of this bill the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. JUDD], who is in favor of the bill, will precede in debate his colleague, [Mr. WASHBURN] who is opposed to the bill. The Chair, therefore, recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUDD] as entitled to the floor. Does he yield to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD], who wishes to submit a resolution of inquiry?

Mr. JUDD. Yes, sir.

POLICE OF THE DISTRICT.

Mr. MAYNARD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Whereas Mr. James Wells, a clerk in the Sixth Auditor's office for the Post Office Department, was knocked down and robbed at the hour of nine o'clock last night about seventy-five yards above the west entrance to the Capitol grounds, and while on his way to his residence on Capitol Hill; Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee for the District of Columbia be requested to inquire into the police arrangements of the city, and whether increased efficiency is needed for the protection of persons passing by the national Capitol.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BROOMALL. I call for the regular order. I shall be obliged to be absent from the Hall soon, and I want to vote against this Niagara ship-canal bill before I go away.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I ask my colleague [Mr. JUDD] to give way for a few minutes that I may make a personal explanation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROOMALL] insists on the regular order.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw that demand for a few moments.

Mr. BROOMALL. I shall be called away in a short time; and I want the vote on the pending bill to be reached soon that I may vote against it.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I will occupy but a very short time.

Mr. BROOMALL. I am very sorry that I cannot withdraw my demand for the regular order.

NIAGARA SHIP-CANAL.

The House, according to order, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1212) to provide for the construction of a ship-canal around the Falls of Niagara.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, the project of a ship-canal around the Falls of Niagara has been before the people of this country for at least a quarter of a century. It has gathered strength by the discussion which the question has received and by the necessities growing out of the increase of commerce and business, and the creation during that time of a comparatively new nation west of the Lakes. If honorable members will reflect for one moment upon the nature of the project as connected with the navigation to which the Falls of Niagara constitute one interruption they will see how important to the nation, East and West, is the removal of this obstruction. This line of navigation and channel of commerce through Lake Superior, river St. Mary, Lake Michigan, Lake and river Huron, and Lake and river St. Clair, Lake Erie, Niagara river, and Lake Ontario to the St. Lawrence, where it becomes Canadian, constitute about two thousand miles of navigable waters, and add to it the St. Lawrence to the sea-board and you have a total of about twenty-five hundred miles.

We have of American coast on these rivers and lakes over three thousand miles, and this, as I may term it, inland sea-coast is to-day dotted with thriving and flourishing cities—cities the natural result of the settlement and cultivation of the fertile lands that border upon most of it—and all dependent upon those waters for the transportation of the products to market, not only agricultural, but the rapidly increasing products of numerous mines, has become within the last twenty-five years, in point of population and production, an empire within itself. As was shown yesterday by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. PAINE], eleven millions of people in a few of those northwestern States now demand at the hands of the Government of the United States some facilities for the transportation of their surplus productions to the markets that need them.

Mr. Speaker, it has been said by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HUMPHREY], in connection with his claims for the State of New York, that there is some constitutional objection to the project now before the House. Sir, if honorable members will place their eyes upon the map they will see that from the head of Lake Superior down to Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence, where it comes within the British dominions, only three natural obstructions to the navigation exist on this entire route: first, the rapids at Sault Ste. Marie; second, the St. Clair flats; and third, this obstruction in the Niagara river. The Government has, by appropriations made by act of Congress, removed in part the first two obstructions, and the question now arises shall this beneficent policy, entered upon in the interest of commerce and the interest of a large portion of the people, be arrested at this stage of their progress?

Why, Mr. Speaker, do we build light-houses on all these lakes? Why do we remove rocks from the harbor of New York? Why is this Government to-day expending its money to remove obstructions in the navigation of the Mississippi? Why is it that at the gentleman's own city of Buffalo the Government has spent its millions in constructing a harbor for the protection of commerce? If, then, the Government can remove obstructions in New York harbor, can build a harbor at Buffalo, can remove obstructions in the Mississippi river in accordance with the Constitution, why is that instrument thrown at us when we propose to remove another obstruction on the line I have described more annoying than all of them? We do not propose by this bill to create any new line, as has been alleged, or new avenue of commerce, but simply to obviate a natural obstruction to this grand avenue of commerce so that it may be used with greater facility by this Government and the people than it has been hitherto.

To say the Government has not constitutional power to do this work is to belie the entire history of this Government upon these questions; for from its very foundation it has, under that clause of the Constitution which confers upon Congress the power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States," built harbors, light-houses, and beacons, and cleared the channels of rivers. To do the last the work must be of a national character. I do not contend, Mr. Speaker, that there is power to remove an obstruction in every river, but when a river bears to market the commerce of various States no sane man will doubt the power of Congress in the premises; but, in the language of another, "great and widespread benefits give to any enterprise a national character."

The gentleman from New York seems to intimate that the Government of the United States cannot enter within the territory of a State to interfere with its soil or its sovereignty in the execution of these powers. Why, sir, I have shown that from the beginning of the Government to this time it has been the uniform practice of the Government to enter within the territory of States for the purpose of making improvements of a national character, and the State of New York, grand and noble as she is, cannot stand in the way of the demands of a large portion of the people of the country.

The gentleman tells us that this is a scheme, and he repeats it over and over again. He can hardly find epithets strong enough to characterize the measure. Why, sir, if he had looked at the bill he would have seen that there is no scheme in the sense that the gentleman uses that word. It grants no privilege, it creates no corporate powers; no individual interest is connected with the enterprise. There is no appropriation of bonds, there is no subsidy provided for in the bill. It is a direct application by the Government of the United States of its money to construct a great public work for the public benefit. It bears no analogy to the schemes so often denounced on this floor for depleting the Treasury for private interests and purposes. There can be no pretense under this bill that there is anything of that kind.

Let me say to members of the House that this is simply a question whether the Congress of the United States will remove an obstruction that stands in the way of the prosperity of a large portion of the people of this country. It is not, I perhaps cannot too often repeat, a project for creating a new line of transportation or channel of commerce. That is the distinction between it and any other project for the alleged development of our resources that has been presented for the consideration of Congress. I say, then, that when any gentleman charges us with advocating a speculative scheme or project he has not read with care the bill, or he designs to leave an impression which the provisions of the bill do not warrant.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. HUMPHREY] has said that this canal will not be profitable if constructed, and he gives as an argument that if it would be profitable capitalists would have seized it before this time and corporations would have built it. Suppose it will not be profitable, that is the very reason why, if the necessities of commerce and the interest of the people demand the improvement, that the Government should build this canal. I say, then, that it is no argument to address to the members of this House that capitalists would not enter upon an enterprise of this kind. But there is another feature of this subject which to my mind is stronger than all others in view of the current history of the day. There is no man within the sound of my voice who looks at public transportation and at the organization and consolidations of railroads that are now going on but would say that if there is an avenue that the people demand it should be kept free from any sort of position in which these monopolists can grab it at the expense of the people. Let me tell my friend from New York that if it is in the hands of a private company, profitable or unprofitable, and those railway lines that reach to his city and which extend to mine desired it, you would find them in possession, and tolls would be levied that would entirely obstruct business and transportation upon this canal.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I would ask the gentleman if he voted for the bill that was passed in the Thirty-Ninth Congress incorporating a company to construct this work?

Mr. JUDD. I did not, because I was not a member of that Congress. Had I been, I might have taken it as a last resort, but I do not think I should. The gentleman's argument in regard to this question of constitutional power might have applied to the creation of a corporation within a State for the purpose of constructing these works. That is the objection that I understand prevailed in the other branch of Congress, and that is the reason the bill did not pass, because men strongly in favor of the measure and looking upon the work as absolutely necessary to the prosperity of the country, refused to intrust such power to a corporation that might by and by entirely obstruct by their charges and exactions the passage of produce and commerce through this canal. That was the reason, and I say to my friend from Buffalo that it was upon due consideration and careful reflection in regard to the possibilities growing out of the use of that power that the friends of this measure decided that if it was a work that was entitled to favorable consideration it was a work that ought to be done by the Government and not trusted to the hands of any corporation.

While asserting that the proposed improvement would not be profitable the gentleman said the Welland canal had ceased to be profitable. There are reasons for that. When the Welland canal was built the commerce on the lakes was a mere tithe—no, not a tithe, of what it is at present. Economy in transportation and the increasing freights has caused the building of larger vessels, and that business is done with a class of vessels that cannot pass through the Welland canal and do business upon Lake Ontario. That is a good reason, and I will tell the gentleman that the statistics show that up to the time that this large class of vessels were brought into use so as to diminish the use of that canal, freights were always cheaper to Oswego, two hundred and fifty miles beyond the mouth of this canal, or thereabouts, than to Buffalo.

My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. PAINE] demonstrated so clearly the onerous burdens that were levied upon our surplus productions by the present mode of carriage that it would be a work of supererogation for me to undertake to give any more figures upon that subject. It is known to every intelligent man that the Northwest produces immensely more than we want for our own use. We feed New England and half of New York. It has been said that "the carrying trade is the right arm of all agricultural industry, of commerce and of civilization." Cheap transportation is absolutely essential to the successful and profitable cultivation of the vast agricultural regions of the Northwest. The cheapening of transportation by this measure will not redound alone to the benefit of the Northwest. It will operate equally for the benefit of New England and New York that want our surplus products. In creating new avenues and cheapening transportation you benefit both sections of country, and thus distribute your blessings equally.

Mr. Speaker, the time has arrived when the Government should do something to relieve us from the taxes imposed upon us by the constituents of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HUMPHREY], for the use we make of the Erie canal.

New York has received back into her coffers, by tolls levied upon the products of the West, every dollar, and more than she has invested in the Erie canal. It is time that she should cease her grasp upon the industry of the region of country that I, in part, represent.

The gentleman from New York seems to think that there is something wrong in this bill, because under certain sections of it authority is given for making contracts. He says: "There is where the scheme comes in." Well, there is where the scheme comes in in every public improvement. In everything that is done by the Government you must vest such a power somewhere. It is a power conferred upon every corporation. The work can only be done in whole by the day's work, or in part, it may be let out under contract. The gentleman forgot to tell us that full provision is made in the bill for public advertising and letting to the lowest bidder.

But the gentleman says that under certain circumstances a portion of the Army is to be used for this scheme. Now, if I had not supposed that my friend from New York [Mr. HUMPHREY] was a very serious man I should have considered that observation a most excellent joke. The idea that any unemployed portion of the Army of the United States should be allowed to earn wages—that is the provision of the bill—by digging on this canal in the same way that they earn wages by building forts, barracks, and other public works, seems very shocking to the gentleman.

There can be no doubt that the necessities of the country, as I said before, absolutely demand the construction of this work. I propose to devote a very few moments at this time to the project offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUMPHREY] as a substitute for this bill. He will excuse me if I remark to him that it is a strange proposition in view of his bold assertion that all appropriations of money for works of internal improvement are schemes that he intends most stoutly to resist, and that the present bill is a part of this great system of peculation upon the Treasury which it is charged is being urged by a lobby here who are contriving ways and means for robbing the Treasury of the United States; and, as a sequence of his own virtuous indignation against these plunderers, he asks by his substitute that the Government of the United States should give to the State of New York the sum of $10,000,000, which is but $2,000,000 less than we ask for the completion of the work authorized by the bill under discussion. He has told us in his argument that it is for the enlargement and ultimate free use of the Erie canal. The gentleman's substitute leaves it discretionary with the State of New York as to the time for completing. And what after completion? Why, tolls are continued to be levied substantially in the discretion of New York until the entire cost, principal and interest, has been repaid to the State and the General Government, and in addition thereto the canal debt of the State of New York. New York has already collected from the revenues of that canal more than all the cost of its construction, with interest thereon. Under that proposition I do not believe that my friend, even with his youthfulness, will live to see free transportation on the Erie canal.

His proposition is an ingeniously prepared scheme. I shall not consume the time of the House now by examining it in detail. But if I misrepresent the proposition in my general statement of its provisions he can correct me. But I say now, in my place, that there is no pretense, so far as any official act is concerned, that New York will act upon that plan at all.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. JUDD. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I desire to state that in 1862 the State of New York passed a law asking the Federal Government to do this very thing.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, I am advised that that was limited to five years; my friend from New York [Mr. VAN HORN] tells me so. But no matter about that. Mr. Speaker, I am not content to let the State of New York, if we can avoid it, rule over us in this matter. I prefer that we should be under the guardianship of the Congress of the United States as to the rate of toll which we are to pay for the transportation of our produce to market. I infinitely prefer that the public, as represented in the Congress of the United States, should be our guardian, instead of the sovereignty of the State of New York, whose interests are to be protected at the expense of the producer in the West and the consumers at the East. I prefer that the Representatives from all the States of the Union should have something to say as to the amount of tolls to be levied upon any canal through which the products of the West may seek a market.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I have here a copy of the bill, and I should be glad to have the gentleman examine it.

Mr. JUDD. It does not matter whether the term be five years or ten years. My objection is that it should not be left in the power of any State to make levies in its discretion upon the commerce passing through it, and that, too, after it has received a bonus of $10,000,000 from the Government of the United States. I will read a portion of the bill for the benefit of the House. When the substitute was offered by the gentleman I could not think he was in earnest, but that it was a little measure designed to cripple, to embarrass, and if possible defeat the pending measure; that it was, as we say upon the prairies, whose products we are trying to relieve by this legislation from unjust burdens, "setting a back fire." I want to call attention to the terms upon which this Erie canal is to be made free, if it should ever be enlarged sufficiently to allow the passage of ships:

That when said enlargement is completed and the amount of the liens and charges upon the revenues of said canals ascertained and determined, the State of New York, through the agency of its canal board or otherwise, will annually thereafter establish a rate of tolls upon the property, boats, vessels, rafts, and other craft passing through said canals, and not exempt from tolls, sufficient to raise such sum or fund, and also to pay for the annual superintendence and repair of said canals; and in establishing such rate of tolls no discrimination shall be made between the property of the citizens or products of the State of New York and the property of the citizens or products of any other State, Territory, or foreign country; and that after the payment of the said liens and charges, or accumulation of a sinking fund sufficient for the payment thereof, said State of New York will never impose or levy upon the property, boats, vessels, or other craft passing upon said canals any other or greater rate of tolls, charges, or imposts than shall be necessary to pay the annual superintendence and repair of said canals; that said State of New York will faithfully apply all the moneys received from said tolls and charges, as follows: first, in payment of the superintendence and repair of said canals; second, in discharge of the interest and principal of the several lines and charges aforesaid thereon, in such manner as shall be just and equitable between the State of New York and the United States.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That upon compliance with the conditions of this act by said State of New York, and the approval of the plans and specifications for the enlargement of said canals by the Secretary of War of the United States, as in this act provided, the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is hereby empowered and directed to pay said sum of $10,000,000 to the State of New York, by the delivery to said canal board or any authorized agent of said State the bonds to the United States as hereinbefore specified, in such amounts and at such times as may be required by said board in the proper prosecution of said work.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I refer to these things simply to show that, assuming the State of New York would do what is proposed, we should get no step forward, but would remain in precisely the same condition in which we are at the present time, subject to the duties, the tolls, and the tonnage; and it is not within the power of my friend from New York to tell when we shall be freed from this levy of tolls. There is no arithmetical or mathematical calculation that will enable him or any other person to demonstrate when the people shall have the free use of that canal. Cost of repairs and superintendence are sometimes very great.

But, Mr. Speaker, I have heard from many of my friends in this House the objection that this is an improper time for the spending of large sums of public money. I subscribe most fully to that general proposition, and the reason for it is our large indebtedness and the necessity for lightening the burdens of taxation and at the same time preserving the public faith. If the expenditure of a certain sum will enable the producer to meet more easily the necessary demands of the tax-gatherer; if it will cheapen food to the laboring man; if it will add largely to the productiveness of the country, then, sir, the subject is worthy of the serious consideration of the legislative branch of the Government. The proposed expenditure will, in my opinion, accomplish all these purposes. Cheap transportation for the surplus productions of the West will increase the ability to pay taxes and create new resources for the support of the Government. All these questions are to be considered in determining the soundness of the objection which is raised. Why, Mr. Speaker, if a man owned a farm, only fifty acres of which were under cultivation, and if he could put under cultivation another fifty acres by building a road at some additional cost, and thus giving him more means to more certainly meet his liabilities, would good judgment and sound economy authorize the incurring of this expense? My judgment is that he would, although already largely indebted. Such, in my judgment, would be the effect of the measure now before the House.

I yield to no man in my conviction of the necessity for retrenchment and economy in the public expenditures at this time. In attempting to follow out this proper principle do not let us cripple the resources of the country, but nourish, aid, and assist them, and in their turn they will have more ability to respond to the demands of the Government. Judicious distinction should be made between on the one hand aiding projects new and untried, and in which individual interest predominates or has an interest in by money, bonds, or subsidies of any description; and, on the other hand, a project for the removal of an obstruction in one of the highways of commerce that would cheapen, as I have said before, the passage of surplus products to a certain and profitable market. The statistics presented by my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. PAINE] has demonstrated that such would be the effect of the measure now under discussion; and I believe everything this Congress can do to enable the West to pay its taxes more easily, to enable the laborer to get his bread more cheaply, is, if not involving an unreasonable expense, within the line of our legitimate duty.

The last section of the bill appropriates $12,000,000, not to be expended to-day nor tomorrow, but it is to be used on work the completion of which will necessarily extend through five or six years. The amount named is the estimated cost made by the engineer department of the Government after a thorough survey. It was thought expedient by the committee to name the entire sum in the bill that the project might cost, so that the House and the country might understand what it was engaged in. The appropriation, if made, is to be paid out from time to time as the work progresses. It is not a gross sum to be expended within the next one, two, or three current years. I think that any individual whose private estate was in the condition that the estate of this Government is, if he saw before him the means of making that estate valuable by an expenditure within his power, would certainly undertake that expenditure. And I know of no just and proper rule in regard to the conduct of private business that would not apply to the conduct of public affairs in regard to the expenditure of money.

My friend from New York thinks we owe to that State a debt of gratitude. I am not going to consume any time on that question. As I said before, the State of New York has been very well paid, and the people are very much obliged to her for doing what she has done, even if she has done it through a selfish motive. But now, when the necessities of a portion of the country demand a different policy, I would wish that New York would show that same magnanimity and patriotism upon this question that is claimed was shown in her internal improvements, and step out of the way of the progress of the age.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is what my bill proposes.

Mr. JUDD. The gentleman tells me that is what his bill proposes. I cannot see it in that light; and if I did see it, as I said before, I prefer not to place the interest of this nation under the control of any one State. I prefer that the interest of my constituents and the people to be benefited by this measure be under the guardianship of the Congress of the United States, and that the tolls on this canal should be controlled by the United States.

I have endeavored to show that this is distinguished from all other plans or measures wherein private interests are to be promoted, or where subsidies or loans are made or guaranteed. There are no elements of individual interest or private speculation that enter into the project now before the House. I ask gentlemen, then, as they view the interests of the great Northwest, as they feel an interest in preserving the credit of the Government by enabling the people to pay their taxes out of their surplus productions, as they value the cheapening of produce to the consumer by facilitating transportation, to lend a helping hand to this improvement. And I say to my friend from New York, whose beautiful city of Buffalo is one of the gems of the lakes, that he must join the current; for the flow of commerce will be onward in spite of him or me. Its power is all-pervading and irresistible. You may stand to-day in the way of an improvement which the public interest demands; you may stand for an hour in the way of what the people want for the transportation, of their produce to market; but you will be as surely rode over by the demands of commerce as that the Niagara cataract now stands in the way of our reaching cheaply a market. You can no more dam up the channels of trade by a city even so beautiful as that of Buffalo than you can stop the current of Niagara.

There are laws that govern these things to which the people and the legislators of the country must yield, and my conviction is that this is one of those cases; that the power that is gathering, and which is beginning to make itself felt from the States and Territories in the West—a power that is now traversing the country with such rapid strides to the Pacific coast, will demand that you cheapen transportation by every reasonable means in your power.

I desire to see the principle that this work is national recognized by the Congress of the United States. The proposition has been before Congress from time to time, receiving the sanction of the House of Representatives. While this measure is important to my constituents, it is not so important whether the canal shall be constructed next year or five years hence as it is for Congress to say that the work shall be done. I appeal to my fellow-members to join me in passing this bill, and let us remove the greatest obstruction that exists upon any one line of commerce within the United States of America. I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I am sorry that I am not able, from failure of voice, even to occupy the time which has been so kindly yielded to me by the gentleman from Illinois. I wish, primarily, however, to give a reason or two why I shall vote for this plan, or "scheme," as my friend from New York [Mr. HUMPHREY] designates it, of public improvement, while as a rule I propose to put myself very steadily against all public improvements to be carried on by private corporations through subsidies from the Treasury. It will be remembered that this bill, or a bill to carry out this project, once passed this House. It failed in the Senate, and for the reason, as I understand, that it was not thought judicious to give power to a private corporation to enter upon the lands of a State by right of eminent domain. This bill proposes to assert itself under the provision of the Constitution which gives to the United States the right to take any means for defense, to construct any military road; but while we claim that as the grant of power, yet I by no means shall advocate the passage of the bill upon the ground of that necessity.

I have no fear of Canada, either in pieces or as a whole, whether as province or as a dominion. I want to put in a caveat here and say to my friend from New York that I do not yield to him or to any other gentleman in this House in opposition to any reciprocity treaty with Canada. I am against all treaties of reciprocity, because I think they trench upon the privileges of the House; and I am not in favor of any reciprocal legislation with Canada. When she is ready to take the burdens with us she may have the benefits of the United States, but not till then; we cannot grant the benefits until she takes her share of the burdens. But, sir, claiming the power to carry out this project through that constitutional right, I think it is better that the improvement should be done by the United States and for the United States as free as possible from all taxes which shall be a burden upon transportation. If there is any one great defect in our laws more than another, it is that they are so defective that out of the transportation upon our railroads and steamships and canals a single man by his energy and shrewdness has been able in a single lifetime, and that not a very long one, to make a fortune of $60,000,000. While I do not blame him, but rather praise him for taking advantage of those laws if the community give him the privilege, yet I do say that that system of laws is exceedingly defective which allows a man to accumulate an immense fortune out of the highways, out of the means of transportation to the South and West by railroads and steamboats.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I would ask him whether there would be any difference between allowing a man to make a fortune in the way he speaks of, and in the way a large number of men in New England have made fortunes out of the privileges granted to them by high tariffs?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No, there would not; but I do not by that answer mean to admit the fact that a very large number have done so. Certainly none have made so princely and enormous a fortune as this. The manufacturing property of New England taken as a whole, carried on with all our industry and enterprise, and with all our over-work of men and women, has not by any means averaged twelve per cent. on the capital invested.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I would ask the gentleman if the profits upon the capital invested in railroads have been on an average six per cent.?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No, sir; because the directors have stolen all the profits by gambling and watering the stocks.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Has not that been equally the case with manufactures?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Not at all.

Mr. DAWES. My colleague has placed the amount of profit upon manufactures a great deal too high.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Well, I certainly wanted not to make it a great deal too low.

Mr. DAWES. If my friend will allow me I will say that the statistics of the manufacturing property of New England during the last thirty years show that it has not brought in during that time an income of five per cent.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Was not there a report made to this House during the Thirty-Ninth Congress to the effect that during the previous two years the profits upon manufactures had averaged more than twenty-five per cent.?

Mr. DAWES. I cannot tell what may have been reported as the profits for any given six months. My statement was that for the last thirty years, with all the industry, all the energy, and all the devotion to business of which New England has been capable, the manufacturing property of New England has not paid five per cent. upon the amount invested.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I do not now propose to pursue this investigation into all its details. Some time I shall do so, with the leave of the House, but not now. But I desire to say that I wish to have this work carried on by the Government and paid for by the Government, so that there shall be no toll except what is necessary to keep this great improvement in repair. My friend from Buffalo [Mr. HUMPHREY] has been kind enough to assert that all of us who favor this "scheme," as he calls it, may be considered to have some interest in it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Not at all. The gentleman will allow me to deny making any personal allusions.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Oh, no; only the interests of our constituents, certainly. He has adopted the first device of a good lawyer and advocate, by taking the attack in order to endeavor to shield himself. I know of no city of the United States that can by any possibility be injured by this proposed canal except the city of Buffalo. Her grain elevators may possibly have a little less to do. But she has levied tribute upon the West and built herself up, rightfully or wrongfully—and I will not suggest that it has been done wrongfully—until she should be willing to stand one side and give somebody else a chance.

The gentleman says that we should not build this canal because private enterprise has not been willing to engage in it. Sir, this canal is not a subject for private enterprise any more than the canal across the Isthmus of Darien or the canal across the Isthmus of Suez. I pray the gentleman from New York to tell me whether the Erie canal would have been built by private enterprise if the State of New York had not taken hold of it? Would private capital have built that which is now shown to be the wisest and best work ever done by any statesman for his State, and which has immortalized its great author? Before the Erie canal was built, Newport and Boston were the rivals of New York for the commerce of the world. And Rhode Island remained out of this Union for two years, and refused to adopt the Constitution of the United States, and the great argument made in her convention for so doing was that if she came into the Union New York would outstrip Newport in the race for the commerce of the world, Newport then being the superior commercial port. How true that foresight was is now seen. But it would hardly have been seen had not that great avenue of transportation from the lakes to the city of New York been opened by the State of New York.

And I speak for my section when I say that we desire the benefit of this canal because of what we have lost by the construction to the tolls of the Erie canal. You have taken from us our commerce, and compelled us to resort to manufactures. And you have taken toll on our manufactures when we sent them to the West. You have taken double tolls on our breadstuffs when we brought them to the East; and then, not content with that, when we ask the Government to open an avenue which shall bring nearer together the great manufacturing part of the country and the great producing section, you, in order to embarrass us, throw in our faces the poor profits we have made in our manufactures by industry, energy, and skill.

Again, sir, I shall vote for this bill chiefly because it does differ from every other scheme in the fact that with honesty of administration, or an approach to honesty of administration in the War Department, there is no possibility that there should be any "job" in the project anywhere. There is no possibility that it can put anything in the pocket of any private man, except the mere amount of the compensation for the land which may be taken. While I yield to no man in the desire that this Government shall be carried on with economy, and while I intend to oppose all hazardous and doubtful enterprises, especially any that looks to a possibility of any man putting money into his own pocket out of the Government, yet true economy on the part of this Government consists in opening between the East and the West every possible avenue of communication.

Nor am I at all disturbed by the fact that at the present time a portion of the traffic which this canal will open must be through Canadian soil in order to use the St. Lawrence river; for the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUMPHREY] knows very well—no man knows better than he—that before we can build this canal, with all the energy we can put upon it, Canada, unless the tide of events should roll backward, will be ours, not by conquest, but by the wish and desire of the majority of its inhabitants, a law-abiding people, homogeneous with ourselves, and who, if left to their own desires, would long since have come to us.

I do not propose, sir—neither my time nor my strength will permit it—to go into an examination of the statistics bearing on this subject. Nor do I propose to raise any question as to the amount of the appropriation. Certain I am, judging from what I have known of the present administration of the War Department, and also the last administration, (I call upon gentlemen to have as much trust as I have in the future,) there will be no possibility of spending any of this money in a manner that shall not be just and economical with reference to the interests of the Government. I do not believe that this work is going to require an expenditure of ten or twelve million dollars; for in my own town private enterprise, in the prosecution of those manufacturing interests which are always thrown at New England when one of her sons speaks in her behalf, has dug a canal one hundred feet wide, twenty feet deep, with all the necessary guards and locks, and large enough to float a line-of-battle ship, much of it out of solid rock, the length of the canal being a mile and a half; yet it has been constructed for less than five hundred thousand dollars. The man who constructed that work still lives, and can construct a similar work around Niagara Falls, which may be a length only of six miles. But how much will this work cost? Little or nothing. Whatever the sum that may be expended in the first instance, the saving of a single year in freight will pay one half of that expenditure, and the saving of another year will save the whole.

There is but one objection that I see to the bill as now drawn, and that is merely an objection of detail. I see that the proposed depth of the canal is fourteen feet, the object being, I suppose, to accommodate the St. Clair flats. Be it so; then, I think that the width of the lock should be at least sixty feet. This, however, is a matter to be dealt with in the way of amendment hereafter. So far as concerns the main proposition in its general scope and purpose, it is, in my judgment, just and economical, and contemplates a proper expenditure of money. Hence I have no hesitation in giving it my vote.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I am sorry that the state of the country and the condition of the Treasury would prevent me from giving my support to the bill before the House. In former years I have supported a similar bill; but it was at a time when Congress was voting money for almost every project that was presented, and as this measure had more merits than a vast majority of the schemes that were going through, I struggled to have some of the money go into this channel. I cannot go into a discussion of the merits of the bill, but I find that the last section thereof proposes an appropriation of $12,000,000. It is enough for me to know that there is no money in the Treasury to meet such an appropriation. We are now owing a debt of $2,500,000,000, and are paying six per cent. interest in gold on an immense bonded debt. We have between three and four hundred million dollars of irredeemable paper money afloat in the country which is only worth seventy cents on the dollar. Taxes are oppressive, and there is a party in this country who only want an excuse for repudiation. If we augment the taxes and increase our already enormous public debt the party of repudiation will gather strength and power; and I will warn gentlemen against pushing things to an extent that might tend to involve the country in a crime more hideous in its nature and extent than any ever committed by a nation pretending to the least vestige of honor or decency—the crime of repudiation, of bad faith, and national dishonor. My constituents are greatly interested in this work, but I believe I speak their sentiments when I say they will wait until we shall get the reduction of our public debt under a good headway, until taxation can be reduced, and until the work can be done a third cheaper than it can be done under the present inflated prices. Another reason why I cannot support the bill is, that the commencement of this new work, costing such a vast sum of money, would tend to prevent appropriations for completing important works of improvement already commenced.

There must be an appropriation to complete the work on the Rock Island and Des Moines rapids, now nearly finished—a work which when completed will afford immense relief to the great producing States of the Northwest. Facts have recently come to my knowledge which render it a matter of vast importance that the Mississippi river improvement shall be completed at the earliest moment. Under a great pressure Congress has allowed the construction of railroad bridges across the Mississippi river, and among others one at Dubuque. A bridge has been built at Dubuque, not by the railroad company, whose road crosses the river, but by parties mostly inside the company, as I learn, and they have made the bridge an engine of stupendous oppression to the public, adding vastly to the expense of transit of both freight and passengers. Before the bridge was built it cost a railroad passenger ten cents to cross the Mississippi river at Dubuque, and it now costs the same passenger twenty-five cents by the railroad bridge. And it is understood the advance in freight is about the same. A gentleman, lately from Iowa, has informed me that the advance in freight exacted by the bridge company over the old rates would cost a single county in Iowa for the present crop of wheat $30,000. Indeed, as freights now are, it costs just one bushel of wheat to get three bushels of wheat from eastern Iowa to Chicago. This state of things admonished me and I think it should admonish the Representatives from the Northwest, that if money was to be spent by the Government it should be spent where it will effect the most.

Why is this? Among other things it is because of the additional toll charged by this railroad bridge company. The gentleman from Iowa to whom I have already referred told me that the difference in the charges made by this bridge company, so far as one county in that State is concerned, would cost the farmers of that county $30,000 more than it ever did before. We see too many appropriations for special objects, and I understand them well. Mr. Speaker, while the people have been fighting the battles of the country, railroad, express, and telegraph monopolists have been working to take from the people the rights they already had; and, sir, unless something is done we shall, in my judgment, see such a revolution of public opinion among the people as we have never before seen. We have subdued the monopoly of slavery; but there is to be another battle to subdue these other monopolies, which are destroying us and eating up the substance of the people. It requires only a small appropriation to complete the rapid improvements, making a free and unobstructed channel of water communication from the Falls of St. Anthony to New Orleans. I think, sir, that it would be madness for us, while our other great works of improvement remain uncompleted, to pass this measure, which, in the first instance, will involve an expenditure of $12,000,000.

Now, sir, my friend from Iowa desires I should yield the floor to him for a few moments, and I do so.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that the gentleman from Illinois purposes to submit some motion at the conclusion of his hour.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Yes, sir; I do.

Mr. ALLISON. Therefore I desire to make some remarks in reply to what he has said, and in reference to the general subject now before us for action. I shall not ask for more than twenty or twenty-five minutes.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. How many have I left?

The SPEAKER. Forty minutes.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Other gentlemen desire I should yield to them, and in order to do so I can only give the gentleman ten minutes.

Mr. ALLISON. It is impossible for me to say what I desire to say in ten minutes, and if I cannot get more time I will run the risk of getting the floor before the House adjourns and not take the floor now.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will yield the floor to the gentleman for fifteen minutes.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit the following, to come in as an additional section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of extending the advantages of improved water communication to the Mississippi valley, to enlarge and extend the military defenses of the country, and to enable the Government and people more fully to enjoy the benefits of the Niagara ship-canal, the sum of $1,000,000 of the money by this act appropriated shall be devoted to the improvement of the navigation of the Wisconsin river, by canal or otherwise, so as to connect Green Bay and the Mississippi river by way of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers, according to one of the plans recommended by General G. K. Warren in his reports to the engineer department, said money to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War; and all the conditions and limitations hereinbefore prescribed shall apply to the appropriation made by this section.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. Speaker, the people of the western States are more deeply interested in this general subject of transportation than perhaps any other subject which could possibly be brought before this Congress. They are at present, especially the agricultural interests of the western States, burdened by the heavy impositions of the railroad corporations which now have in their hands, almost exclusively the means of transportation of their products from the place of their production to the lake ports and the great markets of the world. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] has truly said that if the western States are indebted to New England for the manufactured goods which they consume, New England, New York, and the East generally are mostly indebted to the grain-growing States of Iowa, Illinois, and Wisconsin for the bread they eat while producing those manufactured goods. Therefore I regret exceedingly that the gentleman from the Galena district of Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, should at this early period indicate his purpose to submit a motion hostile to this bill, which, with the amendment which I have offered adopted as a part of this measure, supplies the great object desired by the West—the cheapening of transportation from the West to the East and the East to the West.

Before I enter upon any discussion of this measure or any explanation of my amendment I will say a few words in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois in reference to the bridge across the Mississippi river located at the city of Dubuque, where I live. The gentleman who furnished information to him, as he says, relative to that enterprise, totally misapprehended the facts of the case. The truth is that the construction of that bridge across the Mississippi river has cheapened the transportation across that river very materially. I know that of which I speak; for, sir, I am a member of that corporation and know what the facts really are. There is a graduated scale of tolls established for that bridge, the minimum being less than twenty cents per ton, and the maximum only reaching seventy cents per ton. Now, it is well known to every man who has ever transported any products from the East to the West, or the West to the East, even to and from Dubuque only, that it has cost on the average one dollar a ton to transport freight across that river during the winter, which generally lasts during six months of the year, and a very little less on the average during seasons of navigation. The gentleman from Illinois, therefore, is entirely mistaken in the statement which he made to this House in reference to this Dubuque bridge.

And I will say further, Mr. Speaker, that this bridge enterprise at the city of Dubuque is not in the interest or under the control of the Illinois Central railroad, which is the only railroad corporation which uses that bridge. It is open to all railroads who may choose to use it upon equal terms. It is controlled by a corporation which is interested, as the whole people of Iowa are interested, in cheap transportation, and only desire a fair remuneration for the money they have invested in this enterprise.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I presume there is no western man here who would stand up in his place in this House of Representatives and say that he was opposed to the building of this Niagara ship-canal. Certainly I would not do so. I am in favor of this measure, as I am in favor of every measure which has a tendency to cheapen transportation between the East and the West; but in the present condition of the Treasury of the United States it becomes a question for the people of the West to deter-

It also appears that less than one sixth part of the population of the United States has raised more than one half of the wheat, about one third of the corn, and about one third of the grain, including wheat and corn, which in the year 1865 was produced in all the States and Territories of the United States.

The total value of the grain crop of the United States for the year referred to was by the Commissioner of Agriculture estimated at $1,118,904,376; in which estimate the crop of the five States referred to was put down at nearly one third of the whole, $391,596,000.

The actual yield is possibly greater than the amount claimed in the statement. The Governor of Iowa estimates the wheat crop of that State for 1867 at twenty million bushels, and for 1868 at twenty-five million bushels. The census returns made to the secretary of State of Wisconsin indicate that the wheat crop of Wisconsin for 1860 was over twenty-seven million bushels, while the secretary of the State Agricultural Society estimates the crop of 1861 at twenty to twenty-five millions, and of 1863 at twenty-five to thirty million bushels.

The reports of the Chicago and Milwaukee Boards of Trade show that of the shipments East nearly all were by water, except that in 1864 eight per cent., and in 1865 eleven per cent., and in 1866 eighteen per cent. were by rail. Two thirds of this entire surplus product would seek a water-line from the Mississippi river if such was attainable.

In this estimate of the business on this line or to be effected by a water-line I have only indicated shipments East. This water-line would open up a cheap mode of transit for all heavy freights required west of and along the line of the Mississippi river, such as lumber, coal, salt, railroad iron, steam machinery, and a thousand other articles that will not easily bear high rates for transportation.

At the season of the year when it is most desirable for the farmer to transport his products to market he finds all the railroads worked to their utmost capacity of rolling stock, and dealers and shippers are compelled to await the convenience of railroads running into Chicago and Milwaukee and are met with freight rates which require a sacrifice of one bushel of wheat in order to reach these markets with three other bushels; or, in other words, to sacrifice one fourth of the crop in order to pay for the transportation of the remaining three fourths to Chicago or Milwaukee.

Mr. Speaker, I have made this amendment in obedience to the will and judgment of the States of Iowa, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, whose Legislatures have by memorial requested Congress to undertake this improvement as a national work. In its character affecting, as it does, the consumer, by enabling him to secure cheap bread, and affecting the producer by enabling him to receive a portion of the profits of his crop, now wasted to him in the price he is compelled to pay in transporting it to market, I urge it as germane to the main proposition now before the House, which has for its object the removal of one of the obstructions now in the way of a continuous water-line from the Mississippi river to the Atlantic ports. I shall ask a vote upon it, and hope it will receive the sanction of a majority of the House, because I believe it is more essential to open up a cheap water-line from the Mississippi to the lakes than to connect Lakes Erie and Ontario. But I hope at an early day to see all these great improvements made, so as to form a system of water navigation by means of lakes and canals to the sea-board via the St. Lawrence, and to the city of New York, the great distributing point of the continent for the productions of the East, South, and West.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I yield for five minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BAILEY.]

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, as I represent a district to some extent interested in this proposed work, and as I must vote against it, I desire to give my reasons for so doing, and they may be all summed up in very few words.

I do not believe this nation can now afford to make the expenditure to construct this work. Twelve million dollars are now asked by this bill; but according to our experience in the past, fifteen or twenty million dollars will be required before the work is completed. Now, the people of this country desire almost unanimously the restoration of the national credit, for the business of the whole country depends on that, and we cannot have a sound currency or any available measure of value for property or labor until that is attained. Until that time business must be simply a speculation, and the remuneration of labor uncertain and unsatisfactory. While the people may be interested in works of this kind they do not now demand them. On the contrary, they demand emphatically that they be postponed, for whatever interest they may have in these works, they have a far deeper interest in the restoration of the national credit.

It is argued here in behalf of these and similar measures that the country never was so prosperous as now; that labor never was so well paid as now. With all deference to the gentlemen who thus speak and think, I deny the proposition. The simple truth is that we have borrowed some thousands of millions of dollars, and are now magnificently spending the proceeds. Every foot of American soil is mortgaged for that debt, and every item of public property in the land is pledged for its payment. Notwithstanding this boasted wealth and prosperity, our promises to pay, which we are now so brilliantly spending, are hawked about the world at a most shameful discount. Labor now paid better than ever before! What a delusion! I affirm that the wages of labor to-day are not equal to the same wages before the war, their producing capabilities being considered. If labor is better paid than before, why, let me ask, these chronic "strikes" of labor all over the land, amounting nearly to insurrection? Let us not be deceived in this matter, for, whether we are or not, depend upon it the people are not deceived. They believe they are carrying an immense public debt, that our credit is at a woful discount, and that the only way to give substantial prosperity to the country is to restore that credit by commencing to pay our debts. Every dollar needlessly expended is forced from an overtaxed people and then perverted from its legitimate use of lessening the public debt. Nay, Mr. Speaker, every dollar needlessly expended is a practical increase of the public debt, for it injures the public credit, and thereby compels us to pay a higher interest for the moneys we must borrow to pay the accruing indebtedness.

Now, sir, if I should concede all that has been said in favor of this bill I should earnestly protest against the House passing it at this time.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I now yield for ten or fifteen minutes to my colleague, [Mr. LOGAN.]

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not expect to enter into a general discussion of this bill, for I do not think in the limited time allotted to me I could do so; but I desire to give one or two reasons why I think this measure should receive the assent of this House. So far as the question of economy is concerned, I presume we all agree that we should be as economical as possible, in order to protect the Treasury of the Government, but I deny that that is an argument either in favor of or against this proposition. It appeals to the fears more than it does to the judgment of men in reference to measures before this House. It is not the fact, because men may be inclined to vote for a proposition of this kind, that they are inclined to dispose of the public money in any but a frugal manner, or in any manner other than that of gentlemen who claim to be on the side of economy. I do not understand any such statesmanship. It is like the man we have all heard of who tried to see if he could not do without eating and thus save the expense of provisions. He took less and less every day until he had so managed his appetite that he believed he had reached that point that he could do entirely without eating, but just then he unfortunately died. It seems to be the same in reference to the strange freak which seems to have come over gentlemen that the United States Government must never inaugurate any great improvement for the benefit of any or all sections of the country, because, forsooth, we happen to be somewhat in debt.

Now, sir, I expect to go hand in hand, all the time that I may be here, with those gentlemen who seek to economize and prevent extravagant appropriations. But while we do that let us inquire what we must do in regard to promoting the interests of the great American people. Is or is not this question of a ship-canal a matter of interest to all the people of the country, rather than to any particular section? Pass this bill and build this canal, open up water communication from Chicago to the ocean eastward in competition with railroad transportation, and you will cause the railroad monopolies to reduce their rates and equalize them, or, at all events, you will afford the people the advantage of cheaper water transportation.

Sir, this question is not to stop here. It is a great question of governmental policy, a question of vast interest to the whole West as well as the East—to everybody in the West who sells bread, and to everybody in the East who eats it. All the States that border on the Mississippi river and that lie beyond it, all that border on the lakes, Superior, Michigan, Erie, and Ontario are greatly interested in this improvement. What will be the result of the construction of this canal? I know the owners of the elevators at Buffalo may not make so much money as heretofore, but the people of the country will derive a great benefit. They will not rest satisfied with this single improvement. They will demand of the State of Illinois the opening of the Illinois and Michigan canal to the Illinois river, so as to carry the line of communication to the Mississippi river. They will demand that the State of New York shall open its canals so as to give vessels of large draft an outlet to the ocean at New York city. Thus you will have a continuous line of water transportation from the port of New York via the Hudson river and the Erie and Oswego canals to Lake Ontario, thence through this Niagara ship-canal and the lakes, thence through the Illinois and Michigan canal to the Illinois and the Mississippi river, so that you will have one grand system of water transportation through the interior from New York to New Orleans. That will bring competition with the railroad transportation so that the people of the West will no longer have to burn their corn for fuel, as they have had to do in times past, on account of the high rate of transportation, which barred it from the eastern market. It will make breadstuffs cheaper at the sea-board, and thus benefit the poor consumer as well as the rich. It seems to me that he who cannot see this is blind to the great results that must be developed from the carrying out of this measure.

This thing of attaching to the bill propositions of minor importance reminds me of a policy once inaugurated in my own State. In 1836 there was a policy of internal improvement inaugurated in Illinois, of building a great central trunk railroad from Cairo to Chicago, for the purpose of opening up a large portion of the State, which was then almost a wilderness. Each man in the Legislature who had a little country seat on a little spring or river branch moved to amend the bill by appropriating money to clear it out and make it navigable, and to make a little arm of the railroad shoot out to it. In that way the whole State was about to be covered with these branches, and so many side improvements were proposed, requiring so much money, that the result was the whole system went down. But the theory of those who proposed the original scheme was to take the most important interest within the State and appropriate money to develop that, leaving the minor interests to be attended to afterward. So I say now to the gentleman from Iowa develop first the great interest; let this great work of constructing a ship-canal around the Falls of Niagara be done, and the other works incident to that will come afterward, if they come at all; but do not saddle it with any proposition for any other canal or any other river, for if you do you will defeat the proposition. You will only inaugurate a policy that is not statesmanlike, that of not letting a bill stand upon its own merits, but of saying, "I will not vote for this proposition unless you vote for mine." That is not statesmanship, nor is it for the true interests of the country. The true theory of legislation is to adopt a proposition upon its merits or to let it fail upon its demerits. That is all I desire to say at present on this proposition.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. SYPHER.]

Mr. SYPHER. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of any possible outlet to the West. I am in favor likewise of low freights and quick transit. I am in favor of every legitimate scheme of internal improvement, and at the same time I am in favor of guarding the Treasury of the United States until our national debt shall have been paid. I regret that gentlemen who are here upon this floor advocating this measure have lost sight of the only natural outlet to the West. They are looking across the country in a straight line to New York, expecting that by putting their hands into the national Treasury they can construct a line which will give them a safe and quick transit with cheap freights to the markets of the world. I regret to say that they have never once cast their eyes southward and thought of the great Father of Waters, where their freights will float much cheaper than they can drag them up hill with locomotives.

The gentleman from Illinois has spoken of the Michigan and Illinois canal, which should be opened into the Illinois river. I concur with the gentleman most heartily. They would then load their barges with corn and wheat, and go from this canal into the Illinois river, and thence into the Mississippi river, float them to our grain elevators at New Orleans, and reship their freights there at an expense of one cent. per bushel and carry them to Liverpool for three cents per bushel less than they could carry them from New York for. I desire to present some statistics on the subject of freights and time from St. Louis to New York and Liverpool. From St. Louis via New Orleans to New York the freight per bushel is twenty-seven cents, and the time eighteen days; from the same place via Chicago and Buffalo to New York the freight is forty-four cents, and the time thirty-three days; making a difference in favor of the route via New Orleans of seventeen cents per bushel and fifteen days in time. I think this of itself is conclusive evidence that the natural outlet is via the Mississippi river and not via the lakes and canals of the North, or through a canal to be constructed at a cost of $12,000,000 out of the national Treasury. The old theory that grain cannot be shipped through southern ports in consequence of the climate is an exploded humbug. Mr. Higby, of Milwaukee, who has been in the grain traffic for over twenty years over the lakes and canals of the North, has removed his elevators to New Orleans, and has declared, from the experience of the last year, that he can dry and air grain and ship it thence to New York and the ports of Europe without damage and at less cost than it can be shipped for by any other possible route. This is conclusive evidence in favor of the natural outlet, which is the Mississippi river. If the Government, instead of appropriating $12,000,000 to construct a canal through miles of rock, will appropriate $1,000,000 to keep open the mouth of the Mississippi river they will do a work that will be more beneficial to the whole people of this country. That is the natural outlet and the only one for the West, and they must resort to it yet, although they may succeed in getting an appropriation for the construction of this canal. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BARNES.]

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, I do not expect to be able to instruct this House upon the merits of this bill and the questions involved in it, after the exhaustive arguments upon both sides to which we have listened. But I am unwilling that the great city of New York, which I have the honor in part to represent, shall remain silent upon a subject of this national importance—a subject in the history of our internal improvements, in my estimation, second to none which has ever been proposed in the national Legislature or in the Legislature of any of our States. In the infant days of this Republic, when values were represented in a ratio of one to four as compared with what we now consider them, the Congress of this nation appropriated $15,000,000 to open transportation from the northern and western States, by means of the purchase of Louisiana, and thus securing the control of the Mississippi river. We propose now to bring the North and the West to the doors of the East for the interchange of our commerce at a saving of millions upon millions, the amount of which I will not undertake to estimate, by the appropriation of $12,000,000 to overcome the great natural obstructions around the Falls of Niagara.

Lake Ontario presents one hundred and eighty miles of water front; one portion stretching along the borders of the State of New York, and another portion along the borders of a foreign nation and under the control of a foreign Legislature. Another one hundred and fifty miles will carry us down to the commencement of the rapids of the St. Lawrence. All of this increase of water communication will be added to the wealth of the country in the reduced prices at which produce will be brought from the West and commerce will be carried from the East. This enterprise is entitled to the hearty and favorable consideration of the constituency which I have the honor to represent, and should not be disapproved by them from the fear that it will divert commerce from the port of New York to more northern and eastern ports. But even if that should be the effect of this measure, I still would ask of my constituents and of my colleagues upon this floor from the State of New York what reason we have to claim entire control of the exportation of western products from the ports of the East? If the West—and not the West alone, but all the country—can be enriched by a saving of from two to five cents per bushel upon the cereals of the West, does it become the city of New York, which has been enriched by western products and the commerce of nations, by national legislation in the way of appropriations of public money, which we have received and are now receiving—does it become us to undertake to deny to this section of country this increased opportunity for the transportation of its products?

Sir, the exportation of western cereals to Europe makes but a small figure in the total exportations of the United States. It is the internal commerce of this country which we now seek to protect, and the burdens of which we propose to lessen. And if my honorable colleague from the Buffalo district [Mr. HUMPHREY] is fearful that this measure, if carried into execution, will result in the destruction of the local interests of the city of Buffalo, I beg leave to say to him that my greatest objection to this proposed canal is that it is not wide enough and not deep enough and does not call for the appropriation of money enough to accommodate all the demands of commerce. But we hope that it will be deep enough to enable him to float through it his grain elevators when they become unprofitable in his city, if they ever do so become, to cities further east, where they may be made profitable. Sir, it is impossible for us to resist the onward progress and demands of our internal commerce. For twenty-five years the great demand of the West has been to secure communication around the thirty-three hundred and thirty-three feet of natural obstructions at the Falls of Niagara and in the Niagara river. But the Legislature of the State of New York has persistently refused to incorporate organizations within our own limits which might secure the accomplishment of this important result.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING,] after which I will yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MULLINS.]

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Speaker, I take the floor to explain my present position in reference to the subject of a ship-canal around the Falls of Niagara.

No man can be more thoroughly impressed with a sense of the importance of such a work than myself. No man's constituents have a deeper interest in such a channel of communication than my own. I have heretofore introduced and advocated bills for the construction of such a canal. I am still in favor of the project, but I do not deem it sound statesmanship to add to the liabilities of the Federal Government until we have our present national debt "well in hand," and in a process of liquidation.

Mr. Speaker, we have put down the rebellion, but the fruits of the rebellion are upon us in the shape of taxes that are grinding our people between "the upper and nether millstones." Whispers of repudiation occasionally salute our ears, and these whispers will become whirlwinds if we do not listen to the dictates of prudence in the assumption of national liabilities.

I have been told, and I believe the fact to be, that the sum of $12,000,000 involved in this bill is but a "specimen brick" for this Fortieth Congress. If we assume this liability, we are to be pushed with claims for Pacific railroads and other subsidies to the tune of perhaps $100,000,000, and in the end we shall incur the risk, if not the reality, of repudiation, which last will endanger our institutions of government far more than the "great rebellion."

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MULLINS] for two minutes.

Mr. MULLINS. Mr. Speaker, it is almost impossible for me, under the pressure of an allowance of but two minutes, to say anything explanatory of the vote which I shall give on this bill. I would have it distinctly understood that as an individual I have never been opposed to internal improvements by the General Government when that Government had physical power to make the improvements. But I have uniformly opposed the creation of corporations by the Government and the levying of a tax upon the people generally that the corporate body might enrich itself at the expense of the masses. There is being carried on by incorporated power a war against the vital interests of the Republic; and sooner or later the Republic will have to bleed, or, rising in self-defense, shake off the shackles which are being put upon it by partial legislation.

I cannot vote for this bill. Why? Because the Government to which we owe our allegiance is to-day overburdened with debt. The body-politic is depleted; it is running at every pore. And, sir, the people of the country have not come here and asked us to appropriate $12,000,000 for the purpose of cutting through the rocks and constructing this ship-canal. The people understand their own interests, and will make members of this House understand them if we should so far forget those interests as to squander the public money upon a work of this kind when the Government is so much encumbered with debt.

The SPEAKER. The two minutes of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MULLINS] have expired.

Mr. MULLINS. Oh, I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] is not going to stop me now. I am just getting into the crust of the subject. [Laughter.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. What the gentleman has said has been so well said that it is unnecessary for him to say anything more.

Mr. MULLINS. Oh, I will say the balance still better. I never flash in the pan. [Laughter.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHANLER.]

Mr. CHANLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise merely to explain the vote which I shall give on this subject, which will be cast in accordance with what I believe to be the will of the people of the city of New York, whom I represent in part upon this floor. I should not, however, have spoken on the question had not my colleague from the Brooklyn district [Mr. BARNES] assumed to speak for my constituency. The building of this canal would undoubtedly conduce to the advantage of the city of New York. I recognize the fact that it would tend to advance the commercial interests of the people of that city. But we do not wish, in contravention of the authoritative acts of the sovereignty of our State, to burden the people of the whole Union for the advancement of any scheme, however advantageous to us it may be. We hold that the interests of the great West, rightly considered, are our interests and the interests of the Pacific coast. We hold that in due time these common interests will be developed; that the system of internal improvements of which the State of New York has given the example, will be imitated in other States. The Mississippi river and the Pacific coast are at the command of the West.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I now yield to my colleague from the Peoria district, [Mr. INGERSOLL.]

Mr. INGERSOLL. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] yield to allow an amendment to be offered?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to amend by adding the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That, for the purpose of extending the advantages of improved water communication to the Mississippi river, improving the military defenses of the country, and promoting the general welfare, the sum of $3,000,000 of the whole sum by this act appropriated shall be devoted to, and expended in, deepening, widening, and improving the Illinois and Michigan canal, said money to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, subject to the conditions and limitations hereinafter prescribed.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] yield to allow his colleague [Mr. INGERSOLL] to debate this amendment?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Yes, sir, I yield to him, reserving just enough of my time to enable me to move the reference of the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has just half a minute remaining.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move, then, that this bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and on that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. DELANO. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move to lay the bill on the table?

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order, and would take priority of the motion to refer.

Mr. DELANO. I move, then, that the bill be laid on the table.

Mr. JUDD demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MAYNARD. What will be the next step, supposing this motion does not prevail?

The SPEAKER. If the motion to lay upon the table does not prevail the next question will be on seconding the demand for the previous question on the motion to refer.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 77, nays 84, not voting 61; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bailey, Baldwin, Beatty, Beck, Benton, Bingham, Boies, Boyden, Boyer, Brooks, Broomall, Buckland, Cary, Chanler, Covode, Delano, Eln, Ferriss, Fox, Getz, Golladay, Griswold, Grover, Haight, Halsey, Hawkins, Hill, Holman, Chester D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Hunter, Johnson, Thomas L. Jones, Julian, Kelley, Kerr, Kitchen, Knott, Koontz, Lash, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Marshall, Marvin, McCarthy, McCormick, McCullough, Mercer, Moore, Morrell, Mullins, Newcomb, Nicholson, Polstey, Randall, Seofield, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Starkweather, Stover, Sypher, Taber, Taffe, Taylor, Thomas, Tift, Trowbridge, Van Auker, Van Trump, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, John T. Wilson, and Stephen F. Wilson—77.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Arnell, Axtell, Baker, Banks, Barnes, Beaman, Blaine, Blair, Boutwell, Brownell, Buckley, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Churchill, Clift, Cobb, Coburn, Cook, Corley, Cornell, Cullom, Dawes, Dewesse, Dodge, Driggs, Eckley, Eldridge, Thomas D. Eliot, James T. Trimble, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Wood, Woodbridge, and Woodward—61.

So the House refused to lay the bill and amendments on the table.

During the vote,

Mr. NIBLACK stated that he was paired with Mr. LAFLIN.

Mr. BARNES stated that his colleague [Mr. ROBINSON] was detained from the House by sickness.

Mr. WARD said: Mr. Speaker, several of my colleagues are absent on account of important business. [Laughter.]

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. COOK. Mr. Speaker, although I reported this bill, and am entitled under the rules to an hour for the purpose of closing this debate, I shall occupy the attention of the House but for a very few moments.

I recognize as strongly as any gentleman upon this floor the necessity of absolute economy in the expenditures of the Government and the necessity of refusing all demands upon the Treasury not absolutely essential to the welfare of the people; but I believe this spirit of economy may be carried so far as to defeat its own objects and ends. I remember that in Illinois, when we were burdened with a debt so large that it seemed almost impossible that it could ever be paid, and when a large party in the State was in favor of repudiating it upon the ground that it was beyond the ability of the people to pay it, the first step we took in order to relieve ourselves of that incubus was to incur a debt of $1,000,000 for the completion of the Illinois and Michigan canal. The completion of that work and the incurring of that debt made it certain that the debt of the State would be paid and not repudiated.

And, sir, in relation to the work proposed in this bill this suggestion occurs to me with great force: the great agricultural region of the West is burdened with excessive toll demanded for the transportation of its produce to the markets of the East. This tax is burdensome and oppressive. Those products of the West, seeking outlet to the sea-board, find obstruction at Buffalo. The capacity of the Erie canal is not sufficient to afford an outlet. The tolls from Buffalo to New York are so great as to impose burdens grievous to be borne upon the producers of the western States, and that is an imposition upon them far heavier than the national taxes. It is a burden which is oppressing the industry of the West more than any other. If we had proper facilities for transporting our commodities from the West to the sea-board it would very largely increase the ability of our people to bear the burdens imposed upon them by the existing financial condition of the country. We are subjected now to the expense of handling all the products of the West at Buffalo for the sake of getting an eastern outlet. We are subjected to that outlay incident to the fact that there are not sufficient means of transportation from Buffalo to the sea-board. The very crowded state of the Erie canal, the fact that more produce is offered for transportation than the capacity of the canal will accommodate, enhances the price of freights to the sea-board, and thus imposes a burden upon the products of the West which is very hard to be borne. It is true that the different channels of communication from Chicago eastward are so overborne that the price of freights is regulated and fixed by the dearest route of all. A larger amount of produce being offered than all the lines of transportation can accommodate, owing to the obstruction which the water carriage meets at Buffalo, the result is that the longest line of railroad has fixed the rate of freight for all the different lines from Chicago to the sea-board. The Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago, and the Pennsylvania railroad have fixed the price of freight on every route eastward.

I call attention to that as illustrating the fact of the heavy burden that is borne by the producers of the West. The future prosperity of the country demands that this outlet should be made. It is a part of a system of improvement that has already been entered upon by the Government. There is no reason that occurs to my mind why this improvement should not be made which does not apply with equal force to the improvement of the navigation of the lake and river St. Clair. For many years this Government has expended money for the purpose of facilitating the water communication between the East and West, by deepening the channel and improving the navigation of that lake and river. Every constitutional objection which may be urged against this measure can be brought against that; and yet the settled policy of the Government has been to aid in removing the obstructions to navigation at that point.

There is no analogy between granting aid to a work of this kind, improving a natural water communication, and granting aid to a great line of railroad from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean. That analogy has been attempted to be drawn to-day, but there is no such analogy. This bill does not propose to incorporate a company that is to come and ask for subsidies and grants. Accurate surveys have been made by officers of the Government, the cost of the work is well ascertained and understood, the amount necessary to complete it is before the House and is vouched for by the official character of gentlemen who have made the surveys, and who have no interest in the matter otherwise than to give us correct information on the subject. I am well satisfied that there is no measure which would add so greatly to the prosperity of the country as the construction of this work, affording, as it will, an uninterrupted, cheap, and easy water communication between the East and West, and a great market for the surplus products of the agricultural States of the West. I am sure that if this market could be obtained, if this burden could be raised from the agriculture of the great West, it would add to the prosperity of that section more than any other single measure would do, thus enabling the people the more readily to meet the demands upon them for the support of the Government.

But, sir, I do not intend to discuss this question at length, and I have no right to consume the time which belongs properly to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. VAN HORN.] I therefore resign the floor to him.

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. I now yield to my colleague, [Mr. CHURCHILL.]

Mr. CHURCHILL. Mr. Speaker, no one needs to make apology for standing up at the present day to advocate the construction of the work contemplated by this bill, which, when completed, will place one of the noblest results of human industry beside the great cataract which since its discovery has attracted, as it must always continue to attract, the wondering admiration of every beholder. The construction of a ship-canal around the Falls of Niagara has for more than half a century been urged by the ablest, the wisest, and the most far-seeing of our public men. In 1808 it received the emphatic indorsement of Albert Gallatin, then Secretary of the Treasury. For many years after it held in equal poise in the minds of the great men who originated the canal policy of the State of New York, the route of the Erie canal, and the scale was turned, not by the commercial advantages of the latter route as a better communication with the great but then undeveloped West, but by the superior advantage of that route to the State of New York itself in opening to settlement the rich fields of western New York, then almost uninhabited, and in giving its infant but growing towns access to a remunerative market. On the 11th of September, 1834, a State convention held at the city of Utica, presided over by James G. King, of the New York Chamber of Commerce, and attended by not a few of the men who helped to lay the foundations of the commercial prosperity of that State, adopted unanimously the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That among the great objects of internal improvement indisputably of a national character this meeting regards the construction of a navigable communication between Lakes Erie and Ontario as the most prominent, the most simple, to be obstructed by fewer difficulties, to be accomplished at the least expense, and most likely to contribute to the common defense and the general welfare of the Union.

"Resolved, That the military defense of the extensive frontier lying upon the St. Lawrence, the lakes, and the communicating rivers is worthy of the highest consideration of the national Government, and that in the opinion of this meeting no measures would more largely contribute to that defense than a free navigation from the St. Lawrence to the headwaters of Lake Michigan.

"Resolved, therefore, That the construction of a ship-canal around the Falls of Niagara, by which an uninterrupted navigable communication may be effected between Lake Ontario and the upper lakes, is an object worthy of the immediate attention of the General Government, and claiming a liberal appropriation of the surplus revenues of the nation; that a memorial expressive of the wishes and purposes of this convention be transmitted to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, and that they be requested to present the same to the House of Representatives, and to make use of every honorable effort to carry into effect the foregoing resolutions."

One of the results of the movement thus inaugurated was the survey by Captain W. G. Williams, of the United States Army, made during the year 1835, and which, from the fullness and accuracy of its details, yet remains an authority upon all matters connected with this canal. Since 1835 this canal has been the subject of numerous favorable reports from successive standing and select committees of this House; one of the ablest of which was written and presented by the Representative from the Erie district, in the State of New York, and more than once it has received the approval of this House by decided majorities. State Legislatures, the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York, and other public bodies have given it their emphatic indorsement; among the last but not the least of which was that of the national commercial convention held at the city of Boston in February, 1868, composed of delegates from thirty-six boards of trade and chambers of commerce, from Maine to California, and who unanimously adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas navigation affords the cheapest of all known means of inland transportation; and whereas Lake Ontario extends lake navigation nearly three hundred miles farther eastward; Therefore and is a commercial necessity that demands the attention and the action of Congress."

A work which has so long held its place in the public eye, and has received the approval of such men and bodies of men, will not suffer from cries about schemes and jobs coming from men whose craft is in danger, from which they have their wealth, nor even by the perhaps pertinent inquiry of my colleague, the honorable gentleman from the Erie district, why private individuals have not contributed the large sums and assumed all the risks of a great public work—coming though the inquiry does from the Representative of a State not one foot of whose nine hundred miles of canals has been built by private enterprise. The importance of the work proposed by this bill is twofold—military and commercial. As a military work alone its importance justifies the expense of its construction. The navigable coast line of the great lakes and their connecting rivers exceeds, within our Territory, three thousand miles, dotted along nearly its entire extent with rich and populous cities and towns, and with a commerce constituting more than one third of the whole commerce of the United States, all of which would be at the mercy of an enemy having possession of the Lakes. The opposite shore is held by the only naval Power with which we have ever carried on war, and the only Power with which we are likely to have hostile collision in the future.

It will not do to say that the probability of such a war is too remote to make it a proper ground for the appropriation of so large a sum of money, since to provide against that very probability we have appropriated more than eight million dollars within the last five years for permanent fortifications along the sea-board, besides the large sums we have expended in maintaining a Navy in great part for the same purpose. For the protection of a navigable coast of equal extent, with a population soon to be of equal numbers, and with a commerce of nearly equal value, we have less than half a dozen small forts, and, with the exception of half a dozen revenue-cutters, but a single armed vessel. The average annual appropriation for the defense of the sea-board would alone suffice to commence and carry on the construction of this great work. Pas est ab hoste doceri. It is worth our while to observe the course pursued by our ancient and possibly future enemy.

At the close of the last war with Great Britain, she, profiting by the experience she had gained in that war, and with the sagacity which makes her guard the most distant outpost of her empire, determined to improve the defense of her colony. To that end she caused careful surveys to be made of the country between Lakes Erie and Ontario, and between the latter and the navigable waters of the St. Lawrence; and in 1818, when she had not yet recovered from the strain of her great wars, nor begun to reduce her enormous debt, nor resumed specie payments, she commenced the construction of the Rideau canal, and soon after of the Welland canal, both of which were built as military works at the cost and under the supervision of her war department. To them were afterward added the canals around the rapids of the St. Lawrence, costing, with the others, more than $20,000,000. By these she can place a large part of her navy at once upon our undefended coast.

The capture of Mason and Slidell brought us into unexpected danger of immediate war with Great Britain. All that our Government could then do was to call upon the Governors of the northern States to take measures to protect the unprotected borders. Great Britain, on the other hand, as the list of her navy shows, had at that time more than two hundred steam gun-boats and other vessels of war of dimensions to pass the locks of her canals and to enter Lake Ontario. It was with reason, therefore, that meetings of anxious citizens were then held all along the lake frontier to consider how they could best protect themselves from the impending danger.

In the event of war we could not give up Lake Ontario. To do so would not only abandon three hundred miles of coast to the ravages of the enemy and introduce that enemy into the heart of the country, but would make tenable only at enormous cost the two principal communications between the East and the West, to wit, the New York Central railroad and the Erie canal—for, running as they do for one hundred and fifty miles parallel to Lake Ontario, and at a distance varying from six to thirty miles from it, they could only be defended against the incursions of an enterprising enemy having possession of the lake, by maintaining an army whose cost would soon equal the expense of the construction of the proposed canal.

To hold the lakes without any communication between them on our part would make it necessary for us to put upon each lake a fleet equal to what Great Britain could put upon both, since we would be liable at any time to meet her entire fleet upon either. This necessary duplication of ships, armament, and men would also soon equal in expense the sum mentioned in this bill. The battle for the supremacy of the lakes, in the event of another war with Great Britain, would be fought upon Lake Ontario. If successful there the upper lakes would be safe. With proper communication between them the commercial marine of the lakes, with their large and staunch screw steamers and sailing vessels, would furnish a fleet which might be ready for action before the first English gun-boat had reached their waters.

But this danger is sneered at because, in the event of war, we should promptly protect ourselves by taking Canada. The military strength of the Canadas has been increased by their consolidation; for it will give unity to their councils, and our own history gives us an example that three million people, fighting upon their own soil, can baffle and finally defeat an enemy many times their number. But we may well hesitate in adopting such a suggestion when we remember that in our last struggle with this people our repeated efforts at invasion were repeated failures; that we were ourselves the invaded quite as often as we were invaders, and that in one of their invasions of our own territory the home of the honorable gentleman who proposes this mode of removing the danger was reduced to ashes by the enemy he despises.

In the event of a war, should such an invasion be attempted, for the purpose of obviating a danger which the power to concentrate our naval force upon the lakes might have guarded against, we should be paying in the blood and lives of brave men for the treasure we had withheld from this object. The Government of Great Britain has expended $20,000,000 in gold to protect a distant province. This bill asks for less than half that sum in gold to protect by the same mode the heart of our country. The people of the Northwest, who have contributed their share of the large sums which have been expended in forts and navies to defend the sea-board, have a right to demand, as they do demand, that this work, so essential as it is to the proper defense of the country of the great lakes, shall no longer be postponed.

But, Mr. Speaker, unlike fortifications and navies which absorb vast sums and contribute nothing of wealth or happiness to their builders, the commercial advantages of this work are greater, and its commercial necessity, if possible, more imperative than its military importance. We can make no greater mistake in our legislation than to forget the magnitude of the country for which we legislate, and the constant and wonderful progress of the development of its material interests. The great lakes of the Northwest, which this work would make one continuous sea, drain 335,000 square miles of our own territory, or more than the whole territory of France, added to that of Great Britain and Ireland, and with a capacity to support a human population equal to theirs.

Their shores are the boundaries of eight great States, whose population in 1870 will exceed 18,000,000—quite one half the population of the entire Union. New York has a coastline upon these great waters nearly equal to that of Spain upon the Mediterranean; Ohio more than that of France; Michigan more than Italy; and Pennsylvania and Indiana, each with their single port, have as broad a foothold upon these waters as Phœnicia or Venice, when each from its single port ruled the commerce of the world.

The commerce of these lakes in 1818 was less than $1,000,000; in 1841 it was $65,000,000; in 1856 it was $608,000,000, and now exceeds $1,000,000,000 in annual value. The growth of this commerce cannot be better illustrated than by the growth of the shipping by which it is moved. In 1818 there was but a single steamer and forty sailing vessels, only two of which exceeded 100 tons burden, on all the lakes above the Niagara river. In 1833 the number of vessels upon all the lakes was estimated at 665, averaging about 110 tons each. In 1860 they had increased to 1,600. But in 1868, as shown by the last report of the Secretary of the Treasury, their number was 2,681, averaging about 200 tons each. The anthracite coal of Pennsylvania forms an important item in the trade of the lakes, the production of which has increased from less than 365 tons in 1820 to more than 12,000,000 tons in 1868. But much the greater part in bulk and value of this vast and growing commerce is the food production of the western States on its way to market in the eastern States, or passing through the eastern States on its way to foreign markets. The relations which the eastern and western States bear to each other in the matter of food, demand and supply, can be best illustrated by a few facts from the census reports.

The population of the eight northeastern States, to wit, the six New England States, with New York and New Jersey, in 1850, was 6,815,055. The population of the same States in 1860 was 7,678,050, showing an increase of 1,862,998. The production of wheat in the same States in 1850 was 15,813,582 bushels, and in 1860 was 11,521,513 bushels. The production of corn in the same States in 1850 was 36,798,970 bushels, and in 1860 was 38,883,913 bushels, showing a falling off in the production of wheat of 4,292,069 bushels, an increase in the production of corn of only 2,089,943 bushels, and a falling off in the aggregate production of 2,102,129 bushels. The supply of food produced in those States prior to 1850 was insufficient for their population, and yet with an increase in population of more than one million and a quarter in 1860, there had been a falling off in the home supply of these great staples of human food of more than two million bushels; and the census of 1870 will undoubtedly show that this increase of population and deficiency of food production in those States has been maintained.

The wheat crop in the seven northwestern States, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Minnesota, in 1850, was 40,860,836 bushels, and the corn crop 185,993,965 bushels. In 1860 the wheat crop of the same States was 88,666,017 bushels, and the corn crop 319,397,474 bushels; showing an increase in wheat of 47,806,681 bushels, in corn of 133,403,509 bushels, and in the aggregate of 181,210,140 bushels, or 4,774,248 tons, or more than the entire weight of all articles carried upon all the canals of the State of New York in the year 1865. And this aggregate, if not ratio of increase of production, has undoubtedly been maintained to the present time, since the corn crop of the three States of Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa in 1866 was 335,808,881 bushels, or more than that of the whole seven States in 1860.

The average price of corn in the three last-mentioned States in the year 1866, as shown by the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for that year, was 44 cents per bushel, while in New York it was $1 16, in Connecticut $1 26, and in Massachusetts $1 34 per bushel. An addition of five cents a bushel to the value of the corn crop of those States for that year, by an improvement of the facilities for transportation, would have added to the wealth of these three States $16,794,444, or one and one third the entire cost of the proposed canal. These figures not only show the sources from which the deficiency of food in the eastern States is to be supplied, but also show that the demand for a market at the West is as imperative as the demand for food at the East, and that the interests of each require that the communication between them shall be made as cheap and as accessible as possible. That communication is, and always will be, mainly by the great lakes; and when we add the 4,000,000 of New England to the 18,000,000 who inhabit the States bordering on those waters and Iowa, we find more than half of the population of the Union immediately interested in the improvement of their channels of intercommunication and the reduction of the cost of transportation upon them.

How shall this be accomplished? We affirm that the only way in which it can be done is by establishing upon our own soil a communication between Lakes Erie and Ontario which shall enable any craft ordinarily navigating either of those lakes to reach the other without difficulty, and this for two reasons:

First. The ports upon Lake Ontario are more numerous, nearer, and more accessible to the great centers of demand and consumption of western products than those at the eastern extremity of Lake Erie, and with equal access to the western lakes can more cheaply transport those products to their consumers, and convey also to the West the eastern merchandise and manufactures which they need.

Second. The competition thus established between the ports upon Lakes Erie and Ontario will keep the charges upon each at a point of reasonable profit; and should these channels become clogged, or the charges upon them for any reason become excessive, the way will be opened to the St. Lawrence, which ever points the way of unbroken water communication to the distant ocean, and thus will always operate as a valuable check upon the charges by the other route.

The fear that with the construction of this canal our own channels of communication will not be able to compete on even terms with the route of the St. Lawrence is founded upon a want of acquaintance with the facts of the case. The Canadian ports on the north shore of Lake Ontario, which have access now to this route, notwithstanding their natural prejudice in favor of their own route, send quite as much grain to Great Britain by the way of Oswego and New York as by the St. Lawrence. The entire exportation of grain from Canada to Great Britain and Ireland by the way of the St. Lawrence in 1866 was 3,334,812 bushels, while the amount of grain received from Canada at the port of Oswego alone during the same year was 5,854,187 bushels, a great part of which was on its way to Great Britain by the way of New York. But we are assured by my colleague, the honorable gentleman from Buffalo, that the construction of this canal will not improve the communication between the East and the West, because the Welland canal now connects Lakes Erie and Ontario, and its business is steadily decreasing. I admit the fact of the decrease, and desire to call the attention of the House to the reason; for that reason is the controlling one why this bill should pass, aside from the fact that our commerce should have its own channels, and not be dependent upon those of a rival, and possibly hostile foreign country.

Twenty years ago no vessels were built upon the lakes for the purpose of carrying freight that were not adapted to the locks upon the Welland canal, so that they might at pleasure take freight to ports either upon Lakes Erie or Ontario. At that time freight could be carried cheaper by Oswego than by Buffalo. With the increase of the volume of commerce upon the lakes, and with the deepening and improvement of the St. Clair flats and of the entrances to lake harbors, there has been since that time an increase in the size of vessels built upon the lakes and a larger proportion of the upperlake fleet from year to year which could not pass the locks of the Welland canal and were thereby excluded from the ports upon Lake Ontario. As this proportion increased the ability of Oswego to compete with Buffalo on equal terms continually grew less. I append hereto a statement prepared by a Buffalo authority, showing that in 1857 the cost of transportation was less by Oswego; that the difference grew steadily less until 1863, when it changed in favor of Buffalo and has since steadily increased in the same direction:

The fact that a vessel carrying 30,000 bushels of wheat to Buffalo is navigated with the same number of men and at about the same expense as a vessel carrying 16,000 bushels which can pass the Welland canal to Oswego, added to the fact that a large part of the upper lake fleet from the size of the vessels is absolutely excluded from Lake Ontario, will show that no fair competition does or can exist between the two routes. We yet receive six or seven million bushels of western grain, about half of which is consumed in our own manufactures of flour and starch, but Oswego and other Lake Ontario ports are no longer dangerous competitors of their great rival, Buffalo, for the commerce of the West, and their power to regulate excessive charges upon that commerce is gone and will not return until by the construction of this canal or some similar work they are again made equal rivals for the trade of the West.

Whether the West or the East can afford to have competition lessened while the volume of trade is so wonderfully increasing is for them to determine. Oswego has a capacity in her elevators and warehouses and canal and railroad facilities to handle the entire eastern movement of western grain, could that movement be distributed equally over the whole period of lake and canal navigation; but her vast facilities are comparatively useless for the effect they ought to have, and, with the construction of the Niagara ship-canal, would have upon the charges of transportation between the East and the West.

To show the capacity of the Oswego canal and the growth of its business I append hereto a statement of the entire movement of freight upon it for the last twenty-one years:

The honorable member from Buffalo thinks nothing is gained by the use of the Oswego canal in furnishing facilities for the transportation of freight because that canal joins the Erie canal at Syracuse, and therefore argues that the Erie canal, which for half of its distance is common to both, is the measure of facility furnished, and that nothing is gained whether produce enters the Erie canal at Buffalo or at Syracuse. But it should be remembered that the great volume of western produce is moved, in fact, during two or three months in the year, and that at that time the charges for elevating, storing, discharging, and other charges incident to transportation, as well as freight, are greatly increased, and that it would be for the great advantage of commerce to have an equal competition between rival ports to control this increase. It should also be remembered that during this same period of enlarged freight movement the canals become clogged, and great detention, loss and expense is entailed thereby upon shippers. But as Syracuse is one hundred and eighty-six miles, or considerably more than half way, from Buffalo to Albany, it will be seen that more than one half of this detention and loss will be saved by the use of the Oswego route.

But my colleague from the Erie district, in answering the question, where would this property go to if once afloat on Lake Ontario? omitted all mention of the railroads of the State of New York. When we remember that the entire freight movement of all the railroads of the State of New York for the year 1867 was more than ten million tons, or twice that of all the canals of the State, it will be seen that this is too important an omission to be overlooked. The great centers toward which the produce of the West, moving upon the lakes, tend, and from which it is distributed to consumers through the country or carried to its foreign market, are Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Boston, and Portland. An examination will show that each of these ports are nearer to ports upon Lake Ontario or the river St. Lawrence by rail than to Buffalo, (which is selected for the comparison as the port upon Lake Erie most favorable of the Lake Erie routes,) and that, too, by distances which will more than save in cost of railroad transportation what is lost in the increased distance by water.

From Baltimore to Buffalo, by rail, is 416 miles; from Baltimore to Charlotte, on Lake Ontario, is 361 miles, or a saving of 55 miles by rail. From Philadelphia to Buffalo is 441 miles; from Philadelphia to Charlotte is 386 miles; from Philadelphia to Oswego is 330 miles, or a saving in the one case of 55 miles, and in the other 111 miles, by rail. From New York to Buffalo is 423 miles; from New York to Charlotte is 386 miles, a saving of 37 miles. From New York to Oswego, by the Erie, is 343 miles; from New York to Oswego, by the Delaware, Lackawana, and Western, is 320 miles; from New York to Oswego, by the Central and Syracuse, is 327 miles; from New York to Oswego, by the Central and Rome, is 324 miles, or a saving of 80 miles by the longest, and of 103 miles by the shortest of these routes. From New York to Cape Vincent is 356 miles, or a saving of 67 miles, as compared with Buffalo.

The distance from Boston to Buffalo is 500 miles; from Boston to Oswego is, by Rome, 381 miles, and by Syracuse 389 miles, or a saving in the one case of 111 and in the other of 119 miles. The distance from Boston to Ogdensburg is 416 miles, or 84 miles less than by Buffalo. The distance from Portland to Montreal is 297 miles, or more than 200 miles nearer than to Buffalo.

These distances are taken upon existing continuous routes by rail between the points named. They are, many of them, not yet combined and organized for freight transportation between those points, and with the practical exclusion of the trade of the West from Lake Ontario they have no inducement for such combination. In addition to these routes, the Southern Central railroad, terminating at Little Sodus, upon Lake Ontario, is rapidly being pushed forward to completion, and will furnish Philadelphia with the best and most accessible lake port, and Pennsylvania with the best outlet upon the lakes for her coal, and that, too, upon a harbor not surpassed upon the whole line of the lakes.

The New York and Oswego Midland railroad, which is also under most efficient management, being pressed forward to completion, will give a connection between Lake Ontario and New York forty miles shorter than any existing route. The Oswego and Rondout road, being built under the energetic presidency of a member of this House, will furnish, when completed, the very shortest communication between Lake Ontario and the deep water of the Hudson. The effect of the competition of all these roads and routes on even terms with the New York Central and Erie railroads and the Erie canal, for the trade of the West, I need not explain to this House. They know what that effect would be, and know that it would revolutionize that trade, and by regulating and cheapening transportation would confer benefits which we cannot compute upon both the East and the West. I will not longer detain the House. He is said to be a real benefactor of his race who makes two blades of grass grow where but one grew before. But he is equally, and far more widely a benefactor, who by wise legislation brings closer together the producer and the consumer, and gives cheap bread to the one at the same time that he secures a more ample remuneration for his labor to the other.

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. At the close of my remarks yesterday I intended to have offered an amendment to the bill, in the nature of a substitute for the third section. It escaped my attention at the time, but I desire now to ask consent to present the amendment and to have it pending. I will state that it embraces in it all of the third section as it stands in the bill with an addition. I hope there will be no objection.

There was no objection; and the following amendment in the nature of a substitute for the third section of the bill was received:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the President shall cause to be made, by the most skillful engineers of the Army, such examinations and surveys as he may deem to be necessary, and from them and surveys already made, the route of said canal shall be located in the manner following: he shall appoint five capable, disinterested persons who shall be citizens of five different States, who shall act as commissioners to locate said canal. Said commissioners shall examine in person the different routes surveyed, also the surveys, maps, plans, and estimates already provided for in this section, and proceed to locate said canal upon the route having the greatest merits, with a due regard to the permanency of its construction and its greatest advantages for military, naval, and commercial purposes; and the engineers provided for in this section shall make and file, in the office of the Secretary of War, a survey, map, and profile of said canal where located, and before the work thereon shall be commenced. Before the location of said canal shall be final, as made by said commissioners as above provided, it shall be approved by the President of the United States; and said commissioners shall each receive eight dollars for every day actually employed in the service herein provided for, to be paid in the same manner as other expenses and labor on said canal are provided for and paid.

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Ross.]

Mr. ROSS. It is objected to the passage of this bill that the finances of the country are not in a suitable condition to justify it. I am not unaware that the country is now embarrassed, but to refuse to make an appropriation of this character at this time, it seems to me, would be analogous to the conduct of a farmer who owned a large tract of land, and should refuse to purchase the stock and implements necessary to cultivate his farm for fear of increasing his debts. In my judgment, this is one of the most important and proper appropriations that has ever come before this Congress. It is not sectional in its character, for it is the interest of the western farmer to send his products to the eastern markets cheaply, it is equally the interest of the eastern consumer of those products to get them cheaply. Consequently, there is a mutual interest of producer and consumer to remove this obstruction to navigation between these two great inland seas.

But it is objected by gentlemen in whose opinions I have great confidence that we have no constitutional power to make this improvement, because it is within the boundaries of a State, and we have not obtained the consent of the State of New York to make this improvement. Now, sir, I do not hold that the great Northwest is to be dependent on the judgment of the sea-board whether we are to have access to the markets of the world or not. We have been in the habit of making appropriations for the removal of obstructions from the Mississippi river and other water-courses; but suppose the State of Mississippi should conclude, when a sand bar was formed in the Mississippi river in that State, that the national Government should not remove that obstruction? I think we should have a right to remove it. Gentlemen behind me say the Mississippi river is a great highway. That is true; but are not the great inland seas of this country great national highways as much as the Mississippi river? and if we have a right under the Constitution to appropriate money for the purpose of removing snags and sand-bars from the Mississippi river, I ask why we have not a right under the same power to remove an obstruction to the navigation between these two great inland seas so as to give the surplus products of the Northwest an opportunity of reaching a market?

In relation to the question of expense and the financial condition of the country, I may say that while I have been a member of this House I have uniformly voted against all unnecessary appropriations. But, sir, let us cut off expenditures in some other direction. Let us cut down this large standing Army which is unnecessary, and which is costing us $100,000,000 a year. Let us cut down the expenses of the Navy, which is costing the people $47,000,000 a year. Let us cut down the expenses of the Freedmen's Bureau, which is costing us twelve or fourteen million dollars a year. By lopping off these unnecessary expenses it will be easy for us to find money by which we can remove this obstruction between these two great inland seas, and let the products of the great Northwest move to a proper market.

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. I do not desire to continue this debate any further, so far as I am concerned, and I now surrender the floor.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, that the bill and pending amendments be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JUDD. Upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 81, nays 60, not voting 81; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Arnell, Bailey, Beatty, Beck, Benjamin, Benton, Bingham, Blair, Boyden, Boyer, Buckland, Chanler, Covode, Delano, Ela, Ferriss, Fox, Getz, Golladay, Griswold, Grover, Haight, Hawkins, Hill, Holman, Chester D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Hunter, Johnson, Thomas L. Jones, Julian, Kelley, Kerr, Kitchen, Knott, Koontz, Lash, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loughbridge, Marshall, Marvin, Maynard, McCarthy, McCormick, McCullough, Mercer, Miller, Moore, Morrell, Mullins, Newcomb, Polsey, Price, Randall, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Starkweather, Stevens, Stokes, Stover, Taber, Taffe, Taylor, Thomas, Tift, Lawrence S. Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Auker, Van Trump, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, John T. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Young—81.

NAYS.—Messrs. Allison, Baker, Banks, Beaman, Blaine, Bromwell, Benjamin F. Butler, Churchill, Sidney Clarke, Clift, Cobb, Coburn, Cook, Corley, Cornell, Cullom, Dawes, Deweese, Dodge, Eckley, Thomas D. Eliot, James T. Elliott, Farnsworth, Fields, French, Goss, Gove, Harding, Heaton, Higby, Hooper, Jenckes, Alexander H. Jones, Judd, Kellogg, Lincoln, Logan, Mungen, Newsham, Norris, Paine, Perham, Peters, Pierce, Poland, Prince, Raun, Roots, Ross, Sawyer, Shanks, John Trimble, Twichell, Burt Van Horn, Vidal, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Whittemore, James F. Wilson, and Windom—60.

NOT VOTING.—Messrs. Adams, Ames, Anderson, Archer, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Baldwin, Barnes, Barnum, Blackburn, Boies, Boutwell, Bowen, Brooks, Broomall, Buckley, Burr, Roderick R. Butler, Cate, Callis, Cary, Reader W. Clarke, Dickey, Dixon, Dockery, Donnelly, Driggs, Edwards, Eggleston, Eldridge, Ferry, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Gravely, Halsey, Hamilton, Haughey, Hopkins, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulbard, Ingersoll, Kelsey, Ketcham, Ladin, Loan, Lynch, Mallory, McKee, Moorhead, Morrissey, Myers, Niblack, Nicholson, Nunn, O'Neill, Orth, Pettis, Phelps, Pike, Pile, Plants, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Robinson, Robinson, Schenck, Selye, Smith, Stewart, Stone, Sypher, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Wood, Woodbridge, and Woodward—81.

So the motion was agreed to.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. AXTELL said: I am paired upon this bill with the gentleman from New York, Mr. Brooks. Upon this question he would vote "ay" if he were present, and I would vote "no."

Mr. NIBLACK said: On this vote, as on the previous vote, I am paired off with the gentleman from New York, Mr. LAFLIN. If he were present he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. KELLEY said: I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. O'NEILL, is absent under the order of the House, attending the obsequies of our late colleague, Mr. Finney.

Mr. RANDALL said: My colleague, Mr. GLOSSBRENNER, is absent by direction of the House. If he were present he would vote "ay."

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the House referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union the Niagara ship-canal bill; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING LAND OFFICE REPORT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to printing the maps and illustrations accompanying the last annual report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

DISBURSING CLERK OF PATENT OFFICE.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the disbursing clerk of the Patent Office, asking additional allowance for services in that capacity; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

TREASURY PRINTING BUREAU.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the House, reports of the First Comptroller, First Auditor, and Register of the Treasury, relative to the past and the existing condition of the Engraving and Printing Bureau of the Treasury.

Mr. DAWES. That is in answer to the resolution I introduced.

The SPEAKER. To what committee does the gentleman wish the papers to be referred?

Mr. DAWES. I only want them ordered to be printed.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Retrenchment have had that subject under consideration; and I move that the communication and accompanying papers be referred to that committee, and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled House bill No. 1673, to relieve William H. Bagley, of Wake county, North Carolina; when the Speaker signed the same.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move that the rules be suspended and the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the special order, which is the legislative appropriation bill. I make the motion merely for the purpose of having that bill receive to-day its first reading in Committee of the Whole. It is a very long bill, and if unanimous consent can be had to dispense with the first reading of the bill in the Committee of the Whole I will not press my motion.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I object.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Then I make the motion I have indicated.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. FERRISS. I move that when this House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. That motion has precedence of the motion to adjourn.

The question was then taken upon the motion of Mr. FERRISS; and upon a division there were—ayes 69, noes 48.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, said: I call for tellers. And before the question is taken I desire to say to the House—

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CULLOM. I would like to say one word in regard to a session to-morrow.

Mr. SPALDING. I object.

The question recurred on the demand for tellers.

Mr. HIGBY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The call for yeas and nays has precedence of the call for tellers.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and upon a division there were—ayes 25, noes 55.

So (one fifth voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 71, nays 62, not voting 89; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Axtell, Barnes, Beaman, Beatty, Beck, Boyer, Bromwell, Buckland, Chanler, Sidney Clarke, Clift, Cobb, Cook, Cornell, Dewees, Dodge, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Fox, Getz, Holladay, Goss, Gove, Gravely, Grover, Haight, Halsey, Harding, Hawkins, Holman, Chester D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Thomas L. Jones, Kelley, Korr, Knott, Koontz, Lash, George V. Lawrence, Marshall, Marvin, McCormick, McCullough, Mungen, Niblack, Norris, Paine, Peters, Phelps, Price, Randall, Raum, Ross, Scofield, Spalding, Taber, Thomas, Tift, Lawrence S. Trimble, Upson, Van Aiken, Burt Van Horn, Van Trump, Vidal, Whittemore, Thomas Williams, James F. Wilson, and Young—71.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Arnell, Bailey, Baker, Benjamin, Benton, Bingham, Blair, Boles, Boyden, Buckley, Benjamin F. Butler, Churchill, Corley, Covode, Cullom, Delano, Ella, Thomas D. Eliot, James T. Elliott, Fields, Frongh, Garfield, Griswold, Heaton, Higby, Hill, Hunter, Johnson, Alexander H. Jones, Julian, Kellogg, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Loughridge, Maynard, McCarthy, McKee, Mercut, Miller, Moore, Morrell, Mullins, Newcomb, Newsham, Perham, Roots, Sawyer, Shanks, Stigreeves, Starkweather, Stevens, Stover, Trowbridge, Twichell, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, William Williams, John T. Wilson, and Windom—62.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Barnum, Blackburn, Blaine, Boutwell, Bowen, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Roderick R. Butler, Cate, Callis, Cary, Reader W. Clarke, Coburn, Dawes, Dickey, Dixon, Dockery, Donnelly Driggs, Eekley, Edwards, Eggleston, Ferry, Glossbrenner, Hamilton, Haughey, Hooper, Hopkins, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulbard, Jenckes, Judd, Kelsey, Ketcham, Kitchen, Ladin, Loan, Logan, Lynch, Mallory, Moorhead, Morrissey, Myers, Nicholson, Nunn, O'Neill, Orth, Pettis, Pierce, Pike, Pile, Plants, Poland, Polesey, Pomeroy, Prince, Pruyn, Robinson, Robinson, Schenck, Selye, Shellabarger, Smith, Stewart, Stokes, Stone, Sypher, Taffe, Taylor, John Trimble, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Wyck, Ward, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, Woodbridge, and Woodward—89.

So the motion of Mr. FERRISS, that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn till Monday next, was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the motion of Mr. ELDRIDGE, that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the House (at four o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) adjourned till Monday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. BECK. A petition of the manufacturers of copper-distilled whisky in the sixth and seventh districts in Kentucky, for a ratification of portions of the internal revenue law, approved July 20, 1868.

By Mr. BROMWELL: The petition of Dr. John H. McQuoun, of Coles county, Illinois, praying an allowance of his claim for services as surgeon during the war for the suppression of the rebellion.

By Mr. ELA: The petition of J. C. Hutchins, of Dover, New Hampshire, and 20 others, for a modification of the law relating to manufactured tobacco and cigars which have paid tax.

By Mr. GARFIELD: A petition of Department clerks, for an increase of pay.

By Mr. HALSEY: A petition of captains and owners of vessels of Newark, New Jersey, asking Congress to protect them from the tax imposed by the different States and cities known as harbor tonnage tax, &c.

Also, the petition of Peter P. Batte, of Prince George county, Virginia, asking that his disability may be removed.

By Mr. HARDING: A memorial of citizens of Quincy, Illinois, relative to the tax on cigars.

By Mr. HOTCHKISS: A remonstrance of the Hubbard Hardware Company, of Middletown, Connecticut, against the further increase of the duty on steel.

By Mr. KELLEY: A petition of 250 citizens of New York, praying Congress to propose an amendment to the Constitution securing the right of suffrage to citizens without regard to race or color.

By Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania: The petition of Julian Chambers, of Greene county, Pennsylvania, for $100 bounty.

By Mr. MOORE: Petitions from owners and masters of vessels, of New Haven and Fair Haven, Connecticut, with accompanying papers, praying the intervention of Congress to protect all engaged in navigation from illegal taxes by States and municipal corporations.

Also, petitions of 1,400 masters and owners of vessels of Bath, Bangor, Dumfriescott, Belfast, Waldoboro', Thomaston, French Beach, Warren, Brunswick, and Portland, Maine, representing 10,000 vessels, praying the intervention of Congress to protect all engaged in navigation from illegal exactions by State and municipal corporations.

By Mr. PLANTS: The petition of Thomas Stevenson and 32 others, citizens of Beverly, Ohio, for the establishment of a mail route from Beverly, Washington county, to Moscow Mills, in Morgan county, Ohio.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania: Three petitions of citizens of Armstrong and Butler counties, Pennsylvania, praying for the establishment of a daily mail route between Brady's Bend, in Armstrong, and Brownington, in Butler county, and the discontinuance of sundry existing routes.

By Mr. WILSON, of Pennsylvania: The petition of E. Andrews, and others, of Williamsport, Pennsylvania, against any further increase of duty on imported steel and a letter of E. Andrews on the same subject.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, January 18, 1869.

Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, D. D.

On motion by Mr. POMEROY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of Friday last was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to the condition of certain appropriations under the control of that Department; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting an estimate of the appropriations required for fulfilling stipulations with the Senecas, mixed Senecas, Shawnees, Quapaws, Confederated Peorias, Kaskaskias, Weas, and Piankeshaws, Ottawas of Blanchard's Fork and Roche de Boeuf, and certain Wyandotts, under the treaty of February 23, 1867, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1870; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

NAVY AND MARINE CORPS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 941) to amend certain acts in relation to the Navy and Marine corps, and asking a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. DRAKE subsequently said: I understand that a moment ago House bill No. 941 was laid before the Senate with a message that the House had disagreed to certain amendments made by the Senate, and that the bill was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. I think the proper course it should take would be for the Senate to insist on its amendments and accede to the conference asked by the House of Representatives. If there be no objection I move that the order sending the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be considered as reconsidered if there be no objection.

Mr. DRAKE. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments to the bill non-concurred in by the House, and that a committee of conference be appointed on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and Messrs. DRAKE, NYE, and HENDRICKS were appointed conferees on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of citizens of Massachusetts, praying that the right of suffrage be granted to women in the District of Columbia and the Territories of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Gary Davis, of Georgia, praying protection in the enjoyment of his civil rights; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions of a meeting of the Board of Supervisors of Dubuque county, Iowa, in relation to the free navigation of the St. Lawrence river by Great Britain, and for the speedy completion of a route to the lakes by the way of Wisconsin and Fox rivers; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of citizens of Kansas, praying a revision of the naturalization laws; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of honorably discharged soldiers who lost their legs while serving in the Union Army during the late war, praying the passage of an act giving them an artificial limb; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FERRY presented the petition of Thomas P. Lewis, of West Virginia, praying a removal of the political disabilities imposed on him by acts of Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Eliza Whiting, widow of Brevet Brigadier General Whiting, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. RICE presented the petition of William J. Patton, collector of internal revenue second district of Arkansas, praying the passage of an act relieving him from the payment of certain money stolen from him by his deputies; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TRUMBULL presented a memorial of William B. Campbell, praying compensation for losses sustained by him in consequence of the seizure by the United States, in 1861, of a steamboat belonging to him then lying at Mound City, Illinois; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented a memorial of members of the Association of Medical Superintendents of American Institutions for the Insane, praying that superintendents in the late disloyal States be relieved from all political disabilities; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I present the petition of Duncan, Sherman & Co., E. D. Morgan & Co., Ewell & Co., and a large number of other bankers and business men of the city of New York, and of Thomas Robins, Edwin M. Lewis, William Rushton, jr., Joseph M. Patterson, and a large number of merchants and bankers of the city of Philadelphia; and of E. A. Presbrey, Briggs & Co., M. K. Frothingham, Samuel Phillips, jr., Whiton Brothers & Co., Potter, White & Bayley, and a large number of other merchants, bankers, and business men of Boston, and of W. N. Coolbaugh, C. T. Wheeler, Josiah Lambard, and a large number of other merchants, bankers, and business men of Chicago, praying that Congress would pass such laws that hereafter all purchases or sales of the loans and bonds of the United States on account of the United States shall be made by inviting public competition through advertising of proposals, and that all sales of gold for account of the United States shall be made at public auction by an authorized official of the Treasury Department at such time and place, which shall be duly advertised, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall designate. This petition embraces as large a number of the solid business men of the country as any which has ever been presented to Congress. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRELINGHUYSEN presented the petition of Mrs. Elizabeth Clarke, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CRAGIN presented the memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Dakota, praying for the extension of the Sioux City and Pacific railroad to Yankton, in that Territory; which was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

He also presented a petition of Jacob I. Cragin, of Hampshire county, West Virginia, praying compensation for property taken for the use of the United States Army during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HENDRICKS presented a letter of Vice Admiral David D. Porter, United States Navy, in relation to the application of Commander B. B. Taylor for a higher rank in the Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SUMNER presented a memorial of citizens of Boston, remonstrating against the renewal of the reciprocity treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of claimants against the Government of Venezuela, praying that the Government of the United States pay them the amount allowed them by the commission appointed to adjudicate the same; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of Mrs. Kate Murphey, of Philadelphia, for relief in the nature of compensation for the loss of her husband, a Union soldier, who died in the war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SUMNER. I also present the petition of certain freedmen of Hilton Head, South Carolina, and vicinity, praying for the passage of House bill No. 907, entitled "An act to provide for the sale of certain lands and lots on the sea islands of Beaufort district, South Carolina." As my friend from Kansas [Mr. POMEROY] reported a bill on this subject the other day, I ask him whether this petition should go to the Committee on Public Lands or lie on the table?

Mr. POMEROY. The committee have reported in favor of it.

Mr. SUMNER. In favor of the House bill?

Mr. POMEROY. It is not a House bill; it is a Senate bill.

Mr. SUMNER. Then I will venture to ask that this petition shall be referred to the committee, for it asks something more. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I also present a petition from artists, chromo-lithographers, engravers, print-publiishers, journalists, authors, and others interested in the progress of American art, numerously signed, in which they set forth that the rapid perfection of the process of chromo-lithography in the United States renders necessary an addition to our national legislation in order to protect the rights of artists and of honest art publishers. And after setting forth their reasons, they proceed to ask from Congress an act declaring that the purchase of a painting or work of art does not convey the copyright thereof, which inheres and shall inhere in the artist, unless specially conveyed to the publisher. This petition is headed by Louis Prang, of Boston, the eminent chromo-lithographer, who has done so much to introduce that beautiful art into our country, and I find by looking over the names those of many eminent artists, sculptors, painters, engravers, and authors. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Patents.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY. I present a petition from the Association of Tobacco Manufacturers in the State of Kansas. This petition is signed by Valentine Grimm, president, and Hugo Grimm as secretary. They represent that the act of Congress passed in July, 1868, is oppressive to the manufacturers of cigars, and particularly those who manufacture in the West, and they set forth their reasons at considerable length. I do not know the merits of it myself. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

He also presented the petition of Daniel N. Denman and Ebenezer Townley, administrators of John Denman and George Townley, deceased, praying to be compensated for beef cattle sold by the commissary department during the revolutionary war; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Massachusetts, earnestly requesting that in any change or amendment of the Constitution Congress may propose to extend or regulate suffrage there shall be no distinction made between men and women; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. POMEROY. I also present a petition signed by Hon. E. M. Davis, and others, of Philadelphia, relating to the question of finance. I have never said a word on that question to the Senate, because I know so little about it; but I should like, with the leave of the Senate, to have the petition, or at least a portion of it, read. I do it because the writer is an eminent man in Philadelphia, and a friend of mine of long standing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

"We assert that the frequent and sudden fluctuations in the money market affect disastrously the legitimate business of the country, subjecting honest, cautious industry to the avarice of gold and stock gamblers. That confidence in regular productive business is thus weakened, non-producers are increased, and general prosperity is gradually undermined, and that these evils are largely owing to our false money system. We assert that this system fosters the antagonism between labor and money; and that as money gets by law from six to ten per cent. per annum, and the wealth of the country increases about three and a half per cent. per annum, the inequality cannot exist without robbing labor, the real source of wealth.

"That the money business of the country is a gigantic and dangerous monopoly by a few, benefiting but few, and seriously injuring the many. That it would be no more just or injurious to give by law to a few the exclusive right to raise and sell grain, than it is to a few the power now held and wielded by the national banks.

"We claim that as money is the medium by which enterprise enriches the country, that the amount should only be limited by the wants of the country.

That as the amount varies from year to year, and even in different seasons, to limit it by law would cramp one period, flood another, and prevent that elasticity demanded by wholesome trade."

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the paper be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. POMEROY. I have no objection, but I hope the Committee on Finance will read it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Nobody is listening to it here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred.

Mr. WILLEY presented the petition of E. G. Roberts, president of the West Virginia Central Railroad Company, praying the passage of a law authorizing the sale to it of a certain amount of public land, to be paid for by the transfers of its stock to the Government of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COLE presented the petition of Dr. J. G. Cooper, of San Francisco, California, praying compensation for services as naturalist of the Northern Pacific railroad expedition and survey for the years 1865 and 1866; which was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Mr. WILSON. I present a petition signed by ex-Governors Bullock, Clifford, and Washburne, of Massachusetts; Nathaniel B. Shurtleff, mayor of the city of Boston; Harvey Jewell, speaker of the house of representatives of Massachusetts; William Lloyd Garrison; Professors Agassiz and Lowell, and a large number of gentlemen in and about Boston, petitioning for the passage of Mr. JENCKES'S bill to regulate the civil service of the United States and promote the efficiency thereof. There are to this petition the names of about six hundred gentlemen engaged in all the departments of life, gentlemen of intelligence and character. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of citizens of Ohio, praying that a pension be granted to Colonel J. B. W. Haynes, a soldier in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ANTHONY. I present resolutions in the nature of a memorial from the Providence Board of Trade, urging upon Congress such legislation as will secure the immunity of private property not contraband of war upon the seas and upon land. These resolutions are so much in harmony with the views which I have had the honor to express to the Senate that I am happy to present the resolutions, and I think it is a subject of congratulation that the mercantile interests are moving in a matter of so much importance. I move the reference of the resolutions to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FOWLER presented the memorial of Thomas Rigney, E. D. Morgan, and other merchants of the city of New York, asking for congressional legislation with respect to certain charges illegally levied by the custom-house at New York; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. NORTON presented the memorial of Joseph R. Brown, praying for compensation for losses sustained in transportation of Government supplies by reason of the default of officers of the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate to make a few remarks somewhat personal to myself, and I think personal to other members of the Senate. The reason for the expression of this wish will be manifest from the reading of an article copied in the New York Tribune, of January 15, from the Cincinnati Gazette, headed "A startling history of fraud and dishonest legislation—how the public lands are squandered—ten great States given away." To relieve me from the labor I ask the Secretary of the Senate to read the article.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

A Startling History of Fraud and Dishonest Legislation—How the Public Lands are Squandered—Ten Great States Given Away.

General Boynton writes as follows to the Cincinnati Gazette:

"The subject of the great railroad frauds grows at every attempt to ascertain its limits, and it is only by investigating one scheme after another that the full sounded infamy begins to appear.

"The Sioux City Branch.—There was a clause in the original Pacific railroad bill which required the Union Pacific Railroad Company to construct a branch from Sioux City to connect with their main road by the 'nearest and most practicable route.'

"The road thus provided for would, if any attention had been paid to the law authorizing it, have been built from a point on the Missouri river, opposite Sioux City, in a direction almost exactly southwest, to Columbus, in Nebraska, on the main stem, a distance of ninety-six miles.

"Instead of doing this, however, the road was built down the rich and level bottoms of the Missouri, in a direction considerably east of south, and for sixty-eight miles of this distance at the end of each successive mile the track-layers were further from the Pacific ocean than when they began, and at the sixty-eighth mile were twenty miles further east than the meridian of Sioux City. Then, turning westward and crossing the Missouri thirty miles above Omaha, the line strikes the main stem at Fremont, making the branch thus built one hundred miles in length and its terminus at this point of junction only six miles nearer the Pacific ocean than the point where its first rail was laid.

"And for this road lying almost wholly in the State of Iowa, in no sense a Pacific road, and in almost all senses a private one, bonds, by way of Government subsidy, have been issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, at the rate of about $16,000 per mile, and lands have been certified by the Secretary of the Interior at the rate of twelve thousand eight hundred acres per mile; and by legislation already perfected this branch, thus constructed in violation of law, is regularly receiving its proportion of these subsidies, and claims the whole, namely: $1,600,000 and one million two hundred and eighty thousand acres of land.

"Burlington and Missouri River Extension.—By the amended Pacific railroad act of 1861 certain Iowa parties secured an amendment authorizing this company to extend its line from a point on the Missouri river, near Nebraska City westward, to a point near Fort Kearny, or any point east of the hundredth meridian. The distance was about one hundred and fifty miles, and the land grant twelve thousand eight hundred acres per mile. Here Mr. Secretary HARLAN stepped in and withdrew from public sale not only all the lands south of this road to the Nebraska line, but went over into Kansas and withdrew all the lands down to those which Senator POMEROY'S company had already received. Between these two gentlemen and their friends a tract large enough for a very respectable State came near passing into the hands of a few individuals. But the Kansas Legislature and the Kansas delegation in the House made such an exposition of the transaction as to compel Secretary HARLAN in self-defense to restore the Kansas lands to the market.

"The Sacramento and San José Branch.—All the irregularities connected with this branch system have not been upon the eastern ends of these roads. Under the original Pacific railroad act the Central Pacific railroad of California was authorized to construct a road either from San Francisco, or the navigable waters of the Sacramento river, to the eastern boundary of California. The company selected Sacramento City as their point of departure.

"Subsequently, however, another company chartered by the State, claiming to have an assignment from the first company, proceeded to build a road from Sacramento by way of Stockton to San José, a point not on the Pacific coast. The line was one hundred and twenty miles long, and it received a subsidy of $1,920,000 and a large grant of land beside. The facts, as given above in the case of these two branch roads, were charged on the floor of the House in March last by General C. C. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin, and not denied.

"Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston Road.—This is one of the rotten Kansas swindles. It runs from Leavenworth southwardly through the eastern portion of the State, and, of course, through some of its richest lands. This latter feature is a peculiarity of these latter-day roads. At the East, where companies pay for their lands, they run their roads as far as possible over the poor lands; but at the West the reverse is true: the companies do not pay, but become wealthy by selecting the richest lands.

"The portion of this road which lies in Kansas is one hundred and fifty miles long, and the cost of building this will not average over $20,000 per mile. This road has already received the following aid: The Government has granted it five hundred thousand acres of excellent land; the State of Kansas has given one hundred and twenty-five thousand acres, and the counties through which it passes have issued their bonds to the amount of $93,000.

"This company, in the person of a representative, is now before the Senate urging the ratification of a treaty known as the Osage treaty, which enables this company to buy eight million acres of land at nineteen cents per acre, the payment having fifteen years to run. These lands have been variously estimated by good judges, who are all acquainted with the tract, as worth from eight to twelve million dollars.

"The whole affair has been from its inception a gigantic plundering scheme, and Senators have been in it, are in it still, and it is said that one has declared that some time when the Senate was tired and most had gone to dinner he would get it through.

"The treaty for these lands was negotiated by a commission sent out from this city. It is understood that the treaty was drawn here in advance. The approval of the Indians was secured by threats. In the speech made to the Indians on the subject by Commissioner Taylor, on the 23d of June last, he threatened the Indians with the displeasure of the Government and a withdrawal of provisions if they did not agree to the treaty. Colonel Murphy, Indian superintendent, and one of the commission, promised to make peace between the Osages and their enemies on the plains if they would sign, but if not nothing should be done for them.

"Colonel Boone, another commissioner, told them they could choose between the treaty and fighting the plain Indians.

"As already stated, this treaty thus secured is pending before the Senate of the United States; and although its attention has been repeatedly called to its character it has been rejected.

"The Cherokee Neutral Land Job.—This is, in its main features, a Republican venture. Mr. Secretary HARLAN was the principal official actor. The treaty regarding these lands provided that he might sell them in a body at not less than one dollar per acre, and for cash. He sold to a company called the Connecticut Emigrant Company, which was, in reality, an Iowa company, in which his friends, at least, were largely interested. Instead of selling for cash, he, in violation of law, sold the tract of eight hundred thousand acres on time, requiring only $25,000 as a first payment. The sale was disputed, and the Attorney General decided that the whole affair was illegal. Here it rested till a supplemental treaty could be worked through the Senate authorizing a sale on time. The lands were then sold by Secretary Browning, without advertising, to James E. Joy, a very prominent western railroad man here, acting for the Kansas and Neosho Valley Company, for one dollar per acre, he agreeing with the Connecticut company to pay back the $25,000 they had deposited in the Treasury on their bogus purchase. So far as those in official position are concerned the chief responsibility for this transaction rests directly upon Senator HARLAN. Leaving entirely out of view the Iowa feature of the so-called Connecticut company and the circles of his friends who were enriched, the mildest aspect which can be put upon it is that the Attorney General decided the operation to be outside the bounds of the law. Even the final sale to Joy by Secretary Browning was without advertising, as appears from a report he sent to Congress, where he is obliged to admit that he only 'authorized an unofficial statement to be made in newspapers' that proposals would be received till a certain day. At that time Joy was the only one offering to buy, and so he got the lands—as was intended. Senator POMEROY was sufficiently interested in this same Kansas and Neosho Valley road to introduce and attempt to pass a bill granting twelve thousand eight hundred acres of land per mile for about one hundred miles.

"Grand Totals of Land Grants.—Congress up to March last had granted in all to various western and southern States over fifty-seven million acres lands for railroad purposes. It has given besides over seventeen million acres to canals and similar improvements. The Pacific railroad and branches have received one hundred and twenty-four million acres, and if to this is added the even-numbered sections along those routes, which the Secretary of the Interior decided to be closed for settlement, it will appear that nearly one third of the entire public domain has been made over to the control of railroad companies.

"The quantity of lands conveyed by these grants," says the Commissioner of the General Land Office, "is of empire extent, exceeding in the aggregate, by more than five million acres, the entire areas of the six New England States, added to the surface of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia." He says the grants to the Pacific railway line alone "are within about a fourth of being twice the united area of England, Scotland, Wales, Ireland, Guernsey, Jersey, the Isle of Man, and the islands of the British seas, and within less than a tenth of being equal to the French empire proper."

"In 1860 and 1861 the Government sold two hundred and thirty-four thousand acres of Delaware lands to the Leavenworth, Pawnee, and Western road. In 1866 it sold ninety-two thousand acres of Delaware lands to the Missouri River road, and in 1859 it disposed of two hundred and seventy-eight thousand two hundred acres to only thirty-six purchasers. Among them were the following: Hon. Hugh McCulloch, seven thousand and fourteen acres; Perry Fuller and McDonald, thirty-nine thousand and fifty-eight acres; John McManus, one hundred and forty-two thousand nine hundred and fifteen acres; Robert S. Stevens, fifty-one thousand six hundred and eighty-nine acres, and so on.

"In 1865 Senator POMEROY, being then president and one of the principal owners of the Atchison and Pike's Peak Railroad Company, a treaty was carried through the Senate by which this road purchased one hundred and twenty-three thousand eight hundred and thirty-two acres of as rich lands as there are in Kansas.

"The above facts and figures were brought to the notice of the House by Mr. JULIAN, chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands, in March last, and Mr. CLARK, of Kansas, has given direct testimony upon most of the points involved in the attempted Osage and the completed Cherokee swindle.

"These things are in the past. But hundreds of similar schemes, quite as extensive, are now before Congress, and the lobby engaged in pushing them is larger and more influential than ever before."

Mr. HARLAN. Now I ask the Secretary to favor me by reading the editorial on the inside of the same paper referring to this article—that part of it which I have marked.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

"The whole business of Pacific railway legislation hath an unpleasant savor. Read the remarkable letter of General Boynton, which we print in another column. General Boynton is a well known citizen, and responsible for these grave charges. If history is true, then Congress has been recklessly voting away empires of the richest lands on the earth to greedy speculators, and the wise and necessary enterprise of a railway to the Pacific has been made to cover the most shameful legislation that ever disgraced Congress. Much scandal has surrounded the Halls of Washington. We have seen members of the Legislature publicly avowing that $500,000 had been spent by one company to secure the passage of a certain bill. Certainly men do not spend $500,000 without corresponding results. We are for Pacific railroads at all times, but we beg representatives in doing business for the nation to show the same prudence and honesty that would characterize them in doing business with each other."

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. President, I have for the first time in my life on the floor of the Senate called attention to a newspaper editorial paragraph and a letter of a newspaper correspondent, not so much on account of the allusions made to me personally as for public reasons; and in any remarks that I may now submit I do not wish to be understood as reflecting on the high-minded and honorable portion of the gentlemen in this country who conduct the public press, nor on the respectable portion of those who may correspond for influential journals. All professions have those whose talents and accomplishments ornament their calling. They also have those of mediocrity who give the profession respectability. Every profession has also another class who may perhaps be properly styled the lazzaroni, who live on the crumbs. They may be fitly described as the scavengers of the profession, who go around and do the work which the respectable and illustrious portion would not stoop to dabble with. To which class of these professional men connected with the newspaper press General Boynton belongs I leave for his associates to decide; I do not know him well enough to give him his proper place. All I have to say in relation to him is, that this article exhibits a degree of carelessness or of ignorance, if nothing worse, that, as it seems to me, would unfit a gentleman to be a correspondent for any respectable journal.

I shall not delay the Senate long enough to refer to all that is contained in the article. I will take notice only of that portion of it which has reference to my official conduct and to the State which I represent in part on this floor. And I think I ought to say here that I do not feel very much annoyed personally on account of the publication of this article or of similar articles that I have occasionally noticed in the public press, not that I am careless in relation to what men may think of me, for I admit that I would prefer to enjoy the good opinion of mankind than the reverse. I suppose that a love of approbation has been implanted in the mind of every man by the Deity himself, and for a wise purpose. It is one of the props of virtue. Hence no one ought to permit it to be ruthlessly knocked away from his own support or that of his associates in a deliberative assembly. We ought not to permit men to make no distinction between those who are virtuous and intend to do right and those who are known to be vicious.

Mr. President, I am now forty-eight years of age. During the first eighteen years of my life I was under the guardianship and control of my father and mother. Since that time, a period of about thirty years, I have been paddling my own canoe as best I could. I do not think that anything that General Boynton could write, or anything that the Cincinnati Gazette could publish, or anything that the New York Tribune could reiterate and seem to indorse, could seriously and permanently affect my reputation among my countrymen. I have always believed that even mediocratic talent, coupled with an honest purpose to do right, would triumph over slanders, however powerfully they may be supported. Time usually cures all of these things. If, in fact, my reputation could now be seriously and permanently affected by such influences, however potential, I would consider my life a failure.

The first paragraph in this article in which my name occurs is headed "The Burlington and Missouri River Extension;" that is, the Missouri and Burlington river branch of the Pacific railroad, in which the writer says, and the New York Tribune by implication seems to indorse it, that I, by an improper order as Secretary of the Interior, attempted (using plain language) to put into my own pocket and the pocket of my honorable friend from Kansas, [Mr. POMEROY,] and also the pockets of our personal friends, a district of country large enough to make a respectable State, but was prevented from doing so by the remonstrances of the Legislature of Kansas and the Kansas delegation in the other branch of Congress, which I suppose means my other honorable friend, [Mr. CLARKE,] as that State now has but one Representative on that floor. Now, what are the facts in that case? Congress did pass a law authorizing the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Company to extend its line of road through the eastern part of Nebraska, to connect with the Omaha branch at or east of the one hundredth meridian, and to enable it to do so made a grant of ten sections of land on each side of the proposed line of that extension. The law also provided that when the company should file its map indicating the general route of the road it should be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to withdraw the public lands from market in order that that quantity of land might be severed from the rest of the public domain for their benefit. Some time in the year 1865 this map of the general route was filed, and an order was issued from the Department of the Interior to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, a copy of which I have in my hand and will ask the Secretary to read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,

WASHINGTON, January 30, 1866.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of October 7, 1865, with the inclosures therein referred to, relative to the lands granted by law to the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Company, and in reply, for the present, think it proper to direct that you take the necessary steps for the withdrawal of the odd-numbered sections of land situated north of the grant to the Atchison branch of the Union Pacific railroad and south of the Omaha branch of said Union Pacific railroad lying within the State of Kansas and the Territory of Nebraska.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES HARLAN, Secretary.

Hon. J. M. EDMUNDS,
Commissioner General Land Office.

Mr. HARLAN. It will be seen, Mr. President, by this that it was merely a preliminary order issued in pursuance of the provisions of the statute on the filing of a map of the general route of the road, and was intended to be superseded by a specific order limiting the amount of lands withdrawn from market to the exact quantity granted just so soon as the specific location of the line of the road should be made. The persons representing this company were notified that although the lands were under this order withdrawn from public sale—not "all the lands," as stated in the article, but one half the lands; that is, the odd-numbered sections within a reasonable distance—they would not be withheld from settlement and occupancy by homestead and preemption settlers until the company had laid down the track of the road on the earth's surface, and that so soon as they did this a specific withdrawal would be made. When that map was received the additional order was made, a copy of which I have in my hand, and ask the Secretary to read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 8, 1866.

SIR: I inclose herewith map of definite location of Burlington and Missouri River railroad extension from Kearny City to the one hundredth meridian of longitude west from Greenwich, authorized to be constructed under the act of July 2, 1864.

You will ascertain the approximate length of said road and withhold from market ten alternate sections, or equivalents in parts of sections designated by odd numbers, not sold, reserved, or otherwise disposed of by the United States, and to which a preemption or homestead claim may not have attached at the time the line of said road may have been definitely fixed, for each mile of the whole length of said road, situated as near to the line thereof as practicable, on the south side thereof, and ten sections as aforesaid to be situate as aforesaid for each mile of said road on the north side thereof, so as to include a quantity equal to twenty sections per mile for each mile of said road; after which you will restore to market any lands withdrawn in pursuance of any former order emanating from this Department not necessary to carry into effect this order.

After making a copy of said map you will return the original to this Department.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES HARLAN, Secretary.

Hon. J. M. EDMUNDS,
Commissioner General Land Office.

Mr. HARLAN. It will be seen from this, Mr. President, that the exact provision of the law was followed; that when the map indicating the general location of the road was made a temporary order for the withdrawal of lands generally within a reasonable distance of the line of the road was made, and when the specific location of the road was marked out on the earth's surface a specific order followed for the selection of the exact quantity of land that the company would be entitled to under the grant. In relation to the insinuation that this order was made for the purpose of benefiting myself and the honorable Senator from Kansas, and our personal friends, I have only to say this: I have not now, I had not then, I never had, and I never expect to have, one particle of interest in the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Company's road or its extension; nor do I know who the persons are who are pecuniarily interested in that organization, with the exception of two, of whom my honorable colleague [Mr. GRIMES] is one, as he happened to inform me incidentally. When a bill was pending in this body, having for its object the facilitation of the construction of the road, he informed me that he could not either vote for the bill or do anything to promote its passage in this body, for the reason that he held some of the stock; and, at that time, or on some other occasion, he introduced me to another gentleman, I think of the name of Forbes, residing, if I remember correctly, in Boston. I saw him the one time in company with my colleague, never saw him before or since, and never held any other correspondence with him.

The next paragraph that refers to me personally is headed "The Cherokee Neutral Land Job." I did explain that once in the Senate, and I regret very much to allude to it again; but my brother Senators will bear in mind that that explanation was made in executive session, and I prefer that the same explanation may go to the country. The facts in that case are briefly as follows: I think in the year 1835 the United States made a treaty with the Cherokee Indians, and in payment of a claim which this nation of Indians held against the United States the Government deeded to that tribe of Indians in fee simple a tract of land lying in the southeast corner of the State of Kansas, about fifty miles in length and twenty-five miles in breadth. This was not sold and conveyed to these Indians for a home reservation; they never occupied it; they never lived on it; it was an outlying possession. They lived a long distance south of it, in what is called the Indian territory. A few years ago Congress passed a law directing the Secretary of the Interior, as rapidly as practicable, to make treaties with the Indian tribes in the State of Kansas, with the view of extinguishing their titles located in that State and of removing the Indians to the Indian territory, and throwing open the lands thus acquired to occupancy by the white people. In the year 1865 or 1866 a treaty was negotiated with the Cherokee Indians providing for the sale of these lands—not the extinguishment of an easement, the right to occupy and possess, the kind of tenure by which almost all other Indian tribes hold their lands, but for the sale of the fee of the land. The treaty provided that it should be sold to two classes of persons. The first class was the white people then living on the reservation, so called; not that those white men had any right to go on to this tract of land any more than they would have had to go on to a tract of land owned by you, Mr. President, and held by a title in fee simple. They were naked trespassers; nevertheless the treaty provided that they should have the prior right to buy their homes at the appraised value of the land separate from the value of their improvements. There were about twelve hundred of these claimants, each having the right under the treaty to purchase one hundred and sixty acres, making in the aggregate nearly two hundred thousand acres. The residue, the treaty directed, should be sold to the highest bidder, but not for less on an average than $1 25 an acre; or it might be sold in a body "for cash to a responsible party or parties" for a price not less than one dollar an acre.

Exercising this discretion thus conferred, I sold this part of these lands in gross for "cash," at one dollar an acre, this being the highest price offered, and in my opinion their full value.

The Attorney General did afterward write an official letter, at the request of my successor, advancing the opinion that the treaty required the whole of the price to be paid in hand at the time of the sale. In relation to this opinion I have but a word to say. The treaty said, as I have quoted, that the land should be sold for cash to a responsible party or parties for not less than one dollar an acre. The Attorney General did hold that that meant cash in hand. Having been privy to the negotiation of the treaty, I knew that it did not mean any such thing as understood by both of the contracting parties, as understood by the Indians themselves and by the Department. And these Indians are not savages. They are civilized people. Their chief at that time was John Ross, a man who, measured by his talents, would not have disgraced a seat in this body, or in any other deliberative assembly. Their leading men are men of marked ability, of fine culture, who understand their rights as fully at least as the average of white men. They desired the term "cash" to be put into the treaty, not to prevent a time sale, but to prevent a sale of the land for certified Indian indebtedness. There was outstanding a large amount of Indian scrip, so called, in the nature of a county order, which will be understood by my brother Senators who hail from western States. To prevent the purchase of this land by the use of depreciated Indian scrip or evidences of indebtedness of the tribe they desired to have it stipulated that the land should be sold only for cash; and that, you will perceive, is in harmony with the added phrase, "to a responsible party or parties." Why examine into the responsibility of the purchaser if he paid down in lawful money for the thing sold? Whether the Attorney General was right in his construction or not is not material to my purpose here to-day. He was wrong as to the understanding of both contracting parties, the officer who represented the Government of the United States and the delegates who represented the Cherokee nation of Indians. The contract was made in strict pursuance of the understanding of the treaty had by both contracting parties at the time the treaty was negotiated.

But it is said, or intimated, that these lands were worth vastly more than the amount they were sold for. There could be no other cause of complaint. The treaty provided for the sale, and if there was a technical legal error committed by the organ of the Government in making a contract that fact alone would not be evidence of either error of judgment as to the value of the land or of moral turpitude. The question is not as to the legal construction of the treaty, but as to the honest disposition made of the property which was its subject. The inference suggested by these newspaper critics is that the lands were worth vastly more, and that the Secretary did or ought to have known it. Now, I happen to know personally that they were not. I adopted the means of knowing that the refuse lands, after taking out the lands selected by the settlers, were not worth more. Here were eight hundred thousand acres of land in Kansas, of which two hundred thousand acres were selected by the settlers themselves, these two hundred thousand acres of land embracing every stick of standing timber on the whole tract, and every visible outcropping of rock or coal, and every mill-site or desirable valley. The residue of the land could not be in that country, at that time, worth more than one dollar an acre, taken in the aggregate. I know this because there was land at the time being offered for sale in the immediate vicinity of this tract at eighty cents an acre. I knew it, moreover, because college scrip was then selling at from sixty to eighty cents an acre, subject to location in detail on what Thomas H. Benton used to call "the ears and eyes and heart of the public domain." And when a man could buy scrip and with it purchase the best of the land picked out in detail for that price, I knew that the refuse of a tract of land in Kansas could not be worth more than a dollar an acre in the aggregate.

But with the charge against me on that subject is coupled one against my successor in the Department of the Interior, Mr. Browning. It is not my province to defend him. He needs no defense, I apprehend, as far at least as this transaction is concerned. That is my judgment. Deeming the contract not binding, he advertised for a bidder for these lands, as he says, for a number of months in the leading journals of the country, and he obtained not one bid at a greater price and only one bid at a dollar an acre, and he contracted the land to that bidder. He, however, had additional evidence on this subject. He had sent out appraisers under the provisions of the treaty, he appointing one and the Indian tribe appointing another. The Indians appointed Colonel Philips, formerly, I believe, a writer for the New York Tribune, and for a long time during the recent war in command of the military district including the Indian territory. The Indians knowing him personally, and confiding in him, selected him as their representative to sit in judgment on the value of this land. The Secretary of the Interior appointed another, whose name I have never known. These two gentlemen went to the territory and examined the land in detail, section by section, and reported the adjudged value of each tract. The average value placed on it by these commissioners under oath was "\$1 28 $\frac{3}{4}$ per acre." And Secretary Browning says, in an official report made to Congress, that he deemed it for the interests of the Indians to sell the whole in one sale for a dollar an acre rather than to sell it in detail—in dribbles—for a few cents more per acre.

He thought it would be worth more to them in the end to be sold in a body for a sum of money certain than to permit it to be eaten up by the expenses which must necessarily accrue from a sale in detail. But although this land was sold to Joy according to Mr. Browning's idea of the meaning of the treaty "for cash" in hand, his sale proved to be merely theoretically "cash in hand." Not one dollar was in fact paid down. The matter ran along for more than a year without a dollar of money being paid; and the Indians expecting the interest at least, but receiving neither interest nor principal and being in need of funds, sent their delegates to Washington to attempt to arrange it. Learning the condition of this business, and being satisfied with the first sale made by me—preferring it to the second sale made by my successor—they requested the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to take such steps as might be necessary to ratify it. In order to carry their wishes into effect, a supplemental treaty was made, ratifying the first sale. That treaty was sent to the President by the Secretary of the Interior, and after receiving his approval, was submitted to the Senate and ratified by a nearly unanimous vote. If I remember correctly there were but three votes in the negative. Thus the sale made by me, denounced in such unmeasured terms, was ultimately approved by the Indians, by the new Commissioner of Indian Affairs, by my successor, Mr. Browning, by the President, and by the United States Senate. I need only add on this point what I said in relation to the extension of the Burlington and Missouri River railroad grant, that I had not at the time, have not now, never had and never expect to have, one cent's worth of interest in the subject-matter of the treaty.

The next and only other paragraph to which I shall call attention is the one referring to the Sioux City branch of the Union Pacific railroad, although I never had any personal connection with this transaction.

This writer charges that the company organized to construct the Sioux City branch of the Pacific railroad have violated the plain provisions of the law. He says that the law provided that a road should be built from Sioux City directly across Nebraska, in a southwestern direction, to some point on the Union Pacific railroad in the Valley of the Platte, which point of proposed junction, he says, is ninety-six miles from Sioux City; that instead of building on this line they made a detour and went down the valley of the Missouri river in Iowa for some sixty-eight miles, and then diverged across the river and connected with the Omaha branch of the Pacific railroad at Fremont, thirty miles from the borders of Iowa, making in the aggregate, if the figures are stated correctly, ninety-eight miles. Now, notice the absurdity of this gigantic swindle that this gentleman thinks he has discovered, which has been thrown broadcast all over the country by the Cincinnati Gazette and copied with an implied indorsement by the New York Tribune and sent out to its two or three hundred thousand readers. The direct line, the writer says, on which the road ought to have been built was ninety-six miles long, and they made a detour requiring the construction of a road ninety-eight miles long—two miles longer than, as he thinks, the law contemplated. This must have involved a terrible swindle!

I have nothing to say as to the propriety of the location of that branch of the road. I am of the impression that it would have been better for my State, at least the northern end of my State, and for the people of Minnesota and the northern part of Wisconsin if the road had been built diagonally across Nebraska, provided an available railroad line could have been secured. I think it would have been better for our part of the country had that been done; but the question is a question of swindling the Government of the United States.

Now, what are the facts? The law, a copy of which I have in my hand, provides that this company may build a railroad from Sioux City across Nebraska so as to connect with the Union Pacific railroad at or east of the one hundredth meridian. If any one will take the trouble to look at a land office map, a sectionized map, he will perceive that the one hundredth meridian is thirty-four or thirty-five ranges, to use the language of the land office, west of Sioux City. The ranges are about six miles apart. Sioux City is also about sixteen townships north of the point on the one hundredth meridian where the Union Pacific railroad crosses it; so that the road might have been built in conformity with the provisions of the act so as to become the hypotenuse of this triangle, one side of which would be a little over two hundred miles long, and the other side a little less than one hundred miles. Any boy with his pencil can calculate how long it must have been, if constructed on this line—at least two hundred and twenty-four or two hundred and twenty-five miles—and estimating the necessary curvatures in order to secure an eligible track over a rough country it would probably have been two hundred and fifty miles in length.

If this company were really prompted by a desire to swindle the Government by securing subsidies in bonds and land, and not by a desire to secure the public interests, why, pray, did they not adopt the longer route, which would have given a direct connection with several railroad lines across Nebraska, Iowa, and Wisconsin, and with the Union Pacific railroad trunk line? They would thereby have secured just $4,000,000 of bonds and one million six hundred thousand acres of land. By adopting the shorter line, but about one hundred miles in length, they received but $1,600,000 in bonds and nominally six hundred and forty thousand acres of land. For it will be observed that the grant of land to this company is five sections of land on each side of this line, and not ten, as alleged by this writer, giving nominally six thousand four hundred acres to the mile, and on one hundred miles six hundred and forty thousand acres, and not one million two hundred and eighty thousand acres, as he states. I ought to add that this short line runs a part of the way down the valley of the Missouri river through the settled parts of Iowa. And the greater part of the valley of the stream had previously been conveyed to the State of Iowa under the swamp-land grant. Two other and prior railroad grants lie directly across the track of this branch road, with the right to take the lands in one case for fifteen, and in the other, I believe, for twenty miles on each side, thus absorbing all the land for the whole length of that part of this road lying in the State of Iowa; so it is not probable that on this short line they will be able to secure lands to the amount of even one hundred thousand acres.

But, nevertheless, the route being more eligible, they adopted a short line, on which they receive but very little land and only $1,600,000 in bonds, when if they had been prompted by this greed of gain, with a desire to secure a large amount of subsidy, and not by their opinions of utility, and had built the road directly across Nebraska to the one hundredth meridian, which they had the right to do under the law, they would have received $4,000,000 in subsidy bonds, and one million six hundred thousand acres of land.

Mr. President, I shall not follow this article in detail. I have said enough to show that it is a tissue of falsehoods, interspersed with some disconnected truths, from beginning to end.

Now, Mr. President, I conclude with a suggestion of the motives which may have prompted the introduction of this extraordinary paper and its publication in journals of the character of the Cincinnati Gazette and the New York Tribune.

This could not have been prompted by malice toward me personally. No one of these gentlemen has ever had cause of grief on my account. I have never laid a straw in the pathway of any one of them. I have never treated them except, in my humble way, with the utmost kindness. They could not, therefore, have been prompted by personal grievances growing out of anything I have ever said or done, and yet they must have had a motive. And I must be pardoned for doubting that they were prompted solely by a desire to correct an existing evil and to promote the public welfare; for gentlemen impelled by such high and noble purposes are usually careful to know first that wrongs really exist before opening their batteries; they do not usually fire at random and in the dark; they generally are careful about the facts. But in this case, if they had taken the trouble to open the statute-books and to look at the public records, they could not have failed to know that their allegations were in the main untruthful and consequently slanderous. I am, therefore, compelled to conclude that they may have been impelled by the one or the other of two following motives: there are people hanging around Washington writing for newspapers, styling themselves correspondents, and occupying seats in that gallery by the courtesy of the Senate, who, when they are unable to hire themselves to advocate measures involving appropriations from the public Treasury, endeavor to teach the parties in interest their importance by denunciation and abuse. If they cannot be hired on the one side they endeavor to sell to the other. They make the effort to levy blackmail on all the approaches to the Treasury. Citizens of the United States coming here on public business, however meritorious their claims may be, are given to understand by these lazzaroni of the American press that nothing can be done until they receive their douceur; that they must have their levies paid before they will permit anything to go through either branch of Congress, and too frequently succeed in deluding those who are not conversant with the personal integrity of the members of this and the other branch of Congress to believe in the existence of their power, and I fear sometimes succeed in collecting their illegal and demoralizing fees.

Those who, being better informed, refuse to pay these unrighteous demands are compelled to suffer defamation. For example, railroad companies refuse to hire this class of correspondents. They must be brought to terms. Their enterprises must be denounced, the character of the companies must be assailed, the public indignation must be aroused, and the known friends of this class of public improvements, in either branch of Congress, must be afflicted with their calumny, not out of feelings of personal malice, but to weaken their influence; because they have votes and voices that may be used in support of such public measures. I, however humble, must be made the target for these slanders because I am a declared friend of a judicious use of public lands, and, where necessary, the public credit, to stimulate this class of public improvements and to secure the more rapid development of that part of our great country from which I hail. In this case the motive prompting this slander is probably only to weaken my influence both here in this Chamber and before my countrymen. And yet there may be a deeper reason, an ulterior purpose, prompting denunciation of such measures and such Senators and members. It has been thought by some that the construction of the Union Pacific railroad across the continent will open up a channel of trade that will change the current of the commerce of the world; that instead of going round the capes of South America and Africa the trade of Europe and Asia will be carried on directly across the Atlantic and Pacific, and by railroad across the American continent. If this fond anticipation should be realized—and I am inclined to think it will be to a very large extent—then the monopoly of the carrying trade across the continent on a single railroad line would be one of such gigantic proportions as to be without parallel in the world's history. There may be those connected with this railroad enterprise who do not desire the construction of a rival line. If the eastern division of the Union Pacific railroad, so called, the Kansas branch, should ultimately be extended across Kansas, New Mexico, and Arizona to the Pacific, and another road from the western point of Lake Superior across the State of Minnesota and the undeveloped Territories of Dakota, Montana, Idaho, and Washington, to the Pacific ocean, there would be two parallel and rival lines to the Union Pacific railroad. I was a friend of the Union Pacific railroad, and did what I could to secure the passage of the bills which I thought would be efficient in stimulating its rapid construction. But I do not wish that it shall remain forever the only line of transit across this continent.

Sir, I am in favor of the construction of parallel roads just so rapidly as the financial condition of this country will permit. I desire this not on my own account individually. I desire it as a representative in part of one of the States of the Union, and as a constitutional representative of the whole country. I am not willing that one company shall have the right, without a rival, without fair competition, to tax the commerce of this nation, and possibly a large part of the commerce of the world. It may be that some members of that company, having the sagacity to perceive the vast importance of such a monopoly, may have the disposition to take the necessary steps to secure it. This possibility is not conclusively negated by the fact that this company is sometimes also made the subject of assault, for its completion at an early day is now assured. Here you have motives sufficient to account for these newspaper harangues. If owners of these great journals do not entertain such motives, as in fact I think they do not, they should see to it that they are not made the blind instruments of such a work.

I feel now as if I ought to ask the pardon of the Senate for saying what I have said. I have said it, as I remarked in the outset, not so much on my own account, although I am not careless of my personal reputation, as from a sense of public duty. It is the duty of the Senate, as it seems to me, to protect its own character and to expose these mercenary assaults on the integrity of its members.

EVIDENCE IN CONTESTED ELECTIONS.

Mr. POMEROY. I desire to submit but a few remarks on this subject. I shall not occupy the time of the Senate more than ten minutes.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask the Senator from Kansas to yield to me for one moment. There is on the table a very short bill from the House of Representatives which concerns the privileges of the House, enabling some testimony to be taken in contested-election cases, or rather supplying an officer to take testimony. Time is important. I think it will lead to no debate, and if it does not, I ask the Senate to allow it to be taken up and put on its passage.

Mr. POMEROY. If the Senate will do that by unanimous consent I will not object.

Mr. CONKLING. I think there will be no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill indicated by the Senator from New York will be taken up.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1558) to amend an act entitled "An act to prescribe the mode of obtaining evidence in case of contested elections," approved February 19, 1851. It proposes to authorize the register in bankruptcy resident in any congressional district the right to represent which is contested to take the testimony and to perform any of the other acts which a judge of any court of the United States is authorized to do by the third section of an act entitled "An act to prescribe the mode of obtaining evidence in cases of contested elections," approved February 19, 1851.

The Committee on the Judiciary reported the bill with an amendment, in line three to strike out the words "the register in bankruptcy," and to insert "any commissioner appointed or hereafter to be appointed by any circuit court of the United States, with authority to take bail, affidavits, or depositions in causes pending in the courts of the United States."

Mr. CONKLING. There was some difference of opinion in the committee as to the propriety of authorizing registers in bankruptcy to take this testimony, and therefore this amendment was reported, which was not satisfactory to the whole committee; and now the entire committee deem it wise to substitute in lieu of these officers notaries public. That will create no additional expense, and there are enough of them. Therefore, I ask that the amendment of the committee be non-concurred in, and then I shall move to insert "notaries public" in lieu of "registers in bankruptcy." That is satisfactory to the whole committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONKLING. I now move to strike out the words "the register in bankruptcy" and to insert "notaries public."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. By permission of the Senator from Kansas I desire to make a report to go on the Calendar.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not wish to interrupt anything that can be done by unanimous consent. I merely desire to submit some remarks, occupying perhaps five or ten minutes; but if the Senate desire to do anything by unanimous consent I am not going to stop that.

Mr. SHERMAN, (to Mr. POMEROY.) You had better go on and finish your remarks.

Mr. GRIMES. Senators can keep their morning business for five minutes until the Senator from Kansas gets through.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It will not spoil in five minutes.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I desire to introduce a couple of bills.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a report to make, and I insist on proceeding in order.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Kansas has proposed to give way, and we may as well get these bills out of our hands.

Mr. POMEROY. If Senators desire by unanimous consent to have bills and resolutions introduced at this time I am not going to interpose any objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a report which I desire to make, but I think the Senator had better go on and conclude his remarks.

Mr. POMEROY. Then let the Senator object.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do object. Let things come up in their order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas will proceed.

Mr. POMEROY. As the Senator from Ohio objects to the further introduction of morning business at this time, I will proceed with the few words that I have to say. The matter that has been before the Senate this morning would not have attracted my attention at all except as it has attracted the attention of the Senate. But some allusions having been made to me, I desire to say, as briefly as possible, that the communication that has been read from General Boynton, and indorsed apparently by the New York Tribune, so far as it relates to railroads in my own State, does not set forth the material facts correctly. There are some immaterial facts stated correctly; but it is almost entirely incorrect in its material facts. Without going, as my friend from Iowa did, into details in reference to every road, I will only refer to the one to which he referred. General Boynton says that a road there of one hundred miles in length had a subsidy of twelve thousand eight hundred acres of land to the mile. The fact is, that although that was the letter of the law, and the one hundred miles were built, yet settlers having located upon the lands the company did not get on many miles an acre; and if you will go to the Interior Department you will find that not one acre of land has as yet been given to that company, although they have built the road. The same is true with regard to most of the grants in that portion of the State where the settlers are. Every man at all familiar with the West knows that these grants are made subject to the rights of homestead settlers and preëmptors; and, indeed, the State of Rhode Island located its agricultural college scrip in that portion of the country, and thus prevented the railroad companies from getting the lands. In this way, although it may appear that there was an immense subsidy of lands granted, if you will examine the records of the Land Office you will see that these companies, so far as they have been able to build in the settlements, have received almost no public lands.

There is an allusion to myself in this communication as being interested in all these roads. Now, I desire to state very frankly that before I was a member of the Senate, and while a private citizen of my State, when these companies were incorporated by our Legislature, without my knowledge and without the knowledge of any one with whom I am connected, the names of different persons in the State were inserted as incorporators. And it is now here proposed to incorporate a company to build a road from Washington to New York, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] inserts in the bill the names of men all over the country who he thinks will make suitable incorporators, and they are to hold the franchise temporarily until the company is organized and goes into the hands of the men who build the road. That was my relation to nearly every road in my State. The Legislature put in my name as one of the incorporators. The people of a new State do not build their own roads; but they hold temporarily these franchises until they find men in Ohio, Pennsylvania, Boston, or New York who take hold of and build the roads; and then we assign the franchises to them. I do not know of a man in my State who ever took a dollar for the holding and transferring of one of those franchises. That is why it appears that myself and various citizens of my State seem to have a great deal to do with railroads. We were original incorporators, put in by the Legislature without our knowing it often, probably not always, and we held the thing in trust until we found men in the East who had capital and who would build the roads. Not one dollar of interest have I now or have I had for some time in any one of the roads that are either asking now or have heretofore received subsidies.

I should not have said this but for the fact that the charge is made in this letter of General Boynton; and this, by the way, is only one letter of a series. General Boynton has been writing for the last month or so to the Cincinnati Gazette about General Howard and myself, as though we were objects of especial spite by him or somebody connected with him for some reason that I do not know and do not care about. The people of my State and the settlers on the public lands in my State, so far as I know, are satisfied, and I undertake to represent my State; and if I am not satisfactory to General Boynton I cannot help it. I have not asked to make my peace in that direction. I will say, however, that the writers and reporters generally have reported me always correctly and fairly, and of the whole number—twenty or thirty—I do not know of more than one or two exceptions where I have seen any intentional deviation from what I regard as a truthful statement of the case. I have no general war to make on the reporters. They are industrious and generally truthful. There are a few exceptions, and I think the Senator from Iowa characterized those exceptions very properly, and I could say something more in that direction.

What was said in that letter with reference to the California branches of the Pacific road I will not say anything about. I understand it is not correct; but if it is not correct I do not know it.

One word more, and I will close. The general tenor of this letter is against the system of granting lands to aid in the construction of railroads. I submit it to Senators from the old States, whether they have not uniformly approved of that system. I found it here when I came to the Senate eight years ago. We have not deviated from it. The Government gives alternate sections of the public lands to certain roads within certain limits, and adds $1 25 to the price of the other sections, and thus does not give away a dollar. I know men who own large tracts of land, but I do not know one of them who would not give away every other section to any party who would build a railroad through the entire tract. The Government owns the public lands, and the Government can very well afford to give away every odd section if by so doing it can double the value of the even sections. That is the basis on which these land grants are made. I am disposed to continue that system. I am for the extension of these States of ours to the West. We will soon have a line of railroad to the Pacific, and in that way will develop the public domain and promote the sale of the public lands. The settlers are satisfied; our new States are increasing rapidly under this process, and why should any one undertake to attack it merely for the purpose of reflecting upon some individual as being chairman of the Committee on Public Lands?

I am referred to in one letter as having "fathered" twelve land-grant bills. I suppose I shall report twelve more if I am continued as chairman of the committee. If not, some man who is the chairman will do so, I have no doubt. We intend to pursue this system of developing the public domain by encouraging the building of thoroughfares through it, and that develops the State. Tell me of a railroad in Missouri, Iowa, or Kansas that has been built without a subsidy of public lands? You cannot put your finger on a road, and yet those States are growing up under this system with a magnificence and importance that has been unparalleled in the history of the country anywhere else. My own State, as the Senator from Iowa says, has but one member at present in the House of Representatives, but at the next census we shall have three, if not four. The progress of our empire is thus moving westward, and all by the development of the new States, and that development is secured by the building of railroads, and those railroads are secured by the grant of public lands. That is the question that we who live in the new States are able and willing to defend anywhere, and a wholesale attack like this falls very harmlessly upon us. I do not care anything about any personal allusions to myself. I am looking to the interest of my people at home and the nation at large, and if they are satisfied with my conduct I shall not try to make my peace with any writer of the Cincinnati Gazette or the New York Tribune.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, I trust the Senate will bear with me for a few minutes on this subject, although I am not personally mentioned in the correspondence attributed to General Boynton and copied by the New York Tribune; but as he relies for his facts upon a statement made by General WASHBURN, of the House of Representatives, during the past session of Congress, which, he says boastfully, has never been answered, and which applies to what is known as the Western Pacific Railroad Company and the grant made to it in California, I desire to say a word.

After Mr. WASHBURN had made that speech I called his attention to it, and found, as a matter of course, that he was inexact in his facts.

The statement I will first notice is the one made that the Central Pacific Railroad Company, of California, located their road from Sacramento to the eastern boundary of California. That is true; but they at the same time located it from Sacramento to the city of San Francisco, and were entitled under the law to every grant for the one part of it that they were for the other.

It is stated additionally that an empire of land has been given away to the Western Pacific Railroad Company. General WASHBURN has made a line which he says is a meandering line—I supposed it was the straightest line that engineers could make—from Sacramento to San Francisco, and then he has calculated the land at ten sections on each side of the road for each mile of that line, when it is a fact, and he can ascertain it at the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, that there was not an acre for every fifty thousand granted that fell to the company, because the lands were all occupied. The grant of lands was a mere bagatelle, amounting to nothing in point of fact to the company. But it makes a grand paragraph in a speech that an empire of land is given away to a railroad company; and on this point of granting and giving these empires of land to railroad companies it would appear as though the recipients of the land put it in their pockets and ran away to another country with it, and that the acres or sections of land were never returned to the place that they originally occupied upon the earth's surface! The truth is that not one acre in fifty of the land over the line of the Central Pacific Company is fit to be utilized for any purpose for the use of mankind.

It is true that large grants of land have been made to companies through valleys in the West, which lands have been of great value; but those lands lay there and could not previously have been given as a gift to anybody. But when a company were found with brains and enterprise and means enough to project a railroad and to build it, the land became of value, and the companies profited by it; and so do men profit everywhere by what they engage in and give their ability and industry to; and they engage in nothing but that which promises them profit.

I say this much, sir, in connection with the general subject, and particularly the grant spoken of in my own State, and now will close my few remarks by alluding to an article of this class that I saw in the New York Herald within two or three weeks past, in which I found my own name with that of five or six other honorable Senators. I saw stated in that article, and the editors stated in it that they were informed that I had no less than five jobs connected with this Congress, and one of those jobs, the only one mentioned, was what is called the Sutro tunnel job. Well, sir, the tunnel job and its projectors have always been so objectionable to me in every single point of view that Mr. Sutro does not call upon me. I have always at all times repudiated the project as wild, unprofitable, impracticable, and one, as I told him in the first instance, that I could not with the knowledge that I had of mining and with the charge that I felt I had as a representative of the country engaged in mining, recommend to my fellow-Senators to support. And yet this is the scheme named, in connection with which some inaccurate, careless writer mentions my name.

If the practice obtained in this country as it should, in my opinion, that every man who wrote an article should be required to put his name to it, there would be less of this, very much less of it. I had thought until I saw that article in the Herald, that I at least (while I concede as much to my fellow-Senators here) had been clear of all taint connected with public affairs; that no person in the guise of a friend or an interested party had ever attempted or used me in these connections. But these great reformers who write for the public press defend the public against the attacks of public men to such an extent that it is a prima facie case against the character of any man to occupy any place in public life. They make public sentiment, but it is time that public attention was called to the loose, careless, and extraordinary manner in which they attempt to make it.

Mr. President, this is all I have to say in this connection. I felt it due to my State to say part of what I have said, and due to myself to say the remainder.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1460.

Mr. GRIMES. Allow me to say a word on the subject which has been before the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is some morning business yet to be presented, and I trust the Senator from Michigan will not press his motion for a few minutes.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senate will take up the bill, and then I will give way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to say to the Senator from Michigan that I have no objection to taking up his bill, but I hope he will allow the business of the morning hour to be disposed of.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to say a word in regard to the subject that has been before the Senate this morning, and only a word.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope the Senator from Iowa will proceed. Let us finish this business while it is before us, and not have it up again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan withdraw his motion?

Mr. CHANDLER. Let the bill be taken up, and then I will give way.

Mr. GRIMES. I will not occupy as long a time as the Senator has already occupied.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well; go on. I do not withdraw the motion, but let it be laid aside informally.

Mr. GRIMES. Mr. President, from what I know of the Cincinnati Gazette and the New York Tribune, I am fearful that anything I might say in vindication of my colleague would only operate to his injury; still I feel that my duty to myself requires that I should say a word in regard to one of the charges brought against him, of which I have personal knowledge.

In regard to the Cherokee transaction I know nothing. I happened to be away from Congress when that subject was under consideration upon both of the occasions when it was here in the Senate. But I do know all about the grant to the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Company. I can say most conscientiously that the whole charge on that subject is a trumped-up affair; that there is no reason whatever for making any charge of dereliction of duty or improper conduct of any kind against my colleague in that connection. If my recollection serves me correctly the grant that extended that road through the then Territory of Nebraska originated in the House of Representatives, and when brought to the Senate was concurred in here. A few months afterward my colleague was made the Secretary of the Interior, and as such he made just such orders as the law compelled him to make. They have been read by the Clerk, and they are known to each of us. It was not possible for him to make any other order, or to do anything else and do his duty, than what he did do. If there was any error in that connection it was in Congress in passing the law. He has stated correctly that I am a stockholder in that company. At that time I think I was a stockholder to the extent of twenty-five shares, the market price of which was fifteen cents on the dollar. I did not see fit to take any part in connection with the subject while it was under consideration in the Senate, nor so far as I know did my colleague take any active measures to secure its passage, for the truth was there was no opposition to the bill; nor did I, or any agent of the company, or anybody professing to represent the company, ever approach my colleague, as the Secretary of the Interior, to induce him to make the order that he did make, withdrawing those lands from market. The law made it imperative upon him to do so whenever the plat of the survey was filed; it was filed, and he made the order withdrawing them. So much in regard to that subject.

As to the motives that may have impelled the writer of this article to make the attack I know nothing. I have simply thought it due to myself, as well as to my colleague, that I, knowing all the facts, as I do, should state here that there is no truth whatever in that charge of which I happen to know all the particulars. I doubt not that the other charges and insinuations are equally baseless.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now ask for a vote on my motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1460) regulating the duties on imported copper and copper ores.

Mr. SHERMAN. Pending that motion I desire to submit a report.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let me take up the bill first, and then I will give way.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is contrary to the order of business to interpose a motion to take up a bill in this way.

Mr. CHANDLER. Just let me take it up, and then I will give way.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now, the bill being up, it may be laid aside for the present to receive morning business.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to report from the Committee on Finance a bill (S. No. 798) in relation to the public debt and the currency. I will state that two or three members of the Committee on Finance desire to offer amendments to the second, third, and fourth sections of the bill. I move that the bill with the amendments as they are offered be printed, and that it be postponed to and made the special order of the day for Monday next at one o'clock.

The bill was read a first time by its title, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it had better not be made a special order. The Senator can have it taken up on the day named on motion, after giving notice.

Mr. SHERMAN. I made the motion that the bill be made a special order because it is desired generally. The subject is an important one.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have had a course of practice now for a year or two against having special orders. The Senator can get the bill taken up on his own motion at any time.

Mr. SHERMAN. We know very well at this period of the session what a struggle there is for the floor and how difficult it is to get up an important bill. A measure of this kind, in which every Senator takes the same interest, a great number will desire to examine beforehand, so as to be prepared to meet it in discussion. I think it is just a case where there ought to be a special order. Then, as a matter of course, every Senator will come prepared to take up the bill on Monday next. I put it off one week so that every person may then be prepared. I trust, therefore, the bill will be made a special order, as it is a special case, and that that order will now be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the bill mentioned by the Senator from Ohio be postponed until Monday next and made the special order for that day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know that I should have any objection to making it a special order if I knew what the bill was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill can be read by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Allow me to ask first whether the bill is before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has just been presented.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it before the Senate for consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir, it is not before the Senate; but there is a motion before the Senate to receive the bill and read it a first time.

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir; the bill is regularly reported from the Committee on Finance, and has had its first reading.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My question is whether it is before the Senate for action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not before the Senate for action except by common consent, having been reported this morning.

Mr. STEWART. Let the bill be read.

Mr. CONKLING. Let the title be read at least.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the whole bill be read, that we may know what it is.

The CHIEF CLERK. The title is "A bill in relation to the public debt and the currency."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the bill be read. Is it very long?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object to its reading; we have not time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to its consideration if it is not before the Senate.

Mr. POMEROY. If the bill is not before the Senate for consideration how can a motion in regard to it be entertained?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. POMEROY. Then I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, no motion in regard to the bill can be entertained.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that when the bill just reported by the Senator from Ohio comes up for consideration I shall propose certain amendments which I wish to have printed with the bill. The amendments I send to the desk; it is difficult to understand them without a reading of the bill. I should prefer to explain them at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be received, and ordered to be printed if there be no objection.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I also give notice that I shall have some amendments to offer when the bill comes up for consideration, which I will submit before that time, not having them ready this morning.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. My colleague [Mr. CATTELL] having been called away, in his name I offer an amendment to the funding bill, which has just been reported, and ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am further directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 678) to provide for the redemption in coin of United States notes and fractional currency, and requiring the national banks to redeem their notes in coin, known as the bill of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORRIS], to report it back, and to state that so much of it as has been approved by the committee is embodied in the bill already reported, and we therefore recommend that this bill lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 786) to provide for the paving of Pennsylvania avenue; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 731) to authorize the New York, Newfoundland, and London Telegraph Company to land its submarine cable upon the shores of the United States, to report it back with a recommendation that the bill do pass; and as it is a very short bill, to which I presume there will be no objection, I ask to have it passed at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent to consider the bill at this time.

Mr. GRIMES. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over, under the rule.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 489) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1490) to define the pay of officers of the Army detailed to act as military instructors, reported it with an amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SUMNER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 783) in regard to the discharge of poor convicts; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TRUMBULL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 784) to amend the judicial system of the United States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 785) concerning divorces in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 787) to incorporate the Grueble Verein of Washington, District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Tennessee, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 788) for the relief of Cowan & Dickinson, of Knoxville, Tennessee; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FOWLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 789) making an appropriation and authorizing the purchase of additional ground for the Nashville custom-house; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RICE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 790) for the benefit of Mrs. Sarah E. Brooker; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 791) to amend the existing laws in relation to the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 792) for the relief of W. J. Patton, collector of internal revenue for the second district of Arkansas; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DRAKE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 794) to regulate the construction of bridges over the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KELLOGG asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 795) to guaranty the payment of certain bonds to be issued under the authority of the governments of the States of Louisiana, Arkansas, and Mississippi, for the purpose of building and repairing the levees in said States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NORTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 796) making a grant of land to the State of Minnesota to aid in securing the navigation of the Mississippi river immediately above the falls of St. Anthony; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARLAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 797) to amend and consolidate the several acts establishing and relating to a Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 798) to punish the collection of illegal taxes on passengers; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORTON. With the permission of the Senate, as the bill is a very short one, I should like to read it. It is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That it shall be unlawful for any officer or agent of any railroad or other corporation created by authority of any State to pay to the government of said State, or to any agent or officer thereof, any sum of money as a tax upon passengers or for the transportation of passengers into said State or out of it or across its territory; and that any agent or officer of any corporation as aforesaid, paying money as aforesaid to any State government, or to any officer or agent thereof, for the purposes aforesaid, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000 nor less than $1,000.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That any person pretending to act by or under the authority of any State, who shall collect or receive from any person or persons, or from any railroad or other corporations, any sum of money on behalf of such State as a tax, price, or condition upon passengers coming into, going out of, or through such State, or for the transportation of passengers into, out of, or through such State, shall forfeit and pay to the United States the sum of $2,000, to be collected by action of debt.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the circuit and district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction for the trial and punishment of all misdemeanors and actions arising under the first and second sections of this act, and the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction in all cases arising under this act.

I move that the bill be printed and lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 799) to enable the people of Colorado to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of said State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. POMEROY. I desire to state that this bill only differs from the other bill on the subject in reference to the boundaries of Colorado. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Territories, and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

COWAN AND DICKINSON.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Tennessee. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to forward to the Senate copies of all papers on file in the War Department relative to the claim of Cowan & Dickinson, of Knoxville, Tennessee, for damages resulting from the appropriation of cotton by General A. E. Burnside for the defense of Knoxville in November, 1863.

Mr. POMEROY. The only objection I have is the form of it, that the Secretary of War is to judge whether it is compatible with the public interest or not. The Secretary of War does not run this Administration. It is the President that is to judge whether anything is compatible with the public interest.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Tennessee. I will accept the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let it lie over.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Tennessee. I hope it will not lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does any Senator object to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator proposes to strike out the words to which I take exception, and I have no objection.

Mr. CONKLING. Then it should be read as amended.

The Secretary read the resolution, as amended, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all papers on file in the War Department relative to the claim of Cowan & Dickinson, of Knoxville, Tennessee, for damages resulting from the appropriation of cotton by General A. E. Burnside for the defense of Knoxville in November, 1863.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROAD SURVEYS.

Mr. KELLOGG. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to communicate to the Senate an abstract of all the surveys that have been made for a railroad to the Pacific under the direction of the Government of the United States, together with a brief statement of the views expressed in those official reports, and such abstracts as he may deem important from any official communications of Major General A. A. Humphreys, chief of the engineer corps of the United States Army.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think that resolution ought to be referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad. It would seem to me that it would be a great labor to digest the sixteen very large volumes that have been published. I move its reference to that committee, to see how much trouble it is going to make.

The motion to refer was agreed to.

QUARANTINE LAWS.

Mr. NYE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to examine and report as to the fitness of Morris Island, South Carolina, for a quarantine and hospital station, and as to the propriety of purchasing said island for such purpose; and that he be further requested to report in regard to the feasibility and propriety of adopting a uniform system of quarantine laws applicable to foreign vessels and vessels of the United States, whether engaged in the foreign or coasting trades, and of placing the superintendence of the execution of such laws exclusively under the control of the Treasury Department.

DUTIES ON IMPORTED COPPER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. No. 1460) regulating the duties on imported copper and copper ores has been taken up and is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ANTHONY. I offer an amendment which I believe is acceptable to the Senator who has charge of the bill. It is to add:

On copper in rolled plates, called brazier's copper, sheets, rods, pipes, and copper bottoms, eyelets, and all manufactures of copper or of which copper shall be a component of chief value, not otherwise herein provided for, forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to that. I hope the amendment will be adopted. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I offer the following amendment, which is the first of a series I have prepared: in line nine, after the word "ores," to insert the words "containing sulphur."

Mr. President, I had supposed that at the close of the war our tariff had reached its maximum rate, and that our earliest duty after taking off taxes upon the various manufactures of the country would be to reduce the amount of the tariff to the extent of the compensation which we had made in the tariff for the internal taxes; but I am aware that there are several articles in any readjustment of the tariff that need perhaps some further favor in the way of increased duties, and among them is copper.

It is very difficult, and I am willing to acknowledge my repugnance to taking up a single subject of the tariff and fixing a satisfactory rate of duties upon it, either by raising or diminishing the duties, because it will be found almost impossible in practice to do anything in that way without inflicting as much injury upon some other articles as good in the direction aimed at. And this measure as the bill was reported, in my judgment, would not have been any benefit whatever to the copper interest, for the reason that while it raised the duty on raw copper it left many of the manufactured articles with less rates than the raw material.

Such for instance as copper plates, which in some degree has been amended by the Senator from Rhode Island, and such as sheathing copper, which is a cent and a half a pound less than the pig copper could be imported for. It seems to me that it is much better to raise the rates of duty upon some of those other articles if you are going to raise the duty upon pig copper, because it is perfectly evident that instead of the raw copper being imported, the unmanufactured article would be imported, as it could be imported at a less rate of duty. But for the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island many of the articles that are manufactured from copper would not be made in the country after the increase of the price upon the raw material.

But one of the chief questions involved in this bill is in relation to copper ores. It seems to me the bill will be more perfect if we amend it so that ores not containing sulphur shall be admitted at something of a less rate than the sulphurets. We are obtaining at the present time, with a strong probability of an increase, a very considerable amount of copper ores from the British provinces, and these are all sulphurets. We are obtaining a much larger amount of the carbonate ores from Cuba and from Chili. These ores that we obtain from Cuba and Chili are not essential to the manufacture of our ores containing sulphur; but the sulphurets are essential to the manufacture of the carbonates. I mean to say that they are not essential in places where fuel is plenty, where wood for the making of charcoal can be obtained; but the two worked together increases the profit of both.

Therefore I think that there should be a discrimination between the two kinds of ores, and that those ores which work together economically and profitably should be allowed to come in at something of a less rate than the sulphurets, of which we produce an abundance.

Besides, Mr. President, although my own State, perhaps, is as largely interested in these ores as any State in the Union—for we are producing a very large amount of these copper ores containing sulphur—I do think it would be wrong to strike down the importation of all carbonate ores, for at the present time they afford a very valuable trade to our shipping interest and a large amount of capital is invested in smelting the ores in quite a number of the Atlantic cities. Therefore it will be seen that I propose in the amendment I have now offered and in the second amendment to make a discrimination between the two kinds of ores.

Then, in the third amendment which I shall offer, I propose that the duty on sheathing copper in sheets of fourteen by forty-eight inches, weighing fourteen to thirty-four ounces per square foot, shall be raised to six cents per pound. It is now three and a half cents per pound, and one cent per pound in advance of copper in bars is reasonable. Those are not included in the amendments proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island. Then, on sheathing metal composed in part of copper and not any part of iron ungalvanized, in sheets of fourteen by forty-eight inches, weighing from fourteen to thirty-four ounces per square foot, five and a half cents. The duty upon these articles now, upon the one is three cents and upon the other three and a half cents. If you put the duty on raw copper at five cents a pound and leave these articles at three and three and a half cents it would be a manifest impropriety, and it would break down whatever manufactures of them we may happen to have in the country.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is covered by the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island already adopted. All manufactures of copper ore are covered by that amendment, so that what the Senator now suggests is totally unnecessary.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not so understand it.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is mistaken. All manufactures of copper ore are covered by the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Senator from Michigan is mistaken. My throat is so sore this afternoon that I am hardly able to speak at all, and therefore I shall not occupy much time. The Senator is mistaken. Sheathing metal is not embraced, nor is copper sheathing, because there is now a specific duty levied on it; and even if it is embraced, I do not like the policy of changing a specific to an ad valorem rate of duty.

My fourth amendment is in relation to brass, and will be offered only in case the amendment with regard to copper should prevail. It is manifest that brass at fifteen per cent., which is all the duty upon it at present, would be left entirely to be brought in from abroad, and there would be no copper used in the manufacture of brass, and to make that it takes at least one half of the weight in copper.

But, Mr. President, whether my amendment passes in relation to copper ores or not, the fact is that the country is now using far less of copper than formerly, and the American producers of copper will not derive any very great amount of benefit from an increase of the duty on copper. I am in favor of doing something in relation to the subject; but I do not wish it to be understood that we believe it to be possible to afford any great amount of benefit by anything that can be done here. In the first place, the country has abandoned the use of copper in its coinage. In the next place, whenever you place a duty upon the sheathing metal, which, perhaps, affords the largest amount of consumption for copper, our vessels go abroad to get copper-bottomed, and the introduction of iron vessels has superseded the use of copper for that purpose to a very large extent; and now our vessels, instead of being copper-bottomed at home, go abroad and have that done upon their first foreign voyage. Even our vessels engaged in the coasting trade, instead of getting the work done here, go to some of the British provinces for a load of plaster or of coal or of grindstones, and get that work done there. Under these circumstances it is impossible that any great increase in the consumption of copper can be had.

I understood the Senator from Michigan to be not opposed to this amendment in the first instance; and, I suppose, the only reason why he is not in favor of it now is because I propose to make a discrimination in the ores. I think it is just that there should be such a discrimination. If any Senator here feels a lively interest in the protection of these sulphurets ores, it ought to be myself, because they are located in my own State and in my own county; but I believe that the rate I have proposed would be satisfactory to those who are engaged in that business, and that it is beneficial to the country to have the business continued that we now have with Cuba and South America in the importation of their ores. I am willing to raise the duties to some extent on all ores, but not to the extent proposed in the bill. It is at least three times the amount of the present duty, and I submit that is too much and that less would be far more likely to secure permanent support hereafter.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the amendment already adopted, which, I think, covers a great deal of the ground, be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment already adopted is to insert at the end of the bill the following clause:

On copper in rolled plates, called brazier's copper, sheets, rods, pipes, and copper bottoms, eyelets, and manufactures of copper, or of which copper shall be a component of chief value, not otherwise herein provided for, forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. CHANDLER. That covers the precise case the Senator from Vermont has presented, and I supposed he was entirely satisfied with that amendment as offered by the Senator from Rhode Island. It gives all the protection he asked, and a little more.

Mr. SUMNER. I should like an explanation as to the forty-five per cent. ad valorem. What is the protection which this bill gives in other respects?

Mr. CHANDLER. Twelve and a half per cent. on copper in the ore, taking the home valuation.

Mr. SUMNER. How much is that ad valorem?

Mr. CHANDLER. Perhaps fifteen or sixteen per cent., taking the foreign valuation.

Mr. SUMNER. Fifteen per cent.?

Mr. CHANDLER. About fifteen per cent., taking the foreign valuation; but taking the whole valuation it would be about twelve and a half per cent. on the copper in the ore; that is all. The amendment gives gives forty-five per cent. upon the manufactured article, and as that covers the case stated by the Senator from Vermont, I supposed it would be entirely satisfactory to him.

Mr. SUMNER. There is a case I have in my mind, and I should like to have the attention of my friend from Vermont, to know whether the bill covers the case of sulphate of copper or blue vitriol?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It does not. Mr. SUMNER. I wish to have that come into this bill. There is a considerable quantity of it made in Massachusetts.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to have the first amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont read. Let us see what that is.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. My first and second amendments go together.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first amendment is in line nine after the word "ores" to insert "containing sulphur;" so as to make the clause read, "on all copper imported in the form of ores, containing sulphur, three cents on each pound of fine copper contained therein."

Mr. CHANDLER. That opens the whole subject whether you will levy the duty of three cents per pound upon all imported ores. The Senator from Vermont desires to make a discrimination between carbonates and sulphurets. Now, if he makes a discrimination, it should be in favor of the other side. It is the foreign carbonates which are so largely imported into the United States; there are few, if any, sulphurets imported; I believe none at all.

I hold in my hand reports from different smelting works and from scientific gentlemen, showing that sulphurets require no carbonates in their smelting, but that carbonates cannot be smelted at all without sulphurets. The product of Chili is chiefly carbonates, though there are some sulphurets, but all the sulphurets raised in Chili are used with their carbonates to produce copper, and the sulphur, a poor kind of carbonate ores, are exported from Chili to the United States to mix with our sulphurets. If we did not receive these ores from them they would be compelled to import our sulphurets to mix with their carbonates. The very class of ores, if any, that we wish to exclude is these carbonates. That is the very class that should pay the highest duty. It is a class that is not required in our smelting. It is true sulphurets require carbonates; but the carbonate of lime or the carbonate of iron or any other carbonate will answer just as well; but carbonates must have sulphurets or else they cannot be manufactured into copper. Hence, if these carbonates were excluded the Chilians would be compelled, if they could not increase their own production of sulphurets, to come to us for our sulphurets to mix with their carbonates to produce copper.

But, sir, it comes down to this point: are we asking an unreasonable protection upon the products of our mines? The Senator from Vermont told me that a few years ago, when we were reorganizing the tariff, he himself proposed a duty upon copper and copper ores, and that then we of the West declined it because we did not need it. That is true. At that time our ingot copper was bringing twenty-eight cents a pound in gold, and it cost about half as much to raise the copper then as it does now. It is now worth about twenty-three and a half or twenty-four cents in currency, and costs double the amount to raise that it did then. It is an interest in which more than fifty million dollars of capital is engaged, an interest that is absolutely being crushed by foreign competition—the competition of convict-raised ores in Chili. We ask simply a protection of twelve and a half per cent. upon the home valuation. Taking the foreign valuation and adding the difference in the price of gold the percentage would be larger, but on the home valuation it is simply twelve and a half per cent. Every other product, every other raw material is much more heavily protected. Take for example pig-iron. The protection is more than sixty per cent. On railroad, it is between forty and fifty per cent. On coal, it is more than fifty per cent. Even tin, of which we produce very little, is protected by a duty of fifteen per cent. And now we come on behalf of this vast interest and ask a reasonable protection in order that our works may go on.

Mr. WHYTE. Will the Senator from Michigan permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. WHYTE. The Senator has referred to manufactured articles. I will ask him whether there is any tariff, any duty upon iron ores imported into the United States? He has alluded to pig-iron and railroad iron, which are manufactured iron. I ask him if there is any duty whatever upon iron in the ore?

Mr. CHANDLER. Probably not. I do not know anything about that. It would not pay transportation anyhow; and I do not suppose any Senate would be so foolish as to put a duty on iron ores, though perhaps it has been done heretofore; I cannot tell. Pig-iron corresponds with regulus of copper. That is protected by nine dollars a ton, and it is worth about fourteen dollars a ton in Great Britain.

Mr. WHYTE. The Senator will allow me to state that the objection is not to the tax upon the regulus of copper or to the tax upon copper in pigs or in ingots or plates; but it is to putting a tax upon the ores which our own miners require in this country.

Mr. CHANDLER. We put a tax upon the copper taken from the ore. Now, Mr. President, copper has been called a raw material. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. FERRY] represented it as a raw material. Well, sir, two thousand feet under ground, embedded in solid rock, it is a raw material; but it costs us twenty cents a pound to mine and raise that ore to the surface and put it into ingot copper, while it costs his manufacturers of clocks not more than two or three cents a pound to put the sheets into clocks. It is a raw material in the bowels of the earth; but it costs more to raise it and put it in the form of ingot copper than it costs to manufacture it after it is in that form.

Now, sir, after you have voted liberal tariffs for the protection of all manufactures, we claim that this great interest of Michigan and of the nation should receive a reasonable protection, or protection enough to keep our works in operation. Three fourths of the mines of Lake Superior are to-day stopped because these foreign carbonates raised by convict labor, with a duty on the Chilian value of five per cent. are brought in and smelted at such a price that we cannot run our works in competition with them. The indirect taxes paid to-day by the raisers and producers of copper in this country are more than four times the amount of this five per cent. protection on the ore.

I hope that the Senate will stand by the bill as it is. It is the same bill, word for word, that this body passed two years ago after a very thorough discussion, and I ask the Senate to stand by it now and give us three cents a pound duty on copper in the ore, both carbonates and sulphurets.

As for the amendment of the Senator from Vermont imposing six cents a pound on sheathing copper of a certain kind, I have no objection to that; but we have already adopted an amendment which allows much more, and which, as I supposed, was entirely satisfactory to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I should like to hear the amendment which was offered by the Senator from Rhode Island, and which has been adopted, read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment already adopted is to add to the bill:

On copper in rolled plates, called brazier's copper, sheets, rods, pipes, and copper bottoms, eyelets, and all manufacturers of copper, or of which copper shall be a component part of chief value, not herein otherwise provided for, forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. With that amendment I have no objection to the bill. The manufacturers of copper in this country are very much interested that this bill without that amendment should not be adopted. I hold in my hand a specimen of copper manufacture, being a copper wire cloth, which costs, manufactured in England with the tariff here, when it arrives here $2 72, and it cannot be manufactured here for less than $3 42 putting down the copper in England at I think twelve cents and here at twenty-four cents. So the copper already costs the manufacturer in this country a great deal more than it does the English manufacturer; but the duty of forty-five per cent. I suppose would enable the American manufacturers to compete with the English.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, in dealing with such subjects as these I have always found that it was necessary to be just to all interests. The present duty upon copper ore is only five per cent. Therefore the specific rate of duty here of three cents a pound on ores upon all the copper contained therein is at once a very large increase, and it will inevitably have the effect to be disastrous to all who are engaged in commerce in bringing the ores here; and our shipping at the present moment throughout the country is very much depressed. I would not in helping and aiding the copper interest strike down another of equal magnitude.

It is true, as the Senator has said, that when the tariff of 1861 was put upon copper two cents a pound upon raw copper was looked upon as something entirely inconsequential to the interests of Michigan, and its representatives then said that it would not be five years before they would be able to supply the world with all the copper that was needed; and in point of fact at that time they were exporting raw copper from this country to a very considerable amount.

Now, sir, the real trouble in regard to this matter, after all, in manufacturing iron or copper or anything else, is in consequence of our inflated currency. It is impossible that we should compete with foreigners and do business successfully while we have an inflated currency.

Mr. President, when we place a duty upon the sulphurets we shall place all that is demanded on the part of the Senator from Michigan upon those ores that come in from the British provinces. I only propose that there shall be one cent a pound less upon the carbonates which are brought here and are needed in the country even for the manufacture of our own sulphurets where they have not wood. For example, on the Pacific coast, in California and in Oregon, they will protest against the idea of having a duty placed upon carbonate ores that shall be prohibitory, because on the Pacific coast they have not wood, they have not coal by which those ores can be smelted, and it is therefore profitable to them that they should be continued to be brought together. In my own State for years we sent these sulphurets to Boston and to Baltimore even; but recently they have established smelting works, so that they are going to smelt at home, and we have no interest in the matter.

But I do contend that it is necessary that we should be just in all these adjustments of the tariff to all interests that are involved; and it seems to me that my friend from Michigan ought to be content with one cent a pound less upon the carbonates. I think we shall be likely to enact a measure which will be far more stable and arouse much less hostility if we do that. I hope the Senator will consent to that.

Mr. CHANDLER. The protective duty on lead ore is a cent and a half a pound, or more than fifty per cent.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. For the simple reason that lead ores are almost pure when taken out, yielding not less than seventy-five per cent. of pure metal.

Mr. CHANDLER. Well, the duty on lead in bars is fifty per cent. All we ask for copper is three cents a pound on twenty-four cents. Is that an unreasonable protection to so large an interest? The Senator from Vermont proposes to reduce that to two cents on the carbonates. If we reduce it on the carbonates I would just as soon he should reduce it on the sulphurets at the same time. It is carbonates that we mean to reach; it is carbonates that trouble us, and not sulphurets. It is a pretense of relief to pass a bill providing three cents a pound duty, if you confine it to sulphurets.

I hope the Senate will grant this reasonable relief to this large interest, for I assure members of this body that it is the very least that will keep our mines in operation. This is a very moderate protection. While lead is protected fifty per cent. both in the ore and in bars, while coal is protected sixty per cent., while iron is protected more than fifty per cent. on an average, is it reasonable or is it just that you should throw out this great interest in which more than fifty million dollars are invested, feeding on Lake Superior alone something like twenty or thirty thousand people? I ask, is it right to leave this great interest with the small protection of two cents a pound, which would amount to only about eight per cent. on a home valuation? We are reasonable on our demands, and I hope the Senate will accede to these reasonable demands and will vote down this amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. FERRY. Mr. President, I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, and I intend at present to confine the few remarks that I make to the subject-matter of that amendment. The amendment does not particularly affect any manufacturing establishment in my State, but it is simply on account of its intrinsic justice that I advocate it; and in order to ascertain what we ought to do in reference to an amendment of this kind, it is desirable to ascertain what is the comparative amount of the interests which are here in conflict.

The Senator from Michigan informs us that the Lake Superior copper mines, for whose benefit alone this bill is offered here, represent an interest of $50,000,000, and that that interest is now so depressed that not more than three-fourths of the companies are in operation.

Now, sir, what is this Lake Superior mining interest? It is in the procuring of the native copper from its natural beds in the earth. It commenced as an interest about the year 1845 with a joint stock excitement in Lake Superior mining stocks somewhat akin to the petroleum excitement of four or five years ago. A large number of mining companies were formed, joint stock companies. I have a list of them in my hand which, I take it, will not be disputed by the Senator from Michigan, the paper being "statistics of the Lake Superior copper mines, from the commencement of operations in 1845 to January 1, 1868, including detailed statements of the operations of 1867, carefully collected and compiled by H. McKenzie, editor Portage Lake Mining Gazette, Houghton, Michigan," which I believe is the best authority for statistics of the mines of the Lake Superior region. These joint stock companies, if you add up their nominal capital, represent $50,000,000 undoubtedly.

Mr. HOWARD. They are not all joint stock companies; they are corporations.

Mr. FERRY. Be it so. These corporations, then, represent perhaps $50,000,000; but in not one of them is the capital stock paid in full, according to the report which I hold in my hand; and the capital stock is only paid in in the proportion of from one-fifth to one-twenty-fifth of its nominal amount. The list before me shows the amounts paid in; and in corporations whose shares have a par value of twenty-five dollars I find the amount paid in ranges from a dollar and a half to five dollars a share. Added to this is a large nominal value of the land; and the total amount, including this nominal value of the land originally put in as part of the paid up capital of these corporations, amounts to $16,600,000.

I have been unable to ascertain how much of this represents cash actually paid in. But, sir, the real difficulty with the Lake Superior mining companies is not the want of protection, but it is that the stockholders in those corporations, unwilling to pay in their capital into the enterprise, are endeavoring to derive that capital by bounties assessed by Congress upon the whole body of the people.

Now, sir, what interests come in conflict with the Lake Superior mining companies? We have before us, adverse to this bill, the petition of the Baltimore Copper Company, with a capital of $1,000,000; we have a petition of ship-builders of the United States; we have a petition of ship-owners of the United States; we have a petition of three California mining companies; we have the petition of Moore & Co., of the Keystone copper mine; another of the copper mines of Nevada; another of the Mineral Hill mine of Maryland; of the Cornwell ore bank of Pennsylvania; of the Bear Hill mine of Maryland, and of the Waterbury Copper and Brass Company of Connecticut—interests very diversified, embracing those engaged in the smelting of American ores by combining them with foreign ores, in the proportion of three of the American ores to one of the foreign; embracing our great ship-building interest, and also our commercial interest, represented by the petition of the shipowners. We have these other various copper mining associations who need to use these foreign carbonates for the purpose of carrying on their business successfully. And, sir, it is not a mere question whether we will benefit these corporations, who own the Lake Superior mining region and are unwilling to assess themselves to pay up their capital stock that they may have sufficient capital to continue their operations; it is not simply these that are to be considered, but whether all these other interests who come in here and protest against paying bounties to the corporations owning the mines in the Lake Superior region shall be regarded by the Senate.

I find upon the Atlantic coast in the smelting of ores four corporations: the Baltimore Copper Company, as I have said, with a capital of $1,000,000; the Bergen Point Smelting Company, with a capital of $250,000; the Revere Company, of Boston, with a capital of $500,000, and Crocker Brothers, at Taunton, Massachusetts, with a capital of $500,000. And it is substantially admitted here that the passage of this bill, levying this tax upon importations of the carbonate ores, will strike down and destroy all this great interest, and connected with this interest is also the commercial interest engaged in the importation of these ores from Chili.

The Senator from Michigan says it would be absurd and foolish to levy a tax upon iron ore, because it would not pay the importation. Is it possible that in the production of native copper from the bowels of the earth in our own country capital in sufficient amount properly invested in such an enterprise cannot compete with those who are obliged to import the bulky and expensive (in importation) article of ore from Chili and from Cuba?

Now, sir, as I said, I intend at present to confine myself entirely to the amendment properly before the Senate at this time. The Senator from Vermont has expressed a sentiment which I think ought always to actuate the Senate, and that is, that in dealing with our revenue system, whether internal or tariff, the Congress of the United States ought, above all things, to be just. Here is this large interest upon the Atlantic coast, with industry, with enterprise, with energy, with capital, embarking in the production of copper by the admixture of a small portion of foreign ores with a threefold proportion of American ores, which it is proposed absolutely to destroy in order that some additional profit may be made by the mining companies of a particular region.

The Senator from Michigan tell us that this mining interest is struck down; that three-fourths of these companies are not in employment. Why, sir, three-fourths of these companies have not been actively engaged in mining copper for fifteen years. The Senator can take the list; and if he will look over the list which I hold in my hand, the correctness of which I think he will acknowledge, he will find the fact to be so. The fever, the excitement as to the copper joint stock or corporate organizations in 1845 soon died out, but the companies were left. Pass this bill and you will double the value of the shares temporarily, and enable the speculators in Boston and New York to dispose of them at a profit.

But, sir, is it really so that this interest is struck down? Let us see. I hold in my hand, in the statistics to which I have already referred, an account of the product of the Lake Superior copper mines from 1845 to 1868; and straight on that production has been steadily increasing and is increasing still. The years 1845 to 1854 are given in the aggregate, and also 1855 to 1857, and after that the product is stated annually. Here it is:

	Tons.	Pounds.
From 1845 to 1854.....	7,612	-
From 1855 to 1857.....	11,312	-
In 1858.....	3,500	-
In 1859.....	4,200	-
In 1860.....	6,000	-
In 1861.....	7,400	-
In 1862.....	9,682	-
In 1863.....	8,548	-
In 1864.....	8,472	-
In 1865.....	10,790	1,156
In 1866.....	10,375	1,688
In 1867.....	11,735	552

The last year there was produced a larger amount than in any preceding year. I also had here, but cannot lay my hand on it at this moment, a statement of the production for each month for the year 1868 up to and including the month of July; and the production of each month was more than that of the month preceding. How am I to reconcile these statistics from the most authoritative journal in this mining region—statistics showing a steady increase in the production of copper from these mines—with the statement which is made here that they are absolutely prostrate, that thousands of laborers are not employed, and so on? The two seem to me entirely irreconcilable. If the Senate will take a list of these mining corporations and select those which have had the largest amount of their capital paid in to work on he will find that those who have assessed themselves and obtained the capital to work on have declared remunerative dividends; but the great mass of them, like the hundreds of petroleum companies of 1864 and 1865, of course, have sunk into non-existence.

The simple question arising for the consideration of the Senate upon the amendment of the Senator from Vermont is whether while you are protecting the interests of the Lake Superior mining companies you will also protect the smelting companies of the Atlantic coast from absolute destruction. The mining companies of Lake Superior, if they will assess their corporators and compel them to pay in the capital which they pledged themselves to pay when they subscribed for their stock, will have a working capital on which I have no doubt they can operate successfully. The mining companies, by the report which I hold in my hand, have been steadily increasing in their product up to the present hour—a certainly sure indication of prosperity; and they are not going to be destroyed by not giving the full length of protection which the Senator from Michigan asks. Some protection the amendment of the Senator from Vermont gives them; but the fault which is found with the amendment of the Senator from Vermont is that it does not destroy the vast interests upon the Atlantic coast, and that object the Lake Superior interest seeks to accomplish. I hope the Senate will vote for the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a table of the production of copper from 1845 down to the present hour. The Senator says that the capital of these companies has not all been paid in. That is true. These companies started mining as far back as 1845, and went on from year to year investing their whole earnings in improvements. They have not divided three per cent., since the mines were started, upon the capital actually invested in these works; but they have gone on up to the present time investing the product of the mines in improvements instead of dividing the profits. Is not that as much actual bona fide capital paid in as though they had originally taken the money out of their own pockets? But, sir, there has been in assessments, in actual cash paid in, over sixteen million dollars.

Mr. FERRY. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. FERRY. Is there not included in that $16,000,000 the valuation of the lands which were put in as part of the capital stock?

Mr. CHANDLER. No, sir. There has been more than $16,000,000 in hard money taken there and invested in operations upon these mines, and they have gone on for more than twenty years, using the earned capital to improve and develop their works, and now, forsooth, they are to be called pauper concerns because with the capital earned in twenty years they cannot make the business remunerative under the system of tariff protection adopted and carried out in the Senator's State in Connecticut, which taxes them beyond their power to work their mines.

Sir, the Senator from Connecticut does not surprise me in his opposition to this bill. It is not the first time that Michigan interests have been attacked from Connecticut. She has attacked our lumber, our salt, our copper, our iron, our wool, everything that we produce. She is in the situation that Jeff. Davis was after he had organized his confederacy and set his government in motion—he wanted to be let alone; and that is what Connecticut wants. The Senator told me the other day that he was in favor of free trade, and said that if we would take off the duty on wool he was prepared to take off the duty on manufactured goods. Well, sir, let us see where we should land, for there is where we are coming to. The day has gone by when they are to be let alone with these really protective and remunerative tariffs that exist in all the manufacturing States. If you are going to strike down these new interests rising in the West and Northwest rest assured we will not let you alone, but we will take a horizontal tariff, which will be a good protection for our copper, our iron, our lumber, our wheat, our wool, and you may fix the amount; I do not care what you make it, twenty, thirty, forty, or fifty per cent.; it will be protection to us, and then if your clocks will not run, let them stop. [Laughter.]

Now, let me show what are some of the "equal" duties we now have! If we should take off twelve cents duty on wool the Senator says he is content to take off the duties on manufactures. I find that the present duty on all flannels under thirty cents a pound is twenty-four cents a pound specific and thirty per cent. ad valorem; on all flannels over thirty and under forty cents, twenty-four cents a pound specific and thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on carpets worth $1 25 a yard seventy-five cents a yard specific; and so you may go through the whole list. I have it here, and every article produced in the State of Connecticut is protected overwhelmingly; and now where we have over fifty million dollars invested in works that save to this nation millions upon millions in gold that would to-day go out for the purchase of this article if it were not produced here, the Senator says "let us alone; we will not give you any protection; stop your mines; what do we care." Very well I say in return, "we will stop your factories, if it comes to that; the day has gone by for protecting one interest to the injury of another." Sir, you will find that the Northwest will be solid and the South will be solid; you must grant equal protection to all interests throughout the United States, or you must abandon your own protection; we will treat you as we did Jeff. Davis's government; we will not let you alone!

Mr. President, as I have shown before, there is not a single interest in all the United States that is not more liberally protected than the protection we ask upon this copper interest. You may call copper a raw material; but, as I said before, it is a raw material two thousand feet under the surface of the earth, embedded in the rock, and it costs us $400 a ton to raise that raw material and make it into ingot copper. Now, sir, will you protect your clocks, will you protect your buttons, will you protect your carpets and your flannels, and then cry to us, "Let us alone; we will slaughter your lumber; we will slaughter your salt; we will stop your iron mines; but let us alone!"

I hope, Mr. President, that this amendment of the Senator from Vermont will not be adopted, but that you will grant us this reasonable, this smaller protection than is granted to any other interest, of twelve and a half per cent. on the home valuation, or fifteen or sixteen per cent. upon the foreign valuation. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. FERRY. Mr. President, I do not know what I have said or done that should draw upon my little State of Connecticut the vengeance of the Senator from Michigan to this extent. I have said nothing about lumber or salt or wool. I have been arguing here for justice to certain great interests, not one of which has an establishment in my State; and instead of meeting my argument the gentleman turns upon me with a threat that all protection shall be taken off from all fabrics manufactured in Connecticut; that they will not let us alone; that we shall be treated as he would have treated Jeff. Davis! Well now, sir, I have just this to say about my State of Connecticut in this connection: we ask no favors of the Senator from Michigan; we have not been accustomed in that little Commonwealth to look up to the Government of the United States to help us in developing our resources and building up our enterprises. Sir, by the energy, the industry, the capital of Connecticut, invested and developed through the indomitable perseverance of its people since the very foundation of this Government, its rocky hills have been made to blossom as the rose; its every valley has been made to resound with the hum of machinery.

Sir, you may strike off from your statute-book every farthing of protection which you give to our interests, and Connecticut will go on as she has gone on in the past. You may take away from us your tariffs; you cannot take away from us the indomitable energy of our people. You may take away from us your protection as you term it; but, sir, a people whose sailors visit the remotest regions of the Arctic and the Antarctic zones, whose merchants follow the sea-birds in their flight to the lone guano islands of the Pacific to bring back home fertility to our rocky hill-sides; a people who have gone out the pioneers of civilization all over this land, whose foot-prints are seen in the church and the school-house from the Atlantic to the Pacific, are not to be put down by taking away your tariff and your protection. We ask no favors; and, sir, the people of Connecticut, as a part of the governing power of this great Republic I know will be unwilling that their representatives here shall stand silently and see this nation pledging itself to injustice by absolutely striking down and destroying the great interests of one section of the land to build up a mere local interest in a single State. It is not right, sir; and because it is not right, not because it affects my local interests, do I stand here to oppose this bill unless the amendment of the Senator from Vermont should be adopted.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, I desire to add a proviso, after the word "therein" in the tenth line of the bill. I send it to the desk to be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That if any person, corporation, company, or partnership engaged in the business of smelting copper ores shall import any foreign carbonate copper ores into the United States, and shall, on making such importation, file with the collector of the port into which such foreign copper ores were imported, a bond, with security, to be approved by the collector of said port into which said ores are imported, to use two tons of copper ore, mined in the United States, to one ton of said imported ores in the smelting of copper, such person, corporation, company, or partnership shall be entitled to a drawback upon the foreign copper ores so imported to the extent of the duty paid thereon: Provided, That said person, corporation, company, or partnership shall furnish evidence under regulations to be established by the Secretary of the Treasury, that he, it, or they have, or has used the said copper ores so imported, and also copper ores mined in the United States in its, his, or their business, in the proportion of two tons of copper ore mined in the United States to one ton of imported copper ore.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a very brief period while I state the reasons which have impelled me to ask the adoption of the proviso which has just been read by the Clerk. I will state frankly, to begin with, that I am opposed to any change in the duty upon copper at all; but if there is to be a change, I think it but right and proper that an equitable and just rule should be adopted.

By the tariff act of March 2, 1861, there is levied upon copper ores imported into the United States an ad valorem tax or duty equivalent to about three fourths of a cent per pound. A proposition was made, I believe, during the last session of Congress, to revise the whole tariff act, and the subject was in the Committee of Ways and Means of the other House, when suddenly this bill left its associates in the general bill, came into the House with velodipal speed, almost passed at its last session—indeed I believe it was on its passage at the moment when the Speaker's hammer fell and announced the adjournment of Congress. At this session in its very opening the same bill shot from the House of Representatives into the Senate like a meteor, was referred to the Committee on Finance, and reported back with favor almost before the ink had dried with which its reference had been recorded. And now, and daily almost since its report here, we have heard and seen it pressed with an ardor and warmth unsurpassed by anything I have witnessed during my short service in this Chamber.

Now, let us see, Mr. President, what this bill proposes. It proposes a change in the duties on various articles; but I shall confine myself solely to the ores, and leave to other gentlemen more familiar with the subject to discuss the other propositions contained in the bill. It proposes in regard to ores to raise the duty from three fourths of a cent a pound, or its equivalent when imposed as an ad valorem, to three cents a pound.

I would ask the Senators who have listened to the discussion of this bill what reasons have been proposed why this change should take place? I have looked and listened in vain for any argument other than that it is required and wanted by the copper miners on the southern shore of Lake Superior. I find no argument of a general character; I find no reasons large and liberal for such a policy; nothing whatever to command the support and sanction of the Senate but that the copper miners of Lake Superior desire and demand it!

Sir, I am frank to say that if the issue here was one between American laborers and foreign laborers—I care not whether they be convicts or not—if the issue here was simply for the protection of American laborers against foreign laborers, probably there would be but one side to the question in this Chamber. Or, again, if it were to benefit a class of worthy men in our country and not to the detriment of another and larger and quite as worthy class in other parts of the country, it might have some pretext for its claim to the sympathy and to the support of the Senate. But we hear a protest from the smelters and the miners throughout the country on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts against the injustice of the passage of this bill. We are called upon to act on it as a Senate legislating not for a class, not for a locality, not for two counties in a State, but legislating for the whole country and the people of the country.

We have heard the cry of distress from the shores of Lake Superior. We have heard that echoed and re-echoed in this Chamber by the distinguished Senators from the State of Michigan. We have heard of the tenantless houses and the homeless laborers. We have heard all that, and it meets with a response of sympathy in every heart. But we can go into the great city of New York and stand almost within sound of the clinking of the gold in Wall street and find two hundred thousand men, women, and children out of work, raising up their hands and asking for bread. Would to God we could legislate for them all; but we might as well pass laws to give work to the unemployed in New York and Pennsylvania and Massachusetts as to pass a bill like this, which is to benefit only a small class in a State and to damnify a larger and equally meritorious class in other States.

Now, what is the issue? The distinguished Senators from Michigan tell the Senate that they need this protection in Michigan—need it where they have the native virgin copper, where they have no expense of smelting, where all that is required is to melt their copper. With all these advantages they need protection, and cannot live under a tariff which imposes three fourths of a cent a pound duty! The smelters and miners on the Atlantic coasts tell you that if you take the tariff of 1861 and revise it by granting a greater rate of duty than that already imposed the duty becomes prohibitory, and while you benefit that class in Michigan you but rob Peter to pay Paul; you but take from the miners and smelters on the coast and in the interior of the country their livelihood and their support, because the tariff you impose becomes prohibitory in its character. They go a step further, and they tell you that they have no desire to prevent the enhancement of the tariff upon sulphuret ores, which are the competing ores with the ores of our country; but they say to you that if you put such a duty upon carbonates, which are absolutely essential for them in the economical smelting of the sulphuret ores of that country, that tariff becomes prohibitory and you destroy their work.

Why, Mr. President, when I look to the operation of this bill and see that while it may be beneficial to the gentleman's constituents in Michigan it commits a most destructive assault upon worthy people in other parts of the country, I am amazed that Senators whose voices so often thunder in the Senate in behalf of equal rights and equal privileges to all American citizens should stand upon this floor and ask protection to a class not exceeding ten thousand in the aggregate as against a class numbering hundreds of thousands throughout the United States.

No man who knows anything really of the smelting of copper will maintain that you cannot smelt sulphuret ores without the admixture of carbonates. If any such statement is made in any paper upon Senators' tables, it is a misprint; the word "economically" has evidently been left out. No man who knows anything of smelting will assert that you cannot smelt them; but he who knows anything of the process of smelting will tell you that you cannot smelt them cheaply or economically, you cannot compete with the foreign copper unless you can smelt cheaply your domestic ores by an admixture of foreign carbonates.

I ask the attention of the Senate very briefly—for I do not desire even on a subject of as much interest as this to trespass long on the time of the body—to that statement which I have just made, that you cannot smelt cheaply sulphuret ores without the admixture of carbonates. In the letter of Professor Piggot, the only man I know of in America who has ever published a book on the subject of smelting, a man who stands preëminently high in his profession, speaking of this very subject, says:

"It is difficult to define exactly the relative expenses of the two processes."

That is, the smelting without carbonates and the smelting with carbonates:

"To attempt to smelt copper from sulphurets alone would ruin any one who undertakes it at our present prices of labor and coal."

And on page 12 of the same pamphlet, which I find lying upon the tables of Senators, he says:

"The judicious use of carbonates greatly diminishes the number of operations. The abbreviation of smelting, in this respect, will depend upon the skill of the workmen. In Chili they get blister copper from the mixed carbonates and sulphurets in three operations."

"I should suppose, in view of all these facts, that the economy effected by the use of the ores in question would be at least five cents a pound on the copper produced."

Again:

"The smelting of sulphuret ores by themselves would probably ruin either the miners or the smelters. If copper remains at its present price the expenses of its production would be so enormously increased that the price of ores, which are certainly low enough already, would go down to a point at which the miner could not afford to raise them. The result would be the destruction of both the mining and smelting interests. If, on the other hand, copper should rise in value every article in which this metal is employed would be enhanced, and the whole public would be taxed without benefit to any one"—except to the Lake Superior miners.

I might refer also to the statement of Professor Ewell, which I find also upon the tables of Senators, in which he maintains identically the same ground; and therefore I say that Mr. Raht or Mr. anybody else need not combat the argument that you cannot smelt copper sulphuret ores at all. I do not suppose any man of sense will make such an assertion; but in order to smelt them without the use of carbonates it requires ten or twelve processes, involving the most enormous labor and expense, while if you use the carbonates you can reduce the processes to from four to six or seven. There is the point of the whole thing. It may be true that the Tennessee Mining Company does not use any carbonates in smelting its ores. It is situated far from the Atlantic coast and the expense of transporting heavy ores over railroads or by navigation to their mines in order to get carbonates might be much more expensive than to cut down the wood all around them, and to use charcoal for the process by which they smelt; but that gentleman does not tell us how cheaply he has smelted, and he does not tell us how much money he has lost by his smelting. And if it be true, as I have heard it alleged—and his letter bears some ear-marks like it—that the stockholders of the Consolidated Mining Company of Tennessee are more largely interested in the mining companies upon the shores of Lake Superior, the profit that is to be made by the imposition of such a tariff as this on the copper stock of Lake Superior will counterbalance all the losses upon the Tennessee stock. Wall street understands that sort of financing.

Another distinguished gentleman, but who, I presume, is not an expert, Mr. Sibley, states that it is from the carbonate that the Atlantic smelter produces copper, and not from the native sulphuret ore. The easiest and best reply to that is simply to ask the attention of the Senate to what the cost of carbonate ores is in South America without imposing any duty at all, and then to look at the price of copper, and then to inquire why it is that the smelters of Maryland and all along the coast of New Jersey are satisfied that the tariff should remain as it is, and with copper at only twenty-three cents per pound. The cost to import carbonate ores from South America on the 30th of December last was as follows:

"A quintal is one hundred and one and forty-four hundredths pounds.
Ore usually costs in South America three dollars per quintal, which is, per ton of 2,240 pounds.....	$66 54
Export duty about.....	1 00
Commissions for buying and shipping, five per cent.....	3 34
Cost of sampling, assaying, &c.....	1 00
Freight, £3 5s. sterling.....	15 73
	<hr/> $87 61

"One ton of eighteen per cent. ore is four hundred and three pounds copper, making copper in ore cost twenty-one and three quarter cents per pound in gold, not including any duties or exchange."

If it costs in South America twenty-one and three fourths cents per pound without duty, and without adding exchange, without the cost of smelting in this country, how can it be true when these smelting companies tell you they are satisfied that it shall remain as it is, and copper only brings twenty-three cents a pound? If we are to depend upon facts and arguments, it is unanswerable. If we are to be led by feeling, if it is the desire merely to foster and pamper one class to the damnification of another class, facts and figures are valueless; but if they are argument, I ask some gentleman to tell me how can it be true that the president of a smelting company is satisfied things shall remain as they are with copper bringing but twenty-three cents a pound, and carbonates in Chili costing twenty-one and three fourths cents per pound? The answer is that the allegation of the smelters is true and not false, that they only use a proportionate part of foreign carbonates to work the sulphuret ores of our own country; that they use them in the proportion of one ton to two of the others. All that they ask is, and that is the proviso which I have submitted to the consideration of the Senate, that they may be permitted, for the purpose of working the mines of your own country, for the purpose of developing the wealth of your own land, to import that which is necessary to the economical smelting of the ores of your country in the proportion of one third foreign to two thirds native.

Now, I ask the attention of the Senate to another proposition. As I said before, the copper mines of Lake Superior furnish copper in the mass—virgin copper. From 1845 to 1851 they turned out but five thousand tons in the whole eight years; and now the production is only about nine million pounds; and yet there are consumed in this country and exported from this country from twenty-four to twenty-five million pounds each year, showing that the Lake Superior mines only contribute to the amount of copper consumed in and exported from this country a proportion of one third; and yet you are asked to put a tax upon the two thirds in order to pay the one third more than its get now. What else will it do? It is nothing more nor less, taking as the basis nine million pounds a year, than this: if they have not sold that copper you are making them a present of $225,000. That is the effect of this bill—a bonus to the Lake Superior mines of $225,000 this year, and next year, and in proportion as they produce. Where does it go? Who is to pay for it? The ship-builders of Maine and Massachusetts; the manufacturers of Connecticut, Massachusetts, and New Jersey. All those have got to pay for the copper that they roll a bonus of $225,000 to the copper mines of Lake Superior.

But that is not all. The Government of the United States, which it is our duty to protect upon the floor of this Chamber, is bound to contribute a large portion of this tax that you are putting upon the copper of the country. Go to the Washington navy-yard and see there the magnificent copper-rolling mill belonging to the Government. There you will find that they use about one million six hundred thousand pounds a year, only one half of which comes from Lake Superior; the other half comes from the copper-smelting companies on the Atlantic borders. I tell the Senate—and they will pardon me if I say so—for sixty odd years my people were manufacturers of copper; but never since 1866 have any of us had any relation with the copper interests of the country, either in the holding of a dollar's worth of stock of any sort or description, or in any other way. But for sixty odd years we were manufacturers of copper, and manufactured the very copper that covered the dome of your Capitol until it was displaced by the iron structure which now adorns it. After being personally, for ten years, interested in the business of rolling and manufacturing copper, and president of a copper company, I assert, upon my knowledge and responsibility, that no company on the Atlantic coast can roll the lake copper without the admixture of other copper to make their copper good. I ask Senators to go to the copper-rolling mill at the navy-yard, which is now presided over by a man whom we educated and gave to the Government, and ask him if he will roll Lake Superior copper unless he has the Baltimore copper to admix with it. It is too soft. In refining the copper—I speak from personal experience—I always, while president of a company, found that it was absolutely necessary to use one third of the Lake Superior copper with two thirds of the Baltimore copper. If you put this high tariff upon copper, you put the lake copper in possession entirely of the market; and when you go down to your own rolling mill here at the Washington navy-yard, and see there a million and a half pounds of copper rolled in the year, you will find that by your vote you gave to the Lake Superior mines $36,000 as a bonus to drive out of the market every other class of copper in this country.

These are facts which no man can gainsay; and with these facts before the Senate will the Senate say that they will listen to the complaint of miners in one State alone, occupying probably two counties of that State? Will they hear their cry and turn a deaf ear to the cry of others from all parts of the country? Is it right to create a monopoly in copper, to build up one class to the injury of another? Will you strike down the miners upon the Pacific coast who have sent thousands and thousands of tons to Baltimore and to Swansea—nearly as much to Baltimore as to Swansea; the miners of Nevada, North Carolina, Maryland, Vermont, and New Jersey, to benefit those of Michigan alone? But, on the other hand, will you not do even and exact justice to all, and by adopting the proviso which I have offered for the consideration of the Senate put your high tariff, if you please, on sulphuret ores which compete with our native sulphurets, but in order to the working of our native sulphurets allow us a drawback upon the carbonate ores when we satisfy the proper officers of the revenue department that we have used two tons of native ore to each one ton of foreign ore that we have imported?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I do not rise to speak in behalf of any interest in my own State, or of any interest whatever; but I feel bound to state very briefly the reasons why the Committee on Finance reported this bill in its present form. It was introduced into the House of Representatives at the last session, reported from the Committee of Ways and Means, and finally at the present session was passed by a vote of about two to one. It came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Finance, and there it was more or less discussed.

The rates proposed by this bill are substantially the rates agreed upon two sessions ago, when the whole tariff question was before the Committee on Finance. The rates then reported by the Committee on Finance were:

"On regulus of copper, fifteen per cent.; on copper in pigs, five cents per pound."

The same that is now provided.

"On old copper, fifteen per cent. ad valorem."

Taking copper at the foreign valuation, at from twenty-five to twenty-seven cents, which Senators on all hands agree to be the present market price, the rates fixed by this bill are a little less than twenty per cent. on the foreign valuation; so that they are about the same with scarcely any variations as the rates agreed upon two years ago in the general revision of the tariff.

It seems to me it is not necessary to go into a comparison of duties to show that this is a very low rate of duty. There is no other article even of raw production that can be produced in this country which bears a lower rate of duty. I believe twenty per cent. is the rate of duty even on lumber, the process of unmanufactured material. So that the rate of duty provided by this bill is as low as any rate that can afford any protection to the Lake Superior interests. It is less than or about as low as any duty levied on any American production, however raw may be the state of it.

Now, the question occurs, why separate this subject from the general tariff bill? Why take up and consider this matter for the relief of the interests of Lake Superior until we can revise the general tariff, which cannot, probably, be done at this session? The only answer that can be made to that is, that the copper interest, according to the testimony produced before us, was in a state of utter distrust and prostration. They did not formerly desire any protection on copper. It appears from the history of the discovery of the mines and working of mines of copper in Lake Superior that until the war there was no demand on the part of the Representatives of the State of Michigan, or on the part of those interested, for any protection whatever; but they allege that the taxes put upon industry in various forms during the war, the increased price of living, the increased cost of labor, and all the various elements that enter into the increased price of the manufacture of copper place them at a disadvantage, a disadvantage created by our laws, and unless we can give them some protection to counteract the disadvantage thus created against them they will lose the benefit of the home market, and the native ores of Lake Superior, which are dug out in a state of almost pure metal, will be driven out of the market and superseded by the productions from the copper ores of Peru, Chili, and other foreign countries. These considerations seemed to be sufficient to account for separating this question from the general tariff bill and asking the vote of the Senate upon it. The bill came to us in this form from the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, I have carefully examined the papers submitted to us by Mr. Martin, the president of the company referred to, and the various papers presented against this bill, and I must confess they have not made much impression upon me. According to their statement it requires about one ton of carbonate of copper to mix with two or three tons of sulphuret of copper to make copper, and the production from these ores united with the copper of Lake Superior, which is produced by smelting, makes the best form of copper. I will ask my friend from Maryland if I am right about that?

Mr. WHYTE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, if you pass this bill what will be the effect of it? The only duty levied upon the carbonate of copper is three cents per pound of pure ore in that copper. The pure ore is worth, in gold, on the foreign valuation, at the present market price, twenty-seven cents a pound; so that the only tax upon the ore will be three cents on twenty-seven, or about eleven or twelve per cent. And remember that this tax does not apply to the whole of the ore used in the production of copper in Baltimore, but it only applies to one ton out of three, or one ton out of four. They use three of sulphuret for one of carbonate. So that the Baltimore manufacturer will only have to pay a duty of three cents on an article that is worth in its foreign state, in gold, twenty-seven cents, or only about eleven or twelve per cent., or one third of the ore used by him in the manufacture. It seems to me this is not so severe a burden upon him; not so great as to destroy his business, that we should refuse to give to an interest that maintains a large population in a remote portion of Michigan, and which has already caused the investment of over fifty million dollars, some immediate relief. The duty now levied upon copper, when distributed and added to the price, as it will be, of the copper manufactured, will not be any very material increase of the cost of the manufactured article.

I think, myself, that in connection with this increase of duty on the ore, there ought to be some increase on the coarser fabrics of copper manufacture; but that would open a very wide and very difficult subject, because copper is made the basis of an infinite variety of manufacture, extending to a multitude of small articles, screws and a great variety of objects, where the great cost of the article is in the labor of manufacture and not in the cost of copper. Indeed, copper forms the element, the basis of manufacture in a multitude of small articles of household economy where the cost of the copper forms but a very small portion of the cost of the finished article. It seems to me, therefore, that the increased cost of copper made by this bill will not seriously damage any manufacturing industry, while it will give a reasonable relief to an interest that on all hands is admitted to be in the sorest distress.

These are the reasons, briefly stated, why the Committee on Finance reported this bill without amendment. It does not, as I said before, affect any of the interests of Ohio. We are not interested in copper ore or the production of copper ore. But we cannot maintain the tariff system by any serious discrimination between articles of American production. The idea of exempting the raw material from all taxes and putting a heavier duty on the manufactured article is only a question of degree. Every article of American production is a raw material in some state. Copper to the miner is not a raw material; it is the product of his labor. The copper in the mine is of no value whatever. The value of that copper represents the amount of labor it costs to produce it. When it is smelted and put into bars it has an additional value. When it is rolled into sheets it has an additional value. Then the sheet copper becomes a raw material in the manufacture of a great multitude of other articles, and those articles themselves become the raw material with which the house-builder builds a house, with which a locomotive may be built, and the locomotive completed, with copper making a part of its cost, becomes a raw material for the great railroad interests of the country; so that it is impossible to discriminate and say that on an article of manufacture a duty may be levied, but on a raw product of the mine, or of the farm, or of the workshop no duty should be levied. I believe that the coarser the fabric, the more bulky it is, the less protection is required. It seems to me that the rule and theory of protection would extend to every branch of American industry. The great difficulty is in apportioning and arranging and distributing the burden of protective duties. I think that this is not an unreasonable duty, and that the passage of this bill will not oppress any interest, while it will relieve the copper interests of Lake Superior.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I shall occupy the time of the Senate but for a few minutes. Being entirely unable to throw any additional light on the subject, I think my best policy will be to make a very short speech and let this bill be brought to a vote at the earliest possible moment.

It is not to be denied, of course, Mr. President, that the great interest felt in the passage of this bill is confined more particularly to that class of our fellow-citizens who are interested in mining in what is known as the upper peninsula of Michigan. The reason is very plain. That region contains the richest deposits of the ore of copper to be found anywhere upon the continent. We have invested, honestly and fairly, in the business of copper-mining in that upper peninsula more than sixty million dollars, the productiveness of which investment depends upon the productiveness and value of the mines. This is not to be doubted. Nobody who has given the subject proper attention will be disposed to deny, for it cannot be truthfully denied, that in consequence of the present low rate of duty upon copper ores that interest has become almost prostrated, and unless those who are interested in the business receive something like reasonable aid and protection at the hands of the Government they will be compelled to discontinue their labors, to withdraw their capital, so far as it is possible to withdraw it, from the present investments, and many of the companies will be driven to absolute bankruptcy.

Sir, it is a great interest, speaking in the national sense. It is not confined merely to the limits of the upper peninsula or to the boundaries of the State of Michigan, but it is coextensive with the United States. Wherever copper is used this interest has a certain influence, and is to a certain degree felt.

There appears to be but one very potent opposition in the way of the passage of this bill, and that consists of the Baltimore smelting works. I suppose that is a corporation. Its business is smelting copper. It has invested, as I understand from credible sources, not more than one and a half million dollars. The real question before us is, as I understand it, whether the paltry interest of the Baltimore Copper Smelting Company is to prevent the passage of an act the benefits of which are to be coextensive with the United States, and particularly beneficial to those persons who are interested in the Lake Superior copper mines. Shall an interest of $1,500,000 invested in smelting counterbalance and overcome before this body an interest amounting to more than sixty million dollars all told? That is simply the question. I take it that that will not be the opinion of the Senate. I hope not.

What particular claim, I ask of the gentleman from Maryland, have the Baltimore smelting company to oppose the passage of this great, necessary, and national measure; for it is such in all its aspects? At the breaking out of the war, as I have been told, that company, from some motive or other, I will not undertake to say what, saw fit to ship to Europe and to deposit in England and in Germany some three million pounds of their copper. In 1863 they saw fit, on the invitation of some Government agents, to reship home about one half of the quantity which they had carried abroad. Now, sir, I do not say this reproachfully toward that company. There may have been a motive which I do not understand, and which I have not thus far perceived; but it appeared to me, when I was told this, that they were not acting fully and completely in the spirit of a self-sacrificing patriotism in that the great crisis of the country.

The honorable Senator from Maryland will have it that it is necessary to intermingle the carbonate ores which are produced in Chili and other foreign countries, chiefly in Chili, with the sulphuret ores of this country in order to make a good article of copper; or, I should state it otherwise, that it is very difficult and very expensive to smelt the sulphurets of the United States without the intermixture of foreign carbonates. Now I wish to call the attention of the Senate for a moment to a paper which Senators will find lying on their tables on that particular subject. It is a letter of Mr. Alexander Trippel, chemist and metallurgist, a member of the Board of Experts of the American Bureau of Mines, addressed to the secretary of the Quincy Mining Company. This is the letter:

NEW YORK, January 9, 1869.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 7th is received. You ask me if there is any truth in the assertion that "American sulphuret copper ores cannot be reduced without the admixture of a certain amount of foreign carbonate ores," and whether the reduction of such sulphuret ores causes metallurgical difficulties without the admixture of carbonates; and further, if it makes any material technical difference what kind of fuel is used for roasting and smelting, or if charcoal possesses any power in the reduction of these sulphurets which good mineral coal has not?

In reply to these questions I will say, first, that there is not the least good reason for the assertion that "American sulphurets cannot be treated without foreign carbonates." In all probability, the person making such assertion has been misinformed, or, rather, he committed an error by perverting the information received, as he undoubtedly wanted to convey the idea that carbonates could not be treated to advantage without sulphurets. This latter version would have been substantially correct, and be considered so by every practical metallurgist or smelter.

In order to substantiate the correctness of what I say, I refer here to the well known difficulties encountered in Russia, and everywhere else where carbonates have to be reduced without sulphurets; and further, to the frequent want of sulphurets at various periods in our Atlantic smelting works, when sulphurets were eagerly sought for and comparatively better paid than carbonates.

I would also call your attention to the successful treatment of the Ducktown (Tennessee) copper ores, all sulphurets, where in four successive operations the ore is converted into the finest quality of ingot copper, while I had occasion to count not less than eight operations in the Baltimore smelting works for the same purpose, and with mixed ores, sulphurets and carbonates: which proves beyond all doubt that the mixture of carbonates and sulphurets did not produce the slightest advantage, unless the manipulations in these works have been irrational and improper. To be short, it is the first time that I ever heard such an assertion. Admitting that carbonates are useful for mixing under certain circumstances, I deny that sulphurets could not be treated separately, and say so from a long practical experience in this business.

The answer to your second question is partly given above. There are no practical difficulties to treat sulphurets alone; nothing is easier than to expel the sulphur sufficiently by roasting the ore and to form oxides in such proportions as to give very satisfactory results.

Unfortunately, some of our Atlantic smelting-works do not give enough attention to a proper roasting, and thereby prolong the process; but the want of proper skill and foresight should not be the excuse for an erroneous opinion.

To your third question, whether charcoal has any special power, or exercises any other influence on either class of ores than mineral coal, I can only reply that the whole difference between charcoal and mineral coal lies in their respective pyrometric effects, which affects the economy of the smelting manipulations, and nothing else.

If the Ducktown Smelting Works had mineral coal instead of charcoal their success would be more complete yet, and I know that the railway which will connect the mines with mineral coal beds is considered one of the greatest questions for the prosperity of the copper interest of East Tennessee.

This, I believe, covers the information you desire to have. If I did not intend to be brief, I would, with more detailed arguments, certainly convince you of the errors into which your informant has fallen.

Let me have the fine sulphuret ores of Tennessee, North Carolina, Virginia, or Vermont, and I demand nothing better to produce the best quality of ingot copper, with either charcoal or mineral coal, at reasonable cost.

Respectfully, yours,

ALEX. TRIPPEL,
Chemist and Metallurgist.

WILLIAM HART SMITH, esq.,
Secretary Quincy Mining Company.

There is abundance of testimony to the same effect, the statements of skillful experts who have had great and long experience in the treatment of copper ores and in smelting them; and the pretense that is now set up for the purpose of defeating the passage of this bill, that the carbonates of Chili are necessary to the smelting of copper, is but a mere pretense. The testimony is all the other way.

Now, Mr. President, I will not dispute the statement of fact which is so earnestly and emphatically made here and insisted upon by the honorable Senator from Maryland, that in order to make a good quality of copper it is necessary that the Baltimore article should be mixed with the Michigan article; that the Michigan article is entirely too soft for useful purposes; too soft to be relied upon. I will not controvert that proposition; but I must say that, although somewhat acquainted with the copper trade and copper business for the last fifteen years, this is the first time I ever heard of it. I never before understood that in order to render the Michigan copper useful for manufacturing purposes or anything else it was necessary to mix the Baltimore product with that of the upper peninsula of Michigan; and I fancy that the honorable Senator on further investigation may discover that that statement is to be taken with many grains of allowance, if not to be entirely discarded.

After all, sir, the rivalries growing out of this bill or connected with this bill consist of the mines of Lake Superior on the one side, constituting a population of about twenty thousand, the large mass of whom are engaged in the business of mining, whose income, whose living, whose very bread depends upon the success of the mining enterprises up there, an enterprise in which a very large amount of money has been invested honestly and fairly, an amount which is by no means contemptible, an amount which deserves the attention of every patriotic statesman in the land; and on the other hand, gentlemen in Baltimore and elsewhere who are engaged in smelting, whose capital is scarcely to be talked of in the same day with the capital invested in our State in mining.

Sir, we appeal to the Senate to give us a reasonable measure of protection. We cannot say that we are satisfied as citizens of Michigan while our copper has no protection, at all comparatively, and the iron of Pennsylvania is protected to the tune of fifty per cent., and the lead of Iowa and the Mississippi is also protected almost to the same degree. We are not satisfied with this, sir. If iron and lead are thus to be protected to the extent to which these several articles receive protection at the present time we are not content that our interests should be totally neglected and treated even with contumely and contempt by certain gentlemen in this Chamber. We ask simply for equal justice; no, sir, not even equal justice; we ask for enough protection to make it certain that the capitalists and the laborers whose money and whose labor is so intimately connected with the copper mining interests of Lake Superior shall receive a proper degree of regard at the hands of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Whyte] to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. Morrill].

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I submit that that amendment is not germane to the amendment which I offered. If it comes in as an amendment to my amendment I raise that question upon it. It would come in more properly at the end of the bill as a proviso.

Mr. SUMNER. I would suggest to the Senator from Maryland that he reserve his amendment, and move it at the end of the bill when it will be in order.

Mr. WHYTE. I offered the amendment for the purpose of submitting the remarks which I made in regard to carbonates. It struck me that after the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Vermont it would not be appropriate to make those remarks. I have no objection, therefore, to withdrawing my amendment now temporarily. I intend to offer it afterward as a proviso at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment being withdrawn, the question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. Morrill].

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to hear that read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I submit that the first and second amendments sent to the Chair should be read, and the question taken on both together. The first amendment retains the duty upon copper ores as presented by the original bill at three cents a pound where they contain sulphur; and the second reduces the duty upon carbonates one cent a pound. It takes two amendments to reach that object; and therefore both amendments should be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the two propositions will be treated as one amendment. The Senator from Vermont proposes to amend the bill by inserting in line nine, after the word "ores," the words "containing sulphur," and after the word "therein" in line ten inserting "and on all copper imported in the form of ores, not containing sulphur, two cents on each pound of fine copper contained therein;" so as to make that part of the bill read:

On all copper imported in the form of ores, containing sulphur, three cents on each pound of fine copper contained therein; and on all copper imported in the form of ores, not containing sulphur, two cents on each pound of fine copper contained therein.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope that amendment will not prevail; it will defeat the bill. I ask for the yeas and nays on it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ANTHONY. I wish the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Michigan would compromise their little difference on this amendment. I do not want to vote against either of them on this bill. I should think they might agree to a compromise on this point.

Mr. CHANDLER. I would not agree to abandon the copper interest. This amendment destroys it. If it is the intention of the body to destroy the bill be it so.

Several SENATORS. Let us adjourn.

Mr. CHANDLER. I want this matter decided. The Senator from Vermont and I have had all the consultation we are likely to have on the subject.

Mr. SUMNER. There are several other amendments to be proposed. We had better adjourn.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would not move an adjournment against the wish of the Senator from Michigan; but I think we had better adjourn now.

Mr. FERRY. There are several other amendments to be offered.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let us have a vote on this and see how it comes out.

Mr. CORBETT. I ask for the reading of the original bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the Senate adjourn. I am sure we cannot pass the bill now.

Mr. SUMNER. There are several amendments.

Mr. WILSON. If Senators wish to take a vote I will not press my motion now.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me state to the Senate that the present duty on ores is five per cent., and the duty reported by the committee in this bill is about eleven per cent. The rate now proposed by the Senator from Vermont is about midway between the two. Eleven per cent is about the duty imposed by this bill, being three cents a pound on all the fine copper contained in the ores.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, and the Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. WHYTE. Is the vote to be taken on the entire amendment, or only on that part of the amendment which imposes a tax of three cents on sulphuret ores?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the entire amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Before the vote is taken I will state that my colleague [Mr. MORRILL] is paired on the questions relative to this bill with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. CATTELL.] My colleague, if present, would vote against the bill and for the amendment.

The question being taken by yeas and nays resulted—yeas 20, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Cole, Conkling, Cragin, Davis, Dixon, Edmunds, Ferry, Fessenden, Fowler, McCreery, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson of New Hampshire, Spencer, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Vickers, Whyte, and Wilson—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Cameron, Chandler, Corbett, Doolittle, Frelinghuysen, Harlan, Harris, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Kellogg, McDonald, Morton, Osborn, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Rice, Robertson, Ross, Sawyer, Sherman, Stewart, Thayer, Wade, Warner, and Willey—27.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Buckalew, Cattell, Conness, Drake, Grimes, Henderson, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Norton, Nye, Pool, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Sprague, Tipton, Welch, Williams, and Yates—19.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I now withdraw my other amendments as the principle has been decided, as it seems to me, that no amendment is to be introduced against the original bill.

Mr. WILSON. I ask now to have the bill read as it stands, as I propose to move an amendment.

Mr. SUMNER. I have two or three amendments to move.

Several SENATORS. Let us adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 18, 1869.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. C. HOLBROOK, D. D., of Homer, New York.

The Journal of Friday last was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the first business in order is the call of the States and Territories, commencing with the State of Maine, for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to their appropriate committees, not to be brought back into the House by a motion to reconsider. Under this call memorials and resolutions of State and territorial Legislatures may be presented.

PENSION LAWS.

Mr. PERHAM introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1682) relating to the operations of the pension laws, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL BANKING SYSTEM, ETC.

Mr. POLAND introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1683) providing for the issue of United States bonds, for retiring United States notes, and for a free system of national banking; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

TESTIMONY OF DEFENDANTS.

Mr. POLAND also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1684) allowing the defendant in criminal cases to testify; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revision of Laws of the United States, and ordered to be printed.

DEFENSES OF WASHINGTON, ETC.

Mr. POLAND also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1685) to repeal section two of an act passed February 13, 1862, entitled "An act making an appropriation for completing the defenses of Washington, and for other purposes;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CHURCH PROPERTY IN REBEL STATES.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1686) relating to church property in the late rebellious States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Reconstruction.

ALIENATION OF GRANTS OR PRIVILEGES.

Mr. BANKS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1687) to prevent the alienation to foreigners of grants or privileges from the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

FUR-SEAL TRADE.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1688) to regulate and protect the fur-seal trade at the Islands of St. Paul and St. George, in the territory of Alaska; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

BOSTON AND WASHINGTON TELEGRAPH.

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York, on behalf of his colleague, Mr. STEWART, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1689) for the construction of lines of telegraph between Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, under the direction of the Post Office Department; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. WOOD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1690) to repeal an act to incorporate the National Life Insurance Company of the United States of America, approved July 25, 1868; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

LOANS ON LEGAL-TENDERS.

Mr. BARNES introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1691) to prevent the loaning of money upon United States legal-tender notes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

INTEREST ON DEPOSITS.

Mr. BARNES also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1692) to prevent banks of issue from paying interest upon deposits; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

TAX ON MANUFACTURES.

Mr. BROOKS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1693) to amend an act entitled "An act to exempt certain manufactures from internal tax, and for other purposes," approved March 31, 1868; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

CHRISTINA ARMEL.

Mr. KOONTZ introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1694) granting a pension to Christina Armel; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CHARLES MAUS.

Mr. MILLER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1695) granting a pension to Charles Maus, of Lewisburg, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and of the War of 1812.

POST ROADS IN MARYLAND.

Mr. STONE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1696) to establish certain post roads in the State of Maryland; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

INTERNAL TAX LAW.

Mr. BOYDEN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1697) to amend the internal tax law, approved July 20, 1868; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

POST ROUTES IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. DOCKERY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1698) to establish certain post routes in North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

RELIEF FROM DISABILITIES.

Mr. YOUNG introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1699) to relieve J. J. Morrison, T. S. Ward, C. Pittman, and Thomas Hooper, of the State of Georgia, from political disabilities.

CLAIMS OF SOUTHERN CENSUS-TAKERS.

Mr. PRINCE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1700) extending to certain citizens of certain States the privileges of an act entitled "An act making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1867; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

LEGAL ADVERTISEMENTS.

Mr. TIFT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1701) to amend the seventh section of the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, approved March 2, 1867; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Revision of Laws of the United States.

BANKRUPT ACT.

Mr. TIFT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1702) in amendment of an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved March 2, 1867; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Revision of Laws of the United States.

KU-KLUX OUTRAGES IN ALABAMA.

Mr. CALLIS introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 408) to provide for the appointment of a special committee for the investigation of certain outrages committed on loyal citizens of Alabama by the Ku-Klux Klan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Reconstruction, and ordered to be printed.

SALE OF GOLD AND BONDS.

Mr. KELLOGG introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 409) relative to the sale of gold and bonds; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

RAILROAD LAND GRANT.

Mr. NORRIS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1703) granting to the Eufaula, Opelika, Oxford, and Guntersville Railroad Company the right of way through the public lands of the United States, and lands for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the railroad of said company; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

RIGHTS OF THE RECONSTRUCTED STATES.

Mr. NORRIS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1704) securing certain rights to the lately reconstructed States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Reconstruction.

LOUISIANA AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

Mr. SYPHER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1705) to enable the State of Louisiana to receive the public lands donated to that State by the act for the benefit of agricultural colleges, &c., and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

READMISSION OF MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. BINGHAM introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1706) to admit the State of Mississippi to representation in Congress; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Reconstruction, and ordered to be printed.

BUTCHERS' BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.

Mr. WELKER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1707) to incorporate the Butchers' Benevolent Association of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

BRIGADIER GENERALS IN THE ARMY.

Mr. GARFIELD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1708) to fix the number of brigadier generals in the Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

BOUNTIES TO COLORED SOLDIERS.

Mr. ARNELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1709) to facilitate the payment of bounties to colored soldiers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MAJOR FRANCIS M. M'KEE.

Mr. STOKES introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1710) for the relief of Major Francis M. McKee, of Smith county, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

DISTRIBUTION OF OFFICES.

Mr. SHANKS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1711) to distribute the number and rank of Government employes among the several districts and Territories; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

ROBERT FORD.

Mr. SHANKS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1712) for the relief of Robert Ford; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

POST ROUTE IN INDIANA.

Mr. NIBLACK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1713) to establish a certain post route in Indiana; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

CLOSE OF LAND SYSTEM.

LUCINDA PAUGLE.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1737) granting a pension to Lucinda Paugle, of Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

NATIONAL BANK STATEMENTS.

Mr. BARNES introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 412) to compel national banks to make statements six times a year at previous dates; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions having been completed, the next business in order during the morning hour is the call of States for resolutions, commencing with the State of Indiana, where the call was arrested on last Monday.

WELLS, FARGO AND COMPANY.

Mr. COBURN submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Expenditures be directed to inquire into and report to this House all the facts and circumstances concerning the contract with Wells, Fargo & Co., for carrying the United States mails between the termini of the Pacific railroads, the character of the contract, its terms, the probable cost of the service, and the manner in which the service has been and is being performed; and that said committee have power to compel the attendance of witnesses and examine them under oath, and to employ a stenographer at the usual compensation, and to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. The last clause of this resolution, proposing to authorize the committee to report at any time, cannot be adopted without unanimous consent or a suspension of the rules, which cannot be had during the morning hour of Monday. The Chair therefore rules that part of the resolution to be out of order.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Is there any objection to allowing the committee to report at any time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask for unanimous consent after the expiration of the morning hour. He cannot, under the rules, ask it during the morning hour of Monday.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I suggest to the mover of the resolution that he strike out that part providing for the employment of a stenographer. The House has stenographers regularly employed to report in committees.

Mr. COBURN. I modify the resolution by striking out that clause.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object to debate.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I will ask whether there is any objection to allowing the committee to report at any time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will reserve that point and ask unanimous consent after the morning hour.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. FARNSWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD LAND GRANTS, SUBSIDIES, ETC.

Mr. HOLMAN submitted the following resolutions, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That in the present condition of the national finances no further subsidies ought to be granted by Congress, either in bonds or money, to railroad or other corporations, or to promote local enterprises, but the whole resources of the country ought to be applied to the pressing necessities of the public service in such manner as will relieve the people from the burdens of taxation.

Resolved, That grants of the public lands to corporations ought to be discontinued, and the whole of such lands ought to be held as a sacred trust, to secure homesteads to actual settlers, and for no other purpose whatever.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move to refer the first resolution to the Committee of Ways and Means, and the second to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has demanded the previous question. Motions to refer are not in order unless the previous question should not be seconded.

On seconding the call for the previous question there were—ayes 49, noes 31; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. BENJAMIN.

Mr. BROOKS. Are these resolutions divisible?

The SPEAKER. They are.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the previous question should be seconded can we have a separate vote on the resolution relative to public lands?

The SPEAKER. A separate vote can be had on each resolution.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 57.

So the previous question was seconded.

The question then recurred on ordering the main question.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to move the reference of the resolutions?

The SPEAKER. It would not be, the previous question having been seconded.

Mr. WINDOM. Would it be in order to move to lay the resolutions on the table?

The SPEAKER. It would be.

Mr. WINDOM. I make that motion.

The motion was not agreed to; there being—ayes thirty-four, noes, not counted.

The main question was ordered.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I ask for a separate vote on the resolutions.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions will be voted on separately; and the question is first on agreeing to the resolution relative to subsidies to railroad or other corporations.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 90, nays 67, not voting 65; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Bailey, Baker, Baldwin, Beaman, Beatty, Benton, Bingham, Blair, Boutwell, Bromwell, Brooks, Buckland, Burr, Benjamin F. Butler, Cary, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cornell, Cullom, Delano, Dockery, Ela, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Getz, Grover, Harding, Hawkins, Heaton, Hill, Holman, Chester D. Hubbard, Jenckes, Johnson, Alexander H. Jones, Thomas L. Jones, Judd, Julian, Kelsey, Kerr, Kitchen, Knott, Koontz, Lash, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, McCarthy, McKee, Mercur, Miller, Moore, Mungen, Niblack, Nicholson, Paine, Phelps, Pike, Pile, Plants, Price, Randall, Ross, Scofield, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sigreaves, Spalding, Stone, Sypher, Taber, Taylor, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Auker, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, William Williams, James P. Wilson, John T. Wilson, Wood, and Young—90.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Axtell, Banks, Beaman, Beck, Benjamin, Boles, Boyden, Buckley, Roderick R. Butler, Callis, Churchill, Clift, Cobb, Coburn, Cook, Corley, Covode, Cullom, Delano, Dewesse, Dockery, Dodge, Driggs, Eggleston, Thomas D. Eliot, James T. Elliott, Ferriss, Ferry, Garfield, Golladay, Goss, Gove, Gravely, Haughey, Higby, Hopkins, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Kelley, Kellogg, Lincoln, Mallory, Maynard, McCormick, Morrill, Mullins, Myers, Newcomb, Newsam, Norris, O'Neill, Perham, Peters, Pierce, Prince, Baum, Roots, Sawyer, Schenck, Smith, Starkweather, Stokes, Stover, Taffe, Thomas, Tift, Lawrence S. Trimble, Twichell, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, William B. Washburn, Whittemore, and Windom—67.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Ames, Archer, James M. Ashley, Barnum, Blackburn, Blaine, Bowen, Boyer, Broomall, Cake, Covode, Dawes, Diekey, Dixon, Donnelly, Eckley, Edwards, Eggleston, Eldridge, Thomas D. Eliot, Fox, French, Glossbrenner, Griswold, Haight, Halsey, Hamilton, Hopper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D.

Hubbard, Hulburt, Hunter, Ketcham, Laffin, Loan, Logan, Loughridge, Lynch, Marshall, Marvin, McCullough, Moorhead, Morrissey, Nunn, Orth, Pettis, Poland, Polsley, Pomeroy, Prayn, Robertson, Robinson, Selye, Stevens, Stewart, John Trimble, Robert T. Van Horn, Vidal, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Thomas Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Woodbridge, and Woodward—65.

So the first resolution was agreed to.

The question recurred on agreeing to the second resolution.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. JULIAN. I ask my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] to allow a substitute for the pending resolution to be reported.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will do so.

Mr. JULIAN. I desire to offer the following as a substitute for the resolution:

Resolved, That no more public lands should be granted to aid in the construction of railroads except upon condition, of actual settlement in quantities not greater than one hundred and sixty acres to one purchaser, and for a fixed maximum price.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. If this is accepted as a substitute I will not object to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I decline to accept it.

Mr. DELANO. Is it in order to move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on the Public Lands?

The SPEAKER. It is not; because the previous question has been partly executed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I move to lay the resolution on the table, as the substitute is not accepted.

On laying the resolution on the table there were—ayes 74, noes 43.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CULLOM. If the resolution is not laid on the table will it then be in order to move to refer it to a proper committee?

The SPEAKER. It would not; the previous question operating and being partly executed.

The question was taken on laying the resolution on the table; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 110, nays 55, not voting 57; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Axtell, Banks, Beaman, Beck, Benjamin, Bingham, Blair, Boles, Boyden, Buckland, Buckley, Roderick R. Butler, Cake, Callis, Churchill, Clift, Cobb, Coburn, Cook, Corley, Covode, Cullom, Delano, Dewesse, Dockery, Dodge, Driggs, Eggleston, Thomas D. Eliot, James T. Elliott, Ferriss, Ferry, French, Garfield, Golladay, Goss, Gove, Gravely, Haughey, Heaton, Hooper, Hopkins, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Johnson, Alexander H. Jones, Judd, Julian, Kelley, Kellogg, Knott, Lash, Lincoln, Mallory, Marvin, McKee, Mercur, Miller, Morrill, Mullins, Myers, Newcomb, Newsam, Norris, O'Neill, Orth, Perham, Peters, Pettis, Phelps, Pierce, Pile, Poland, Price, Prince, Baum, Roots, Sawyer, Schenck, Shanks, Smith, Starkweather, Stokes, Stover, Tabor, Taffe, Tift, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Trowbridge, Twichell, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Van Wyck, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Whittemore, Thomas Williams, William Williams, James F. Wilson, and Windom—110.

NAYS—Messrs. Bailey, Baker, Baldwin, Barnes, Beatty, Benton, Boutwell, Burr, Benjamin F. Butler, Cary, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Ela, Farnsworth, Fields, Getz, Grover, Harding, Hawkins, Holman, Chester D. Hubbard, Thomas L. Jones, Kelsey, Kerr, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Marshall, McCarthy, McCormick, Moore, Mungen, Niblack, Paine, Pike, Plants, Randall, Ross, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sigreaves, Spalding, Stevens, Stone, Sypher, Taylor, Thomas, Upson, Van Auker, Van Trump, Ward, John T. Wilson, Wood, and Young—55.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Archer, James M. Ashley, Barnum, Blackburn, Blaine, Bowen, Boyer, Broomall, Brooks, Broomall, Cornell, Dawes, Diekey, Dixon, Donnelly, Eckley, Edwards, Eldridge, Fox, Glossbrenner, Griswold, Haight, Halsey, Hamilton, Higby, Hill, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburt, Humphrey, Ketcham, Kitchen, Laffin, Loan, Logan, Loughridge, Lynch, Maynard, McCullough, Moorhead, Morrissey, Nicholson, Nunn, Polsley, Pomeroy, Prayn, Robertson, Robinson, Selye, Stewart, Robert T. Van Horn, Vidal, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Stephen F. Wilson, Woodbridge, and Woodward—57.

So the resolution was laid on the table.

During the roll call, Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, stated that he had been called out of the House; if he had been here he would have voted "no," emphatically.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the first resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The House resumes the consideration of the motion made on Monday last by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN], and pending at the adjournment, to suspend the rules to enable him to offer several amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1599) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending 30th June, 1870, reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union with sundry amendments.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. One of the amendments which I desire to have the rules suspended to enable me to offer is in the nature of a third section of the bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] has prepared a substitute for that amendment, which I understand meets the approbation of the Committee on Appropriations, and also of gentlemen who are opposed to the section as offered by me. The gentleman from Pennsylvania can now offer that substitute.

The SPEAKER. It cannot be offered yet. The motion is to suspend the rules to enable the amendments to be offered.

Mr. KELLEY. I will say that my substitute is in accordance with a bill passed by the Senate and acted upon by the House committee.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will accept it as a modification of my amendment.

The Clerk then read the amendments proposed, as follows:

At the bottom of page 3 insert the following: Provided, That all amounts appropriated for the support of the Naval Asylum, at Philadelphia, the beneficiaries therein, the pay of officers, repairs, contingent and other expenses, shall be charged to and paid from the income of the naval pension fund.

On page 11, after the first paragraph with reference to the Marine corps, insert the following:

Provided, That the number of non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates authorized and allowed to be enlisted into the Marine corps of the United States be, and the same is hereby, fixed and declared to be fifteen hundred, and no more.

Insert the following as section three: And be it further enacted, That no commissioned or non-commissioned officer of the Marine corps shall be appointed till the officers of the corps be reduced by death, resignation, retirement, or expiration of term of service to one colonel, one lieutenant colonel, two majors, one adjutant and inspector, one paymaster, one quartermaster, one assistant quartermaster, twelve captains, eighteen first lieutenants, eighteen second lieutenants, and the number of sergeants, corporals, and clerks be reduced to two fifths of the number now fixed by law.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to offer a further amendment, to which I do not think there will be any objection.

The SPEAKER. It can only be entertained by the gentleman from Illinois accepting it.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask him to accept it. It is to add to the third section the following:

That this act shall not affect the field officers now in the Marine corps, and that there shall not be promotions to lieutenant colonels and majors until the number of officers in those grades be reduced to the number established by this act.

Mr. KELLEY. That is a mere repetition of my proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think yours is in such plain terms.

Mr. PIKE. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to say one word before the vote is taken?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. No, I cannot.

Mr. PIKE. I merely want to state that this whole subject-matter is before the Naval Committees of the Senate and of the House, and a committee of conference has been appointed to take up and consider this very matter.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I do not yield to the gentleman to make a speech.

Mr. PIKE. Well, I hope the House will not suspend the rules for any such purpose.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. We went through the same form last session, and we never got the legislation which the country demands.

The SPEAKER. If the motion to suspend the rules is agreed to the amendments will be subject to a separate vote after the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union have been disposed of.

Mr. WELKER. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to allow an amendment which I desire to offer to be read. I am in favor of the object of his amendment, but I do not think the way in which he proposes to attain it is the proper one.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. After the rules are suspended the gentleman can offer his amendment.

The SPEAKER. If it is out of order he cannot. The motion to suspend the rules only covers the amendments that have been read.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will modify my motion, and move to suspend the rules to enable the amendments which I have designated to be offered and any amendments that may be offered thereto.

The question was put; and there were—ayes 70, noes 42.

So (two thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Very well; let it go. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. PIKE] says he will bring in a bill which will cover these amendments.

The first amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was then read, as follows:

Page 2, line thirty-two, strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five," so that it will read:

Navy-yard at Philadelphia:

For repairs of all kinds, $25,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to. The Committee on Appropriations agreed to give $50,000 for this purpose, and I am well informed from Philadelphia that that sum is required.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I call the previous question on this bill and the pending amendments.

Mr. KELLEY. I would like to say that the amendment made by the Committee of the Whole is approved, so far as I know, by the entire community of Philadelphia. I have seen it applauded by all the leading journals of that city, and by all the best men there.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, those on one side.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I insist upon the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question recurred upon the amendment in regard to repairs of Philadelphia navy-yard.

Mr. RANDALL. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to increase the appropriation for Naval Observatory from $10,000 to $13,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the words "and so forth" wherever they occur on page 12 of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask consent to have stricken out of the bill the words "and for other purposes," at the end of the section.

The SPEAKER. That requires unanimous consent, as the previous question is now pending.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEATH OF HON. JAMES HINDS.

The SPEAKER. The delegation from the State of Arkansas have informed the Chair that they intend to announce on next Friday at two o'clock the death of their late colleague, Mr. JAMES HINDS.

STATIONERY FOR INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting information desired by the Committee on Printing in regard to stationery contracts; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

SENECA AND SHAWNEE INDIANS, ETC.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting an estimate of the appropriation required in fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Seneca, Shawnee, and other Indians, under treaty of February 23, 1867; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to the condition of certain appropriations under the control of the Department; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MILITARY EXPENSES AT NEW YORK.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the Quartermaster General, relative to the manner of reducing the expenses of the War Department at and in the vicinity of New York; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. HAMLIN, one of its Clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to the bill (H. R. No. 941) to amend certain acts in relation to the Navy and Marine corps, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. DRAKE, Mr. NYE, and Mr. HENDRICKS.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 1598) to relieve from disabilities R. W. Best and Samuel F. Phillips, of North Carolina.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill (H. R. No. 1558) to amend an act entitled "An act to prescribe the mode of obtaining evidence in case of contested elections," approved February 19, 1851.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to move that the rules be suspended, and that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of considering the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a few moments.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will withdraw my motion to suspend the rules, and yield to my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER.]

BONDS AS BANKING SECURITY.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report to the House for consideration and adoption at this time the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Comptroller of the Currency be instructed to inform the House whether any and what banks have been allowed to exchange gold-bearing interest securities of the United States for the six per cent. currency bonds issued to the Pacific railroad, and when and to what amount; and that such exchange shall cease till further action of the House, and also whether any and what banks have relinquished their charters as national banks, and are doing business under State charters, still retaining their national bank circulation; and what means, if any, have been taken to deprive them of such circulation, together with the amount of such circulation outstanding by each bank; and also whether any banks have been instructed that the twenty-ninth section of the banking act, limiting the amount of liabilities of any one person or association to one tenth of its capital, does not apply to indorsements on collateral securities, or to checks certified as good, where the money is not taken from the bank; and to furnish a copy of said instructions on either of said questions.

The SPEAKER. This not being an appropriation bill, is not a privileged report.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent to present it now.

Objection was made.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move that the rules be suspended for the purpose of allowing me to present this resolution for consideration at this time. And I desire to say a few words to explain the necessity for this resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object to debate.

Mr. DELANO. Has the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] the floor to move to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. He has; the Chair recognized him, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] having withdrawn his motion to suspend the rules for the purpose of going into the Committee of the Whole on the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. DELANO. I am in possession of some information upon this subject which I think should be given to the House before they are called upon to vote on this resolution.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to give that information to the House, if I can be permitted to do so.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw my objection to debate.

Mr. DELANO. I object, unless this matter can be open to discussion generally.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be open for consideration and discussion should the rules be suspended to allow this resolution to be introduced at this time.

The question was upon suspending the rules; and being taken, upon a division there were—ayes 60, noes 24; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. Brooks, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 95, noes 18.

So (two-thirds voting in the affirmative) the rules were suspended, and the resolution was introduced.

The question was upon agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I wish simply that the House may understand exactly what is being done in reference to the matters involved in the resolution. The resolution looks toward three things. In the first place, the Comptroller of the Currency allows banks that have gold-bearing bonds, six per cent. and five per cent. bonds, pledged as security for circulation, to exchange them and put in their place as securities the six per cent. currency bonds issued to the Pacific railroads, payable both interest and principal in currency. By law the Comptroller is permitted to issue currency within ten per cent. of par value, or within ten per cent. of the market value when below par. Therefore, for six per cent. five-twenty bonds he gives ninety per cent., the premium of five-twenty bonds being 108. For ten-forty bonds he gives eighty-five per cent., and the premium being five per cent. for the Pacific railroad bonds, which are about on a par with currency—one half per cent. above par—he gives eighty per cent. Now, I agree that these bonds will be very good thirty years hence if we get back to specie payments by that time; but they are wanted now as a security for the circulation; and while, with my views of the propriety of financial action as to a specie basis, it would not make so much difference, yet with every gentleman who wants to see a gold basis for the circulation it does make a very great difference, because you have no foundation for the security of your circulation but currency—not gold bonds, either by construction or by the express terms of the law. This exchange, I am informed, has already gone on to the extent of more than fifteen million dollars, and is therefore getting to be a pretty serious matter.

Now, a few words as to the second proposition of the resolution. There are some banks which, having got out all their circulation, and that circulation being issued, never coming back for redemption, propose to relieve themselves from the restrictions of the national banking system by winding up as national banks and carrying on their banking business as State banks. If they wind up as national banks they can redeem their circulation in currency, in greenbacks, and release their bonds pledged for the redemption of the bills. If they can do this, it is easily seen that as soon as all the banking circulation may be redeemed in greenbacks we lose the extra ten per cent. on bonds with which to force these banks back to specie payments whenever the Government may resume such payments, and when the Government will be called upon to redeem this whole amount of $650,000,000.

Mr. PRICE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. PRICE. I desire to know if before a bank attempts to wind up it is not required to deposit dollar for dollar in greenbacks for what it has received?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. In currency? Yes, sir.

Mr. PRICE. So that the moment they wind up they put that money into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That is exactly what I said. Then you have the whole banking currency of the country liable to be forced on the Treasury for redemption in coin whenever the country resumes specie payments, and there will be nothing but currency in the Treasury to redeem that circulation, and the banks will thus escape from all the consequences of a resumption. But that would be a matter of more consequence to gentlemen who think gold is very essential to currency than it is to me.

There is one other thing. I have seen a letter from the Comptroller of the Currency to a president of a bank, instructing him that the twenty-ninth section, which says no man shall own more than one tenth of the capital of a bank, or in other words, no one man shall be liable to a bank for more than one tenth of the capital—that that section does not apply to an indorsement or any collateral liabilities. The consequence is that a man by putting forward a straw promisor and becoming an indorser, by giving collateral security of stock or otherwise to such borrowers, may actually become liable to the bank for the whole capital. And one bank has actually been crushed by that operation. In other words, the present construction of the Comptroller of the Currency, as I understand it, will allow every bank to discount or loan its whole capital to any one man, provided he appears in the character of an indorser and not a promisor. I desire to get this matter of information before the House for its action. In that regard it is only a resolution of inquiry.

Mr. DELANO. I ask the gentleman to give me an opportunity to explain what the Comptroller has done in regard to the first proposition. I will not occupy five minutes.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Have I misstated it?

Mr. DELANO. You have not stated every part of it as he stated it to me.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask if this whole matter cannot be discussed when the answer of the Comptroller comes in?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is entitled to the floor for an hour.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I would yield with pleasure, but I do not like to hold the floor and take up the time on the only day in the week when the rules can be suspended. I will give three minutes to my friend.

Mr. DELANO. In regard to the first branch of this resolution I wish to say a few words. The fifth section of the act authorizing the issue of bonds to the Pacific railroad declares "that for the purpose herein mentioned the Secretary of the Treasury shall" "issue to said company bonds of the United States of $1,000 each, payable in thirty years after date, bearing six per cent. per annum interest," &c., interest payable in currency. These are registered bonds.

The fourth section of the act creating national banks passed two years afterward, June 8, 1864, provides "that the term 'United States bonds,' as used in this act, shall be construed to mean all registered bonds now issued or that may hereafter be issued on the faith of the United States by the Secretary of the Treasury in pursuance of law."

I do not wish now to reply to the interjective arguments of the gentleman from Massachusetts; but every lawyer who has examined this law knows that these are registered bonds and are legal as a banking basis. Now, what the Comptroller has done under the law, briefly stated, is this: there are now held as security for the notes of national banks the following bonds: of the five-twenty bonds and the bonds of 1881, $238,620,000, which have been received at ninety per cent. Their market value is from 107 to 109, leaving a margin of about seventeen to eighteen per cent. There are of ten-forty bonds $87,321,000, which have been taken at 85. Their market value is from 105 to 106, leaving a margin of from nineteen to twenty per cent. There are of the Pacific railroad bonds $16,382,000, the market value of which is from 100 to 101. They have been taken, as the gentleman has said, at eighty cents. The best margin on any of these three classes of bonds is on the Pacific railroad bonds. There are but $16,000,000 of them deposited with the Comptroller. They are clearly authorized by law, and this seems to me an unjust and needless attack upon the Comptroller of the Currency. I have no objection to a resolution calling simply for information, but I want these facts to go before the country with the attack that seems to be made on the Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. In the first place, I have made no attack. I have only said that this thing is done. I do not think that bonds which are payable in currency and understood to be payable in currency, and which were not issued for this purpose, should be used as security, and thus antagonize United States bonds. I want those gentlemen, in other words, who say "let us have gold," to keep gold in the Treasury and not put in currency. Do not let the banks throw in bonds payable at a discount of thirty-five per. cent. currency in place of bonds payable in gold. I am not going to argue whether it is best for the United States or not. If it was best for the United States to have such bonds the bankers would not put them there. They know what they are about; they are quite up to their interests, and the difficulty is that we have no one at the Treasury to guard the interests of the people against the banks.

Mr. DELANO. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the five-twenties are payable in gold? [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I have said nothing upon that subject. I am talking of the ten-forties. Oh, it is very easy to laugh on this subject; but it is a time when in my judgment the Treasury is being robbed and the people are being robbed by these banks, and we have no one to guard the Treasury against the banks. The Treasurer and Comptroller are both acting as if the paid and hired servants of the banks, in my judgment, and are doing their business, because I cannot understand why this exchange of bonds was made unless they are. I yield now to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. PAINE.]

Mr. PAINE. According to the statement which the gentleman from Massachusetts has made, the laws of the United States authorize the Comptroller to receive in exchange for other bonds of the United States these bonds issued to the Pacific railroad and allow currency thereon up to within ten per cent. of their market value; and further than that, the gentleman asserts that the value of these bonds is now almost one hundred and one per cent., and that they have been received in exchange for other bonds, allowing circulation of eighty cents on the dollar for them. As I understand the resolution before the House it is a House resolution. I have been to the Clerk's desk and read these words which attracted my attention when the resolution was read by the Clerk, namely, "and such exchange shall cease till further action of the House." Now, what have we before us? We have a law authorizing the Comptroller, according to the gentleman's own statement, to do this very thing.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I beg your pardon; I have not said so.

Mr. PAINE. I understood the gentleman to say so. But I will read the law for which I have just sent.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] read the law.

Mr. PAINE. Then I will simply state the effect of the law, about which there can be no doubt. The Comptroller, if in his opinion it may be done without prejudice to the United States, is at liberty to receive these bonds as the basis of circulation from the national banks in exchange for other bonds of the United States. It seems that he has exercised his judgment in this matter, and now the gentleman from Massachusetts comes in here, and by his House resolution proposes to repeal that law. We cannot do it. It may be that the Comptroller of the Currency has made a mistake; it may be that he has judged erroneously in this matter. But if so, we must by an act of Congress or a joint resolution render it impossible for him to do what he has done.

But let us see whether he has been mistaken, even taking the gentleman's own statement as true. He says the bonds are worth to-day one hundred and one cents on the dollar, and that the Comptroller of the Currency allows circulation upon them not at the rate of ninety cents on the dollar as the law permits, but only at the rate of eighty cents on the dollar, whereas, according to his statement, he allows ninety cents of circulation for five-twenty bonds and eighty-five cents for seven-forties. Now, who shall say that in view of this margin which has been made by the Comptroller of the Currency as against these bonds his judgment has not been a wise one, or that it has been prejudicial to the interests of the country for him to take this course?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I by no means agree that the law is as has been stated by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO,] or by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. PAINE.] The law was passed allowing all registered bonds to be deposited as security for national bank circulation when there were no Pacific railroad bonds issued.

Mr. DELANO. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I am not mistaken.

Mr. DELANO. The Pacific railroad bonds were provided for long before the law was passed.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I did not say anything about that. I said "when there were no Pacific railroad bonds issued;" and the gentleman knows that statement is correct. I am dealing with the question of time. Before a single Pacific railroad bond was issued this law was passed; and no man in the country then thought the currency bonds—unless the five-twenty bonds are to be regarded as payable in currency—no man thought the non-gold-bearing bonds were to be deposited as security for currency, which we hoped would soon or in time come up to the gold standard.

Then there was an act passed allowing the exchange of bonds, which exchange was to be made when the Comptroller of the Currency should think it best to have such an exchange made. Then we could not hear, without a resolution asking him to report to us, what he has been doing. And we propose that he shall not continue to exercise his discretion in this matter until we have examined his report. And when the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. PAINE] speaks of this being simply a House resolution, I want to know what he means. Cannot the House of Representatives control the discretion of one of the subordinate executive officers? I think that any House would say to any subordinate officer that if he undertook to act after it had requested him not to act he did it at his peril. That is ordinarily done at every session—I might say on every day of the session. We discussed a resolution but the other day directing the Postmaster General not to pay Wells, Fargo & Co. until an investigation of their contract could be had.

Mr. Speaker, when I see the advocates of banking on this floor coming forward so earnestly, with prepared arguments written out for them, coming here with a written argument—

Mr. DELANO. The gentleman makes a statement not warranted by the facts.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That argument was written by the Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. DELANO. There was no argument written by anybody.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I take it back; there was no "argument," it was a written paper. It was not an argument at all. There was no argument in it. The gentleman is right, and I was wrong.

Mr. DELANO. I simply quoted the law.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The paper was written by the Comptroller. Am I not right in that? Well, these banking advocates come here with a prepared statement to meet a resolution of inquiry. That shows that the gentlemen understood how the bank interest is in this matter, in which the people are so much interested. I now call the previous question.

Mr. SCHENCK. As no argument is to be allowed, I ask that a portion of this resolution be again read.

Mr. BINGHAM. I hope the previous question will not be seconded.

Mr. JULIAN. Let the previous question be voted down.

Mr. PAINE. The motion to suspend the rules was carried because the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] promised to allow discussion. At least I so understood, and for that reason I did not vote against suspending the rules.

Mr. SCHENCK. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Certainly. I will withdraw the call for the previous question, and yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SCHENCK. I am not an advocate of the banks, nor have I prepared arguments upon this subject. But I undertake to say that this resolution is very defective in form and matter. It calls upon the Comptroller of the Currency to give certain information, and then goes on to say that certain things he has been doing shall cease. Now, whether he is to give information whether those things are going to cease, or whether that is intended as legislation by this House to compel him to cease, is very uncertain, because the expression is very ambiguous. If it be a direction to him to cease doing a certain thing, all I have to say is that if he is authorized to do it by law, with all our power we have none to compel him to cease doing it. That can only be done by law, either by an enactment in the form of a law, or the passage of a joint resolution by the two Houses, which has the force of law. If he has no power by law to do it, then that part of the resolution, does not mean anything. I will ask the Clerk to read the first part of the resolution, so as to show how ambiguous it is. And that ambiguity arises from the fact that it is an interlineation after the resolution was originally drawn, and makes obscure what before was plain enough.

The Clerk read the resolution.

Mr. SCHENCK. The Comptroller is to inform this House so and so, "and such exchange shall cease." If he has the right to do it by law the House of Representatives have not the power to do it by law, but must call in the aid of the other branch of Congress. If he has not the power by law, then that part of the resolution has no effect whatever, and might as well not have been interlined in the resolution at all.

I hope the gentleman will allow this resolution to be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, or some other appropriate committee, for a report of this matter in a clearer form.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. To send the resolution to the Committee on Banking and Currency I have already found by experience, Mr. Speaker, is to consign it to the sleep that knows no waking. That committee has so little to do with $300,000,000 of currency in circulation and sixteen hundred banks that another committee is occupying its room. I have been here long enough to know that it is an every-day business in our legislation to give directions to subordinate departments of the Government. The Comptroller is not compelled by law to do this thing. If he were, he would be obliged to do it in spite of our resolution; but he is only authorized to do it; and we are trying to instruct his judgment. This House of Representatives having the whole revenues of this country in its hands has the ordinary control over the subordinate departments of the Government and can direct, for an example, that no more iron-clads shall be built by the Navy, and a thousand like things. This resolution is to meet the case where the law requires it to be done; but where the law only permits it to be done I do not see the objection.

Now, Mr. Speaker, so far as that portion is concerned which directs the Comptroller to cease this practice, I have no objection to its being taken out of the resolution. If it turns out he continues after this notice, I will take care that he shall be brought before the House to be dealt with in quite a different way. I will strike out so much as directs the practice shall cease, and then ask that the resolution shall be put on its passage. I demand the previous question.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I suggest to my colleague that the resolution be addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, and not to a subordinate officer of the Treasury Department.

And while I am up I will take this opportunity of saying that I am in favor of the resolution in all its branches, and particularly in the latter branch, in regard to the conversion of national banks into State banks. Two weeks ago I introduced a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for information in regard to a particular bank, which I understand originally was a State bank. It organized under the national banking law with a capital of $350,000, deposited $350,000 in bonds, and took out $315,000 in circulation; then immediately converted itself back into a State bank and announced to the Comptroller that it had no longer any existence as a national bank, and refused to make any returns to him, and when called on to return the circulation replied it would do so as soon as it could.

Mr. PRICE. I wish to make a statement, not for my own satisfaction, but when a declaration goes out from the House of Representatives, a part of the law-making power of this land, that a national bank can organize with a capital of $350,000, deposit that amount of bonds with the Comptroller, receiving therefor circulating notes, and the next day or the next week may abandon its national bank charter and commence business as a State bank, I wish the country to know that before they can do that they must return every dollar of circulation they have received, or, if they fail to return the exact circulation they have received, they must return an equal amount of legal-tender notes for that circulation. I want that to go out in connection with the other facts stated, so that there may be no uneasiness in the mind of any man, whether in the mercantile community or otherwise. When a national bank abandons its charter it must return to the Treasury of the United States every dollar of circulation it received in the notes which it received or in legal-tender notes of an equal amount, and when that is known to the country then there will be no uneasiness or agitation in reference to this matter at all.

I regret, Mr. Speaker, that I have not an opportunity in reference to this resolution to say something in defense of the Comptroller of the Currency, if, indeed, he needs any. He is executing the law as it stands. I do not object to the resolution, but I do object to instructing him to do what the law compels him to do; and that no one knows better than my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We have already taken up too much time with this resolution. The law does not compel him to do it; but he is authorized to do it, and not compelled.

A single word as to the vexed question of the exchange of banks. While the law compels the money to be returned, they have a right to a year to return it; and they make this change in view of getting into liquidation so as to get out of the laws of the United States when specie payment is resumed. I demand the previous question.

Mr. BARNES. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for three minutes.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I decline to yield further.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

W. W. CORCORAN.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I ask unanimous consent to report, from the Committee on Appropriations, a joint resolution in relation to the lands and other property of W. W. Corcoran, of the District of Columbia, used by the United States Government during and since the war of the rebellion.

The joint resolution, which was read, instructs the Secretary of the Treasury to withhold any and all payments of money for the use of lands and buildings in the District supposed to belong to the said W. W. Corcoran and taken possession of by the War Department during and since the rebellion for national purposes until the further action of Congress.

Mr. WOOD. I object.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move that the rules be suspended to allow me to report that joint resolution, and in order that it may be put on its passage at this time.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCOFIELD, from the Committee on Appropriations, then reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 413) in relation to the lands and other property of W. W. Corcoran, in the District of Columbia, used by the United States Government during the war of the rebellion; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. SCOFIELD demanded the previous question on the passage of the joint resolution.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCOFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. CHURCHILL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a list of public lands held, &c., under act of March 30, 1868, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Revision of Laws of the United States.

The motion was agreed to.

CHARLES MAUS.

On motion of Mr. MILLER, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the papers in the case of Charles Maus, of Lewisburg, Pennsylvania; and the same were referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and the War of 1812.

NEW YORK ELECTIONS.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I rise to submit a report from the Committee on Reconstruction.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for the purpose of submitting a resolution.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Alleged Election Frauds in New York be, and hereby is, authorized to report at any time.

Mr. BROOKS. I object.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his objection.

Mr. BROOKS. We will have inextricable confusion if every committee is allowed to report at any time.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I give notice that when I get the floor I shall move to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing this resolution.

VIRGINIA AND TEXAS.

Mr. BOUTWELL, from the Committee on Reconstruction, reported back Senate joint resolution No. 173, respecting the provisional governments of Virginia and Texas, with an amendment.

The joint resolution provides that all persons now holding civil offices in the provisional governments of Virginia and Texas who cannot take and subscribe the oath prescribed by the act entitled "An act to prescribe an oath of office, and for other purposes," approved July 2, 1862, shall on the passage of this resolution be removed therefrom; and it shall be the duty of the district commander to fill all vacancies so created by the appointment of persons who can take such oath.

The amendment was read as follows:

Add as follows:

Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to persons who by reason of the removal of their disabilities, as provided in the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, shall have qualified for any office in pursuance of the act entitled "An act prescribing an oath of office for persons from whom legal disabilities shall have been removed," approved July 11, 1868: And provided further, That this act shall not take effect until thirty days from and after its passage.

Mr. BOUTWELL demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The amendment was agreed to; and the joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BOUTWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUFFRAGE.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I purpose on Saturday next, if the business of the House will permit, immediately after the reading of the Journal, to call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill to amend the Constitution in relation to suffrage was recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, for the purpose of beginning the debate and pressing the bill to a vote, if possible, as early as Tuesday next.

MR. WELLS'S REPORT.

Mr. SCHENCK, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which, under the law, was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That in addition to the usual number of copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, together with the accompanying tables, there be printed three thousand copies for the use of the Commissioner and three thousand copies for the use of the House.

NEW YORK ELECTION—AGAIN.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Alleged Election Frauds in New York be, and hereby is, authorized to report at any time.

Mr. BROOKS. I withdraw my objection to the introduction of the resolution.

The resolution was received and adopted.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Before moving to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union I move to suspend all rules which require the executive, legislative, and judicial appropriation bill to be read through the first time.

Mr. BROOKS. Is not that an unusual proceeding?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. No, sir.

Mr. BROOKS. There has been nothing like it in the history of the country.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. It is generally done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BROOKS. There has been nothing like it in the history of the whole country. We have allowed the gentleman to make a Navy and Army bill at his pleasure, and now he wants to make one of the large general appropriation bills.

Mr. GARFIELD. That does not waive points of order.

The SPEAKER. It does not. They are reserved.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I made the motion for the purpose of accommodating a colleague of the gentleman from New York.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 19; no quorum voting.

Mr. BROOKS. I will not call for the reading of the bill; but I want to avoid this precedent.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. SCOFIELD, and Mr. TRIMBLE, of Kentucky.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 86, noes 24.

So (two thirds voting in favor thereof) the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I now move that all general debate on the bill be closed at four o'clock this afternoon.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to make a word of explanation having reference to the Daily Globe report of some remarks made by me on Friday last on the subject of freight charges across the Mississippi river at Dubuque. I am made to say that—"There is a graduated scale of tolls established for that bridge, the minimum being less than twenty cents per hundred, and the maximum only reaching seventy-seven cents per one hundred thousand. Now, it is well known to every man who has transported any products from the East to the West, or the West to the East, even to and from Dubuque only, that it has cost on the average ten dollars a ton."

The facts are that the minimum rate of charges across the river by the railroad bridge alluded to are or may be much less than twenty cents per ton, and the maximum rate by contract cannot exceed seventy cents per ton, instead of seventy-seven cents per hundred, as stated in the Globe. The average cost of transportation for a series of years by other modes has amounted to about one dollar per ton and not ten dollars, as stated, costing more than one dollar per ton during the winter months, and less during the season of navigation. The statement as it appears in the Globe would justify the complaints said to have been made by a citizen of Iowa, while the facts do not justify any complaint. I find no fault with the reporters, as I think in my remarks I may have inadvertently used the word hundred instead of ton.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report a bill (H. R. No. 1738) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1870, and to move its reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that it be ordered to be printed.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to reserve all points of order on that bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move to suspend the rules, so that it may be introduced free of all points of order.

Mr. MAYNARD. Is there not a motion pending to go into committee?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I withdraw that motion, as I deem this Indian appropriation bill important.

The SPEAKER. The motion to suspend the rules is not in order now, because the bill is not in committee. The Committee on Appropriations is authorized to report for reference only. It must be referred, and the gentleman from Tennessee has a right to demand the reading of the entire bill.

The bill was received and read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I now move that the bill be made a special order in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for Monday next, after the morning hour.

Mr. BROOKS. I object. The object is to suspend the rules on that day in order to dispense with the reading of the bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will not move to suspend the rules in order to dispense with the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. A majority of the House can make a general appropriation bill a special order.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The debate on the constitutional amendment will come up on Monday.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That is in the House, while this is in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I trust no order will be made by the House which will interfere with the debate on the constitutional amendment when once entered upon. It seems to me it is a matter of such moment that we should at least have one or two days for its consideration.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman's bill is not in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It is not.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. This, then, has nothing to do with that bill.

The SPEAKER. When Monday arrives a motion to suspend the rules is in order to go into committee, although there may be a bill before the House.

The motion was disagreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I ask unanimous consent to make a personal explanation. There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. Speaker, I am reported in the National Intelligencer, and other papers, as saying in the debate on the Niagara ship-canal bill, that "I was sorry to say that one of the Secretaries of the General Government should so far pander to the interest of the schemers as to use the reports of Mr. Brega." I used no such language, or any language capable of such construction in that debate. I have always regarded the honorable Senator referred to by me in that debate as incapable of such conduct or motives, and I take this first opportunity to correct any unfavorable impression that may have been derived from that report.

Mr. BANKS. I ask that a letter be read in reference to this explanation.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object to the precedent of having letters read to the House from private individuals; it would occupy all our time. I suppose the letter offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is the denial of Mr. Brega that he is the agent of the Canadian Government, and I have no objection to that fact going upon the record, which will answer every purpose.

Mr. BANKS. I ask that the letter be read; it will not take a moment.

Mr. PIKE. I object.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. SCHENCK in the chair) and proceeded to the consideration of House bill No. 1673, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1870.

The CHAIRMAN stated that the House had ordered the first reading of the bill to be dispensed with, and that the general debate should be closed at four o'clock.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, occasionally since holding a seat here I have objected to propositions on the ground of their unconstitutionality without having the opportunity to state at the time to the House my reasons for this opinion. Though having a clear idea of the correctness of the position, the peculiar nature of our rules and the bad practice of conducting business have not allowed me the privilege of conveying it to others.

I propose now, sir, to occupy the time allotted to me in an effort to explain the principles which have governed my votes on such questions and which shall hereafter govern them. I am controlled in my conduct as a member of Congress by certain fixed and unalterable laws, believing that we are here simply as the agents of others; that the powers we possess are delegated, not original; delegated not only because we are the Representatives of our constituents, but, what is far more important, delegated because they were originally derived from a source which at the time expressly declared in terms that they were delegated and prescribed and restricted to certain limits within which they should be exercised for certain specific objects.

I intend no personal disrespect when I say that gentlemen appear to know little of this theory of the Government and overlook altogether the fundamental conditions upon which a Congress of the United States was allowed to have any existence whatever. It would be well if occasionally, at least, some time should be devoted to an examination of this subject, that the source, nature, and extent of the authority vested in us should be made the subject of dispassionate reasoning, careful scrutiny, and thoughtful consideration. In the limited time allowed me in this discussion it would be impossible for me to do this, admitting that I had the necessary abilities. It is a great theme; one that has employed the best intellects in the earlier and better days of the Republic. At that time it was deemed so important to public education that the student of learning was taught it with the elements of grammar. Nor was there any question raised in those days as to the nature of the trust given to the Federal Government, the only difference of opinion being whether the Constitution should be liberally or literally construed. Whatever differences existed as to the Constitution were comprehended within these limits.

There were but two schools of political thinkers, namely, the strict constitutionists and the latitudinarians. The most daring of the latter never declared that that instrument took from the States or the people thereof the least control over their own domestic institutions or clothed the Federal Government with authority over the territory of the States or over the vested and private rights of the citizens acquired under the State laws. He would have been held up to public scorn or ridicule who would have in either of these regards sought to subvert the simple agency of the delegated and restricted power conferred upon Congress to a purpose altogether at war with the designs and interests of those who conferred those powers. It is not thus now! We have no discussions of nice distinctions of the origin and character and limitation of the grant. The late war, which for the times submerged every other public question, appears to have deluged such as these, and to have obliterated forever all such considerations, leaving the Federal Government omnipotent and all-powerful to do anything under the sun without check or qualification. Upon this hypothesis Congress is now acting. "Might makes right." Whatever men want to do this is the place where they apply for permission to do it. Propositions are being continually presented to each House for the accomplishment of every conceivable selfish object and for every possible purpose.

I am not at random in thus characterizing what is occurring. The facts fully justify the statement; the Journals of each House show the record, and these records contain the evidence of the prevailing spirit of the times. Attempts are being made to use the central authority resident here for objects outside of our powers and which are antagonistic to the public good, and which to grant would be a betrayal of the rights and interests of those we represent. Among such schemes I class the bills to incorporate the railroad companies with authority to run through the States; an act to establish the "National Life Insurance Company of the United States," with authority to locate itself in any State in the Union; the proposition introduced in the Senate on January 8 for the General Government to buy up all the cotton grown in the country; the law to establish the Freedmen's Bureau; the Bureau of Education; the appropriation of money for eleemosinary purposes; to dispense subsidies in land, bonds, or money to railroad companies; to appropriate $5,000,000 in bonds to the Sutro tunnel scheme; to establish and control the telegraph system of the United States; and many other propositions of a like kind.

We have no power to legislate over these questions. It requires no lengthy argument to prove this. The instrument itself is so plain and emphatic with reference to the character of the authority given, as well as to that not given, that it is only necessary to state them to furnish all the evidence any honest mind can require.

The solemn interstate compact which preceded the organic law, and from which the Constitution may be said to have sprung, laid the foundation of the Federal Government. By the second article of the "Original Articles of Confederation" it was specially provided that—

"Each State retains its sovereignty, freedom, and independence; and every power, jurisdiction, and right which is not by this Confederation expressly delegated to the United States in Congress assembled."

The same spirit that caused this emphatic reservation to be incorporated in the original articles of the Union was carried into the convention which met subsequently at Philadelphia and made the present Constitution. The ninth and tenth articles of the amendments proposed at New York in 1789, and adopted by the States, provides—

"ART. 9. The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people."

"ART. 10. The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively or to the people."

If the full intent and meaning not only of these provisions, and indeed the whole scope and intent of the Constitution, require explanations, they are happily to be found in the Federalist, page 323, Dawson's edition. In the paper No. 44, written by Madison, who had more to do with the preparation and adoption in the Convention of that instrument than any other man, is found this remarkable summary of the powers of the Federal and State Governments as intended by its framers:

"The powers delegated by the proposed Constitution to the Federal Government are few and defined. Those which are to remain in the State government are numerous and indefinite. The former will be exercised principally on external objects, as war, peace, negotiation, and foreign commerce; with which last the power of taxation will for the most part be connected. The powers reserved to the several States will extend to all the objects which, in the ordinary course of affairs, concern the lives, liberties, and properties of the people, and the internal order, improvement, and prosperity of the State. The operations of the Federal Government will be more extensive and important in times of war and danger; those of the State governments in times of peace and security. As the former period will probably bear a small proportion to the latter, the State governments will here enjoy another advantage over the Federal Government. The more adequate, indeed, the Federal powers may be rendered to the national defense, the less frequent will be those scenes of danger which might favor their ascendancy over the governments of the particular States."

And this view of the relative powers of the two Governments is fully sustained by John Marshall, afterward the Chief Justice of the United States. In the debates in the Virginia convention, while considering the Constitution, he said, in reply to the opponents of its ratification, that—

"All the authority intended to be laid on the State governments (beside where an exclusive power is directly given to Congress) are contained in the tenth section of the first article."

And again, in the same debate, he said that a power resident in a State anterior to the adoption of the Constitution, and not taken away by the above-referred section, is necessarily continued in the State. (Elliot's Debates, vol. 3, pp. 389 and 390.)

It is unnecessary to add to these authorities. They are the highest and cannot be questioned, and cover the whole ground. The line is drawn sharp and positive. Our authority to do any thing within the States without their consent, except as provided for in the section referred to, is denied and has no valid existence whatever.

The bill proposing the incorporation of railroads to run from Washington to New York, and from Washington to Cincinnati, provides that they may pass through all the intervening States, and thus run through their territory without the consent of those States. No power is given Congress over any part of the territory of the States except, as is expressly declared, it shall be "purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State" for public purposes. Even in this District, where we exercise "exclusive legislation," the consent of the States had to be first obtained; and if we cannot exercise this authority for public purposes except with the consent of the States it is indisputable that we cannot impart it to a railroad company or to any other private or public enterprise.

If it shall be said that these bills do not propose that the General Government shall build these roads; that it is designed only to authorize private capitalists to do so and all that is intended is a simple act of incorporation, I reply that we cannot delegate authority we do not possess. We cannot authorize others to do anything which we cannot ourselves do. I can conceive of cases in times of insurrection or rebellion that the Federal authority can be exercised over and within loyal State limits.

This was done during the late war, though with doubtful legal right.

But I cannot admit that when no such public exigency exists Congress can assume any such authority, and if it has not the power to do so directly for governmental purposes it cannot delegate such powers to others for private purposes. The argument recently advanced by a distinguished Senator in behalf of the constitutional power of Congress to make these grants is based partly upon the theory that the roads to be constructed are for public purposes, and he finds in the authority conferred upon Congress to regulate commerce between the several States ample power to incorporate these companies. Now, it is well known that the Government has no necessity for such roads. Private enterprise furnishes all the facilities required for these objects. Neither public wants nor the necessities of commerce require the establishment of other means of communication. The supposed precedents which it is assigned justify these propositions have no analogy. There is no case, either in the political or judicial annals, which covers the principles involved in this.

That part of the honorable Senator's argument referring to the provisions of the Constitution which gives to Congress the power to regulate commerce between the States is an unfortunate reference for the success of his proposition. It is difficult to see how this clause of the Constitution can be construed to continue to impart authority such as this. The fact that the Government is nearly a hundred years old without any attempt of this character having been made until now seems to be sufficient proof that no one thought it had authority. The best interpretation of the designs of the framers of the Constitution and of the proper definition of its several provisions may be found in the Federalist. They were all written by the great leaders of the Convention which adopted that instrument, being themselves the authors of the language which composed it. Certainly no other commentary is required. I quote again from this authority in paper 41, of Dawson's edition, written by Madison, page 292. This explanation of the character of the power of Congress to regulate commerce between the States, &c., is thus stated:

"A very material object of this power was the relief of the States which import and export through other States from the improper contributions levied upon them by the latter. Were these at liberty to regulate the trade between State and State, it must be foreseen that ways would be found out to load the articles of import and export, during the passage through their jurisdiction, with duties which would fall on the makers of the latter and the consumers of the former. We may be assured by past experience that such a practice would be introduced by future contrivances; and both by that and a common knowledge of human affairs, that it would nourish unceasing animosities, and not improbably terminate in serious interruptions of the public tranquillity."

Thus it appears that nothing more was designed than that inasmuch as the power to regulate the foreign commerce of the country was to be placed in the hands of the Federal Government so it became necessary the States should be deprived of the opportunity of injuring each other by laying taxes and duties upon either foreign or domestic goods in transit from one to the other. This power was taken from them and given to the central authority. The principle involved has also been settled by the Supreme Court. It was declared in the Rock Island bridge case, reported in 6 McLean. Justice McLean delivered the opinion, which has never been controverted or criticized. He said:

"Under the commercial power Congress may declare what shall constitute an obstruction or nuisance by a general regulation, and provide for its abatement by indictments or information through the Attorney General; but neither under this power nor under the power to establish post roads can Congress construct a bridge over navigable water. This belongs to the local or State authority within which the work is to be done. But this authority must be so exercised as not materially to conflict with the paramount power to regulate commerce. If Congress can construct a bridge over a navigable water under the power to regulate commerce or to establish post roads, on the same principle it may make turnpikes or railroads throughout the country. The latter power has generally been considered as exhausted in the designation of roads on which the mails are to be transported; and the former by the regulation of commerce upon the high seas, and upon our rivers and lakes. If these limitations are to be departed from there can be no others except at the discretion of Congress."

These principles and others applicable were subsequently more fully stated in "Veasie vs. Moore," reported in 14 Howard. And as this opinion was not only rendered by a unanimous bench, but declares the extent of the powers of Congress under the clause to regulate commerce between the several States, I make the following extract from it:

"The phrase can never be applied to transactions wholly internal between citizens of the same community or to a polity and laws whose ends and purposes and operations are restricted to the territory and soil and jurisdiction of such community. Nor can it be properly concluded that because the products of domestic enterprise in agriculture or manufactures or in the arts may ultimately become the subjects of foreign commerce, the control of the means or the encouragements by which enterprise is fostered and protected is legitimately within the import of the phrase foreign commerce, or fairly implied in any investiture of the power to regulate such commerce. A pretension as far-reaching as this would extend to contracts between citizen and citizen of the same State, would control the pursuits of the planter, the grazier, the manufacturer, the mechanic, the immense operations of the collieries and mines and furnaces of the country; for there is not one of these avocations the results of which may not become the subjects of foreign commerce and be borne either by turnpikes, canals, or railroads from point to point within the several States toward an ultimate destination, like the one above mentioned. Such a pretension would effectually prevent or paralyze every effort at internal improvement by the several States; for it cannot be supposed the States would exhaust their capital and their credit in the construction of turnpikes, canals, and railroads, the remuneration derivable from which, and all control over which, might be immediately wrested from them, because such public works would be facilities for a commerce which, while availing itself of those facilities, was unquestionably internal, although indirectly or ultimately it might become foreign. The rule here given with respect to the regulation of foreign commerce equally excludes from the regulation of commerce between the States and the Indian tribes, the control over turnpikes, canals, railroads, or the clearing and deepening of watercourses exclusively within the States, or the management of the transportation upon and by means of such improvements. The design and object of that power, as evinced in the history of the Constitution, was to establish a perfect equality among the several States as to commercial rights, and to prevent unjust and invidious distinctions which local jealousies or local and partial interests might be disposed to introduce and maintain. These were the views pressed upon the public attention by the advocates for the adoption of the Constitution, and in accordance therewith have been the expositions of this instrument propounded by this court."

The argument often adduced in favor of a latitudinarian construction of the Constitution in cases of great necessity does not reach this case. The life of the nation is not imperiled by the manner in which the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company transacts its business or accommodates the traveling public, nor does the reasoning recently employed to sustain the legal-tender acts apply. In that case it has been said that Congress is clothed with the requisite power, as it is its duty, to do all things necessary to continue the Government in existence, and that the issue of what is termed legal-tenders was at the time absolutely necessary to this purpose. The defense enters a plea of higher necessity, virtually admitting that there was no legal justification, but that the public exigencies warranted a suspension, for that object, of the provisions of the Constitution. Indeed, this and many other legislative and executive doings of doubtful validity which the war produced was tolerated upon the ground that at that time they were absolutely necessary to prevent national death. But this is a time of profound peace, internal and external; we have neither foreign nor domestic war. The Government is on a peace basis, its late extended arms, which covered the whole land and absorbed nearly all the official authority of the nation, are withdrawn within the narrow limits in which the Constitution originally placed them.

Commerce is abundantly regulating itself; private capital and enterprise are reassuring their wonted channels, and that competition between man and man, which leaves to each the results of his own superior advantages, is, as of old, reasserting its control over the great interests of the people, and the Government cannot and should not step in between them. Government should not intrude its authority over the contests of private or State corporations. If Congress can incorporate companies for such purposes and with such privileges, so can it others. If the excuses for these grants are tenable like reasons will be found in favor of creating other companies to reach other points. If this business is entered into of regulating railroad fare and the mode and manner of conducting them it will, of course, be extended to every other enterprise. The Government cannot stop by the establishment of the proposed lines. It must go on, because it cannot be contended that such privileges shall be conferred exclusively on these and none others. Nor does it follow that the connection at Washington secures this objection. The same principle will warrant the creation of any roads which may be connected with these proposed Washington roads. Thus in time the entire railway interests of the country would be placed in the hands of those who could procure the franchise at this capital. It would be only necessary to connect them with some road that did connect with the Washington road. The immense investments already made in such property would become depreciated, for existing lines could not compete with the overshadowing advantages thus conferred. Members of Congress would be continually solicited to bestow further privileges, and it is not too much to say that stupendous combinations would be made here which would "bull and bear" the value of shares for the benefit of those who could influence legislation.

Under the principle thus sought to be established every other department of private enterprise can be invaded. The Federal Government can authorize the construction of mills, and indeed the prosecution of every manner of commerce, trade, and manufacture under its protection. This great power when once invoked cannot be stopped. The keen witted speculator and the energetic adventurer would find means to seize it and use it for their own purposes. As against such a gigantic patron private enterprise would be obliged to succumb. We have already proof of this in the effect upon the business of life insurance, by the creation of the mammoth corporation of this kind which Congress authorized at its last session. I declared at the time of its passage in this House that the grant conferred upon the few persons named as incorporators was worth $5,000,000; my voice was not heeded, and under the whip and spur of the previous question it was forced through without debate or discussion. This company presents itself to the people of the United States as a national institution, indorsed and sustained by the authority of the General Government. This gives it a character for solvency possessed by none other; people praise it and patronize it to the exclusion of others equally respectable and trustworthy. There can be no successful competition with it; in time it will absorb nearly the whole of that business.

Nor is this the only objection to this proposition. Not only will it open the door to every kind of similar legislation, but it will also enlarge the sphere of existing abuses. As wicked as has been the practice recently in the adoption of measures favoring the corrupt interests of the country, what has occurred will be nothing as compared with those that will follow. The recent practice of the Government in donating immense tracts of land and in dispensing moneyed favor to railroad and other speculators is a shameful abuse. To such an extent has this already been carried that it has attracted the attention and consideration of the people throughout the nation. The enormity of these swindles, under the plea of public good, is startling. To enumerate them would be almost impossible. I cannot, however, allow the opportunity to pass without referring to a few. The original Pacific railroad grant itself may be said to be the great father of these infamous schemes of the railroad class. However meritorious and desirable the erection of such a road may be, no honest man can justify the abuses which have been practiced by those who have charge of its construction, and more especially the precedent established in the subsidy system. This giant work has been built altogether by Government favor, and yet its franchises, its property, and its profits are exclusively in the hands of individuals. The Government itself does not own one foot of it, nor can it, as such, derive the least advantage from its existence. The work is so stupendous that it requires no stretch of imagination to see that when completed it will control the many great States through which it will pass, as well as those at either terminus. Already, though not yet finished, its power is felt in this House, being represented here by members elected for no other purpose than to promote and protect its interests. The press of the country has been made stipendiary upon its favor, and even the Executive Departments are not freed from its influence. We have invoked a demon whom we cannot suppress if we would, and done it, too, under the pretext of public good. From this bad beginning has flown other and kindred evils. Minor franchises and favors have been dispensed to other companies tributary to or in some pretended way connected with the mother road. The Sioux City branch is one of them. Though in no way a Pacific road, it has participated directly in the bounties granted to that road. It is a private enterprise, and yet it has already received from the Secretary of Treasury, by the way of subsidy, bonds at the rate of $16,000 per mile, and land from the Secretary of the Interior at the rate of twelve thousand eight hundred acres per mile; and by legislation already completed this branch, in violation of law, is regularly receiving its proportion of such subsidy, and claims the whole, namely, $1,600,000 and one million two hundred and eighty thousand acres of land.

The favors extended to the Burlington and Missouri river extension are also of the same character. In the amended Pacific railroad act of 1864 an amendment was adopted authorizing this company to extend its line from a point on the Missouri river, near Nebraska City, westward to a point near Fort Kearny, or any point east of the hundredth meridian. The distance was about one hundred and fifty miles, and the land grant twelve thousand eight hundred acres per mile. The then Secretary of the Interior, under suspicious circumstances, withdrew from sale not only all the land south of this road to the Nebraska line, but went over into Kansas and withdrew an immense tract there also. Between the Secretary and a United States Senator and their friends a territory large enough for a respectably sized State came near passing into the hands of a few speculators. The Legislature of Kansas spoiled this transaction by exposing it in time to prevent it. There was a similar attempted fraud in another direction. A company, acting indirectly and clandestinely under the provisions of the amended act of the Pacific charter, proceeded to build a road from Sacramento, via Stockton, to San José, a point not on the Pacific coast. The line was one hundred and twenty miles long, and it received a subsidy of $1,920,000 and a large grant of land beside. The Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston road, a speculation got up expressly as a swindle, was projected merely for the purpose of getting possession of the richest lands in the West. The portion of this road which lies in Kansas is one hundred and fifty miles long, and cost about twenty thousand dollars per mile to build, making a total cost of about three million dollars. It has already received five hundred thousand acres of land from the Government, worth five dollars per acre, one hundred and twenty-five thousand acres from the State of Kansas, worth three dollars per acre, and bonds to the amount of $900,000, comprehending a large sum over and above its cost. This company is now before the Senate modestly urging there the ratification of a treaty known as the Osage treaty, which enables this company to buy eight million acres of land at nineteen cents per acre, the payment having fifteen years to run. The value of these lands is about twelve million dollars.

The Cherokee neutral land job looms up as another similar "big thing" of almost equal magnitude, the details of which would occupy too much time to relate. Congress up to March last has granted in all to various southern and western States over fifty-seven million acres of land for railroad purposes. It has given beside seventeen million acres to canals and similar improvements. The Pacific railroad and its branches have received one hundred and twenty-four million acres, and if to this is added the even-numbered "sections" along those routes which the Secretary decided to be closed for settlement, it will appear that nearly one third of the entire public domain has been made over to the control of railroad companies. The Commissioner of the General Land Office, in referring to this subject, says:

"The quantity of land conveyed by these grants is of empire extent, exceeding in the aggregate by more than five million acres the entire surface of the six New England States added to the areas of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia. And that the grants to Pacific roads alone are within a fourth of being twice the area of England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, Guernsey, Jersey, the Isle of Man, and the isles of the British seas, and less than a tenth of being equal to the French empire proper."

So much for what has been done. Hundreds of similar schemes are pending in both Houses of Congress, awaiting favorable opportunities and the arrangement of suitable combinations to carry them through.

Such are the effects already produced by our lax discharge of duty. If Congress had adhered closely to its constitutional legislative functions no such array of shameful frauds upon the public interests as these could have been perpetrated. It is the assumption of doubtful powers that has opened the doors to such abuses. What was at first excused upon the ground of higher necessity, and submitted to only because of this seeming justification, has become incorporated into our practice and accepted as sufficiently warranted under the Constitution. That instrument is being constantly violated in our proceedings. The precedents recently established are accepted as sufficient authority, and thus at sea, "without chart or rudder," we are in danger of shipwreck and destruction. Though the fundamental law may, as it no doubt does, require amendment and modification in many ways to render it more directly applicable to the present extent of empire and the new order of things and the varied and diversified interests, yet so long as it is the law it must be adhered to in our proceedings. Better "bear those ills we have, than fly to others that we know not of." Better labor under the difficulties of an insufficient organization until properly reformed than to do that which will open the door to anarchy, national bankruptcy, and general demoralization.

It is a popular error to suppose that because great changes have recently come over the institutions and sectional relations of State communities the Constitution has been changed also; that what has been commonly known as State rights is now an exploded doctrine, and that the war settled all this against the States and in favor of the central power. Doubtless this may be true so far as men's wishes are concerned, but "the wish is only father to the thought" as yet; something further has to be done. The organic law can be altered only in the way provided by the law itself. Whether right or wrong, wise or unwise, applicable or inapplicable, it is the law, and must remain so until amended in the constitutional mode. Violence and the disruption of State communities cannot change the nature of the Federal Government, nor can the conduct of those intrusted with the administration of public affairs annul, increase, or decrease any of its powers. These are delegated and declared. They are few in number and limited in character. Neither armed resistance nor legislative encroachments can make it more or less than what they are, precisely as they are declared in the articles of compact. Once break down these barriers and the floodgates of centralization and despotism will assuredly be lifted and our liberties will perish forever. The decentralization of official rule is indispensable to the preservation of popular rights. Concentrated power is always unmindful of the privileges of the people. To secure fair and equal justice to all men it is necessary to disseminate the benefits of government, so that all, irrespective of class, section, caste, or station, shall alike participate in its favors and bear a proper share of its burdens.

The framers of our political organization had these sound and patriotic objects in view when the Union was constructed. The speeches and writings of the fathers of the Republic, who obtained our liberties and then, as by inspiration, brought out of chaos the solid form of this blessed instrument by which we exist, breathes this spirit and none other. There was no difference as to the nature and character of the Government it was intended to erect nor the least divergence in opinion as to the work itself when completed. Let us adhere to it! It is the safest as well as the only course consistent with our oaths of office. To violate its sacred provisions is to commit moral and legal perjury. We cannot do this; we are entrusted with high duties. The destinies of this great people are in our hands. The representatives of no Government in the world were ever clothed with such responsibilities. The recent internal conflict which so severely tested our national solidity has already disappeared, and its effects are gradually disappearing also. The people will do the rest; let us leave them alone. If we cannot legislate for their good do not do them harm. Their wonderful energy and intelligence will soon restore peace and prosperity if no obstacles are thrown in their way by unwise legislation here. They want to be let alone. Do not interfere by granting special privileges to the favored few. Even if the power exists to do wrong do not do it. If "that is the best Government which governs least" so will the people consider that the best Congress which throws the fewest difficulties in the way of the full development of private enterprise, leaving all men to struggle with each other in the pursuits of life according to their individual advantages, without Government aid or hindrance.

And now, in conclusion, let me turn my voice from this House and from Congress to the people and address to this fountain of all authority a few warning words. Look well, O king, to those who rule you! Be not deceived or led astray by the late false cry of executive tyranny or treachery. Your danger lies not in the President or in the courts, not in the "one man power," not in his followers, but in your own selected agents to be found here in this capital, the accredited law-makers of the land. It is legislative encroachments upon your liberties and property that you have the most cause to fear, and in which lies your greatest danger.

Nor was this evil entirely unanticipated by the great fathers of the Republic. With more than human prescience they saw it afar off and provided for it, as they thought, so far as possible in the Constitution itself. The great Madison made this remarkable reference to the danger of legislative tyranny which he thought was to be feared more than any other despotism under our form of Government. He said, in speaking on this subject:

"In a Government where numerous and extensive prerogatives are placed in the hands of an hereditary monarch the executive department is very justly regarded as the source of danger and watched with all the jealousy which a zeal for liberty ought to inspire. In a democracy, where a multitude of people exercise in person the legislative functions and are continually exposed by their incapacity for regular deliberation and concerted measures to the ambitious intrigues of their executive magistrates, tyranny may well be apprehended on some favorable emergency to start up in the same quarter. But in a representative republic, where the Executive magistracy is carefully limited both in the extent and the duration of its powers, and where the legislative power is exercised by an assembly which is inspired by the supposed influence over the people with an intrepid confidence in its own strength; which is sufficiently numerous to feel all the passions which actuate a multitude, yet not so numerous as to be incapable of pursuing the objects of its passions by means which reason prescribes, it is against the enterprising ambition of this department that the people ought to indulge all their jealousy and exhaust all their precautions."

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. McKEE. I move on page 4, line sixty-eight, to strike out the words, "for miscellaneous items, $15,000;" and I do it for the purpose of getting an explanation from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. We have in this bill every possible item of appropriation, and then, in addition, $15,000 for miscellaneous items. I desire to know what these miscellaneous items are. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has expressed himself in favor of economy, and he certainly should let us know for what purpose we are voting this money.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. This appropriation of $15,000 is much less than usual; and I will tell the gentleman that it is for a variety of purposes, for the payment of burial expenses, and for contested elections, and many other necessary expenses. We have cut those appropriations down to the lowest point possible.

Mr. McKEE. It may be that this item is in accordance with the precedents of former appropriation bills. But as to the expenses of contested elections, we always make an appropriation out of the contingent fund by a specific resolution. With regard to the Senate, I think there has been no contested election there for five years, and probably there will be none for the next ten years. I think that the appropriation as stated in the bill should be stricken out. I move, therefore, to amend by striking out "for miscellaneous items, $15,000."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. This item ought not to be stricken out. The Senate necessarily has these miscellaneous expenses, as we have. No one wants to give that body any more than it is entitled to.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PAINE. I take occasion to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] to the phraseology of the fifty-eighth line: "For stationery for committees, &c., $5,000." I suggest that the "&c." should be struck out.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman's suggestion is very proper. I hope the modification will be made by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection "&c." will be struck out.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For packing-boxes for the Senate and House of Representatives, $3,000: Provided, That each Senator, Member, and Delegate shall be entitled to receive only the value of ten dollars in packing-boxes each year.

Mr. McKEE. I move to amend by striking out the paragraph just read. I think no good reason, if any reason at all, can be urged for allowing Senators or Representatives ten dollars, or any other sum, for packing-boxes. Almost every gentleman who travels around this country furnishes his own packing-boxes, and there is no reason why a member of Congress should be allowed packing-boxes at the public expense. All our public documents, and everything of that kind, go off under our franks, and what these packing boxes are for is a matter which a great many members, including myself, have not found out.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. From time immemorial Congress has made an appropriation, and a pretty large one—much too large—for these packing-boxes. The Committee on Appropriations instituted some inquiry into this subject pending the preparation of this bill, and found that heretofore members have in many instances drawn for one session some twenty or thirty dollars' worth of packing-boxes each, which, to a considerable extent, were not for the personal use of the members. The committee came to the determination that ten dollars' worth of packing-boxes for each year would be amply sufficient for each member. This would allow about three packing-boxes to every member. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McKEE] must understand what these packing-boxes are for. They are to enable members to carry home congressional books for the use of their constituents.

Mr. McKEE. My understanding is that books published by authority of Congress are sent to our constituents through the mails.

Mr. MUNGEN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McKEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MUNGEN. I wish simply to know if the gentleman from Kentucky would require that our documents and books which naturally accumulate here should be sent home in carpet-bags. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKEE. That is not a question that is legitimate to the discussion. I suppose, however, that carpet-bags would be equally as legitimate and proper as pine boxes. The only interest I have in this matter is in reducing the expenses to the very lowest possible limit. I certainly can see no reason why we should appropriate $3,000, or any other sum, for packing-boxes for members. So far as I am concerned I certainly do not want any. I have not had ten dollars' worth nor five dollars' worth of packing-boxes since I became a member of the House, and I hope I never shall want any.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was disagreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask whether this proviso allows a member to commute for ten dollars if he does not take his boxes?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I move to strike it out.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It is too late; the House has just refused to strike it out.

Mr. RANDALL. I now propose to strike out simply the proviso. It is a mean way of increasing our pay. I have no objection to the boxes whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote of the committee was upon striking out the paragraph. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves now to strike out simply the proviso. That is in order.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to leave it so that members must take their boxes or get no benefit from this appropriation.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope this amendment will not be passed. There is a bit of history in connection with this outlay in the House. When I first came here, in the Thirty-Fifth Congress, I met a young gentleman from the Cincinnati district who has since become very eminent. One of the first efforts he made in the House, as I recollect, was to strike out the appropriation for packing-boxes, and the brilliancy of his oratory and the potency of his logic were such that the House struck it out.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman will excuse me, I have made no motion to strike out the appropriation. I know the boxes are very useful, but I do not want any privilege extended to members to take ten dollars surreptitiously, as I consider it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I understand my friend's proposition. I was about to observe that at the very next session, when the deficiency bill was reported, it was found that the item for boxes was contained in that bill. So that all the effect and value of the effort of that gentleman was entirely lost. It had the effect of bringing the gentleman before the House and before the country, and he came afterward to be a very prominent member and a luminary of his party; but so far as any advantage to the public Treasury was concerned it was entirely inoperative and ineffectual. I hope, therefore, the gentleman will not press this matter further.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to state that this proviso is only a limitation of the sum that we are in the habit of appropriating. Members will be entitled to some boxes, but not so many as heretofore. The committee have made an appropriation which is to cover boxes in both Houses of Congress. They have put a limitation to the appropriation, and have provided that each member shall receive only ten dollars' worth.

Mr. RANDALL. I will modify my amendment by leaving the proviso as it stands and adding these words to it: "and there shall be no commutation in money in lieu thereof."

Mr. HIGBY. I would inquire of the gentleman from Illinois how many boxes he proposes to allow to each member for the ten dollars.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Each member shall not be entitled to more than ten dollars' worth; he may get two or three boxes, according to the price.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not understand the gentleman to object to my amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I do not object to it.

Mr. POLAND. I have no sort of objection to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, for I do not think it changes the sense at all. The proviso reads, as it now stands:

Provided, That each Senator, Member, and Delegate shall be entitled to receive only the value of ten dollars in packing-boxes each year.

I understand the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to concede to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that if any member chooses not to take the boxes he would be entitled to take ten dollars. I think it is clearly an incorrect explanation of the bill as it now stands. I do not object to the amendment, but I deem it entirely unnecessary. It will not change the sense of the bill as it now stands.

Mr. RANDALL. My amendment is based on the construction which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations puts on this clause, and which is likely to be the construction put upon it by the officer who pays the money.

The question was put on Mr. RANDALL'S amendment; and it was disagreed to—ayes eighteen, noes not counted.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to move an amendment to the paragraph in relation to the House of Representatives. I move in line ninety to strike out the words "two assistant clerks" and insert "one assistant clerk" in lieu thereof.

Mr. ARNELL. I would ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if there is any increase of salaries to any of these officers?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. There is not any so far as I am advised, and I think I am pretty well advised on that subject.

Mr. BLAINE. Before the question is put I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether it was intended to make this bill conform in the number of officers to the estimates?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. This will make it conform to the estimates. There was a mistake in drawing the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to offer an amendment to make the bill conform to the estimates precisely as the gentleman from Illinois has corrected it by his amendment. The very next item reads: "twelve assistant clerks, (including the Librarian,) at $2,160 each." Now, the estimate is for "twelve assistant clerks, Librarian, and Assistant Librarian, at $2,160 each." The bill, therefore, provides for two officers less for the Forty-First Congress than there are for the Congress of to-day. I move to strike out the words "including the Librarian" and to insert the words "the Librarian and Assistant Librarian;" so as to make it conform to the estimates and read, "twelve clerks, the Librarian, and the Assistant Librarian, at $2,160 each." That will make it conform exactly to the estimates, to the existing organization of the House, and to the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman observe that that will give the Assistant Librarian the same salary as the Librarian?

Mr. BLAINE. It was made so last session.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The bill, as I understand it, and as the committee understood it, conforms to the existing law. The estimates are not the law, and this is making an additional office.

Mr. BLAINE. I beg pardon; the gentleman just now quoted the estimates as the basis on which he made a correction in the bill—the same estimates on which I propose to make this correction. I want the bill to correspond exactly to the estimates, to the present organization of the House, and to the law itself, which is the presumed basis of all estimates. I hope, therefore, that my friend from Illinois will allow this amendment to be passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I am afraid the gentleman's "friend from Illinois" will not allow it.

Mr. BLAINE. Well, I hope the committee will adopt it.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I am sorry my friend from Maine was not with the Committee on Appropriations when they passed upon this bill. If he had been there he would not have deemed it necessary to make the objection he is now making. If he will look at the law of last year he will find that the present bill conforms to it precisely. It reads, "twelve assistant clerks (including the Librarian) at $2,160 each." There is not any Assistant Librarian at all.

Mr. BLAINE. A joint resolution passed both branches of Congress, and upon that resolution this estimate was made up by the Clerk of the House and sent to the Treasury Department, and it comes as regularly authenticated an estimate as any other.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Perhaps I can now understand my friend from Maine. Does he refer to the Librarian here, on this floor?

Mr. BLAINE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Well, then, my friend is not quite as familiar with the subject as I supposed he was. He got through the resolution he speaks of, but it expires with this Congress, and hence we had no right to put the appropriation in this bill.

Mr. BLAINE. It is the same kind of a law as those by which the salaries of the Door-keeper and other officers of the House have been regulated. It is precisely according to precedents and the estimates, which are made up with great care, and which the gentleman always rests on when they favor his side of the case—exactly conform to it. It is only because he has made one amendment to correct the bill according to the estimates that I desire to make another amendment in order that the bill may conform to the estimates in that respect.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to see if I understand this matter. This paragraph provides for "twelve assistant clerks." I do not understand that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] proposes to increase that number of clerks.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not. In the House, under the present organization, there are twelve assistant clerks, and a Librarian and Assistant Librarian.

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not understand the estimates to read that way.

Mr. BLAINE. The estimates say, "twelve assistant clerks."

Mr. MAYNARD. "Including the Librarian."

Mr. BLAINE. No, sir; that is in the bill, not in the estimates. The estimates read, "For twelve assistant clerks, Librarian and Assistant Librarian," which make fourteen officers, just as the House is organized to-day.

Mr. MAYNARD. As this bill is drawn, there are to be only twelve assistant clerks, one of whom is to be the Librarian.

Mr. BLAINE. Which is two less than the House now has.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I think I can make the committee understand this matter. After they understand it, if they desire to increase the force of the House, they can do it. My friend from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] at the last session of Congress got through a joint resolution, as follows:

"Resolved, &c., That for the present Congress, commencing therewith, the Clerk is directed to pay from the contingent fund of the House to the Assistant Librarian, in charge of the Hall library, the difference between his present pay and the pay of the file, printing, and engrossing clerks."

Just notice how it reads, "For the present Congress," and for that only. Now, while that joint resolution creates that office for the present Congress, my friend from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] seeks to put this officer in the general appropriation bill, and make him a permanent officer.

Mr. BLAINE. I would inquire of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] if he ever knew the pay of an officer of this House to be regulated in any other way than the way in which the salary of this particular officer was fixed? I know there has been an attempt made to have a joint committee of the two Houses to take into consideration the subject of the number and pay of the officers of the two Houses. But nothing has been done in that way yet. All the officers of the House, ever since its organization, have received their pay in just this way. I would ask how could the House provide for the pay of its officers except in this way, from Congress to Congress?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The point is simply this: my friend from Maine got this resolution passed to pay his friend, the Assistant Librarian over there—a most excellent young man, and whom I should be glad to see flourish in all conditions of life—to pay him during this Congress. After he has got that through Congress, he now comes forward and proposes to make the office permanent by having it put in the general appropriation bill. Now, there is no law that authorizes us to put it in this bill. If it is put in there it will be without any law, and it will be making law.

Mr. MAYNARD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAYNARD. The person whom I regard as the most valuable in the House Library is a colored man.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It has nothing to do with him.

Mr. MAYNARD. In what capacity is he provided for?

Mr. BLAINE. He is to be paid as a messenger, further down in the list.

Mr. MAYNARD. If that be so, I humbly conceive that we have no use for a Librarian and Assistant Librarian in addition to this messenger.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment has closed.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. BLAINE; and upon a division there were—ayes seventy-eight.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will not call for a count of the noes, as I do not want to break up the committee, but will ask for a vote in the House. I want to see if the House will go on and increase the number of its clerks in this way.

Mr. PIKE. It is a very worthy object in this case.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It is to keep in a man from Maine; that is what it is. The amendment was declared to be adopted.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to further amend this paragraph by striking out the words "clerk to Committee of Claims, $2,160." The clerk to the Committee of Claims has come to be a salaried officer, by having been originally incorporated in an appropriation bill, according to my recollection, something like what we have just done by amending this bill in regard to the Assistant Librarian. In that point of view I think we are entirely at liberty now to approprate or not for the coming year as we please. The Committee of Claims at the time this clerk was first paid a salary was a much more important committee than it is at this day. The establishment of the Court of Claims has withdrawn from the committee a large portion of the business that it formally transacted. The amount of business now done by this committee is no more than that done by the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and various other committees of the House. If we strike out this appropriation in the bill we leave the clerk of the Committee of Claims to placed on precisely the same footing as his brother clerks of the various other committees; and that is the position which, in my judgment, he ought to occupy.

Mr. BINGHAM. Do I understand that the amendment is to reduce the pay of the clerk of the Committee of Claims?

Mr. MAYNARD. My motion is to strike out this clause entirely, leaving the clerk of the Committee of Claims on precisely the same footing as the clerks of the various other committees—the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee for the District of Columbia, &c.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The difficulty is that the gentleman proposes to strike out the salary, but not to abolish the office. The office is created by law.

Mr. MAYNARD. I stated in the first part of my remarks, which I presume the gentleman did not hear, that the only authority of law for the existence of this office is simply that an appropriation was once made for it, and has been continued for several years. When we stop the appropriation we discontinue the office at the same time.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to say, in reference to this subject, that I think Congress acted wisely in providing salaries for certain clerkships connected with this House. As members perhaps well know, I have had a connection with the Committee of Claims that has sat during the present Congress. The present clerk of the committee I found occupying the position; he had served before in the same capacity; but I desire to say that the position requires an amount of attention and knowledge not ordinarily demanded of clerks in the service of this House. I regard it as a piece of very poor economy to cut down the salary now allowed to the clerk of the Committee of Claims. My experience upon that committee—and I hope I may never serve upon it again, although I feel very much obliged to the House for appointing me to the position and feel very well pleased with my associations—enables me to say that a great deal of attention and experience is required on the part of the clerk to keep the records, &c.; of the committee. Give to that committee an unskilled clerk, one not familiar with its duties, and a very undue proportion of the time of the members of the committee will be required for the performance of the service which is now ordinarily performed by the clerk. The making up of an intelligent report which will challenge the investigation of the House and of every department of this Government is a task that cannot be performed at all by a person unaccustomed to such duty or not well qualified for it by previous education. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. MAYNARD. Will my friend from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] allow me to ask—for I had the honor of serving upon this committee till I begged off it; I served on it during two Congresses—whether in his opinion the clerk of this committee has any more arduous and responsible duties than the clerk of the Post Office Committee, for example, or of the Committee on Military Affairs, or the Committee on Foreign Affairs, or the Committee on Naval Affairs, or the Committee on Invalid Pensions, or, indeed, half a dozen others of the more prominent committees of the House?

Mr. BINGHAM. I think the clerk of the Committee of Claims has a great deal more service to perform than the clerk of the Committee on Military Affairs. I had the honor at one time to serve upon the latter committee, and I know something of its duties. As for the Post Office Committee, I know nothing about it. But the House is aware that an infinite number of claims come before the Committee of Claims, involving questions of law and of fact, thus imposing a large amount of duty upon the clerk of the committee. Indeed, unless he is in the first place a very competent man, and in the next place a very faithful man, the duties of the committee can scarcely be performed at all.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move in the ninety-sixth line to strike out "one messenger in the House Library, $1,095." That is in this bill by mistake. There is no law or occasion for it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask the gentleman from Illinois whether this is not included under the resolution referred to by the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. There is no office authorized by law which this appropriation covers.

Mr. SPALDING. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his motion.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I cannot withdraw it. It is an office which we do not need, and there is no reason for making the appropriation.

Mr. SPALDING. I say that he is the most faithful man we have about the House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I do not deny that; but the man we have there is paid, and paid well.

Mr. MAYNARD. He is of more assistance than anybody connected with the Library, and I trust that the House will retain him. I thought he was one of the officers contemplated by the gentleman from Maine, but he comes in, it seems, in the humble character of messenger. I hope he will not be cut off.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I can explain this matter. We have a messenger now paid under existing laws in the House Library. He is a colored man. He is a good man, and I hope he will remain where he is. I do not see, however, the necessity for this special officer. I do not know that he will get as much as by being a messenger attached to the document library. He is assigned to that library as messenger, and draws his pay accordingly.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. How does he get his pay if he does not get it under just such an appropriation as this?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Under the general appropriation made for clerks and messengers.

Mr. SPALDING. I should like to inquire whether this is in addition to the pay of that messenger to whom he alludes?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I cannot tell what it is intended for. Instead of having this messenger detailed for duty at the House Library, it seems to be for an additional messenger.

Mr. BLAINE. Is he upon the Doorkeeper's roll?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. He is upon the Clerk's roll or some other roll, and is paid, and paid well.

Mr. MAYNARD. What does this item in the estimate signify? I find, "for one messenger in the House Library, $1,095."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I understand that well. It is not founded upon law. It crept into the estimates for the purpose of getting us to adopt it.

Mr. MAYNARD. Things do not creep in of themselves.

Mr. SPALDING. Who put this in, if my friend did not?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It got into the bill by mistake.

Mr. SPALDING. I oppose this amendment unless I am acting under mistake. If this alludes to the colored messenger in the House Library, I will say that we have no more useful man connected with that Library. I should like to see him paid, and I will vote against striking this out until I understand there is something wrong about it. I think this man merits it.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "ninety-five." The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the members of the Committee of the Whole seem to agree in this, that the particular messenger now employed to take charge of the House Library shall remain. The question about which there is difference is, whether he shall be added to the number of messengers employed by the Clerk of the House or shall remain there as heretofore, as one of the messengers employed by the Clerk and detailed for that service. If the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois fails, then we add another messenger to the number now employed; but if that amendment succeeds, then this gentleman will remain in his place as heretofore and receive the same pay. He will remain where he now is, and we will have the same number of messengers employed by the Clerk as heretofore. I do not see, therefore, why the amendment should not be adopted.

Mr. BLAINE. Where will you find provision for his pay if not in this appropriation?

Mr. SCOTFIELD. The gentleman comes from New England and answers one question by asking another. He wants to know where is the appropriation for these messengers.

Mr. BLAINE. You will find no other specification including this man.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. My friend has not looked at this bill, I apprehend.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. The gentleman will find an answer to the question propounded to me in the beginning of the paragraph in the words, "for compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others receiving an annual salary in the service of the House of Representatives."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will find in line one hundred and twenty-one a provision for eleven messengers, &c. The part he has referred to is only introductory to the paragraph.

Mr. ALLISON. I would like to know how many messengers we have attached to the Clerk's office. I find "for three messengers at $1,440," and "one messenger in the House Library, $1,095."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If the committee will allow this item to be stricken out I will obtain all the facts in regard to the matter and submit them before we pass from the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest that it would be better to have the item left in than stricken out.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I understand that very well. If it is left in now it stays in; but if it is stricken out the House can keep it out or insert it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is not now on striking out, but on varying the amount of compensation.

Mr. ALLISON. I oppose the amendment for the purpose of saying that unless this appropriation is passed the Clerk will have no appropriation out of which to pay this man.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. How is he paid now?

Mr. ALLISON. He is paid, I suppose, under a similar appropriation. I do not know how he is paid now. I only know the Clerk has no other means of paying this messenger.

Mr. MAYNARD. If the gentleman from Illinois is right, that he is now paid under that general allowance—"eleven messengers, five at $1,800, and six at $1,440 each; twelve messengers during the session, at the rate of $1,440 each per annum"—if he comes under that category, then I am content that this other item shall be stricken out, for instead of paying $1,095 it will pay him either $1,800 or $1,440.

Mr. RAUM. I had a conversation with Mr. McPherson, the Clerk, and he told me that some eighteen months ago a resolution was passed under which this paragraph is retained, and that unless it is retained this messenger will not be paid at all. He is not a detailed messenger.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment to strike out the clause, it was disagreed to.

Mr. JULIAN. I move to amend by inserting in line one hundred and seven, after the word "dollars," the words "clerks to Committee on the Public Lands, $2,160." I apprehend that the appropriation for the clerk to the Committee on the Public Lands was omitted by inadvertence. The House will remember that he is one of the four permanent clerks of the committees of the House who receive an annual salary by resolution of the House. The ordinary appropriation for his salary should therefore be included in this bill.

I wish to state further that every gentleman in the House knows something about the amount of business which is sent to that committee, and the amount of labor that devolves upon it. That labor is constantly increasing. In addition to the ordinary duties of clerk he is charged with the preservation of the land maps of the House, and the duties of draughtsman are imposed upon him. Under a special resolution of the House, passed some years ago, it is made his duty to keep up a map showing the progress of the survey sale of the public lands of the United States. And I think nobody will dispute it when I say, that with the single exception of the clerk of the Committee of Ways and Means, his labors are quite equal to those devolved upon any of the other clerks having a fixed annual salary. It therefore would be both invidious and unreasonable not to continue the appropriation we have been making for the past seven or eight years. The House just now voted down a proposition to strike out the appropriation for clerk of the Committee of Claims. For very good reasons given by the chairman of that committee the House, by a large vote, declined to do it. Now, there is not a solitary reason for keeping up a permanent clerk of the Committee of Claims with a fixed salary which does not apply in all its force to the clerk of the Committee on the Public Lands. I hope, therefore, this appropriation will be inserted, and that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will not oppose it.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I do not know that it will be possible to resist the creation of new offices about the Capitol. I know we have gone on creating new offices and enlarging the Capitol police until we have made the Capitol police force cost between sixty and seventy thousand dollars a year. Two hundred dollars a day of the people's money is now being paid to guard this building.

With regard to the amendment which the gentleman from Indiana has proposed, we went through with this whole question at the last session of Congress, and this clerk was voted out in the first instance, but afterward a substitute for the whole section was offered which included this clerk and some other clerks, and the whole went through. I undertake to say that as a separate measure it could not have gone through, and my recollection is that it was voted down once in Committee of the Whole. Now, what are the facts in this case? In the first place, I contend that the clerk of the Committee on the Public Lands has no more to do than the clerks of half a dozen other committees who are paid only a per diem allowance. He does not remain here during the vacation, and he has no more to do than the clerks of the Committee on Commerce, the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee on Military Affairs, and of some of the other committees. A few years ago, when these maps went from the land office to the Committee on the Public Lands, a resolution—not a joint resolution, as my friend perhaps understands—not a law, but a simple resolution of the House, made this clerk a permanent clerk, and the salary was appropriated for two or three sessions; but it was found that there was no necessity for continuing the appropriation, and, as I said before, according to my recollection the Committee of the Whole at the last session voted it down. And when we came to consider the appropriation bill for this session we found that there was no law authorizing the appointment of this clerk and no law requiring us to make an appropriation for a permanent clerk to this committee, and hence we did not put it into the bill. If we are going to stop anywhere let us stop here; if our pretenses of reform amount to anything let us commence here at home, and when we find a useless office let us cut it off.

The question was put on Mr. JULIAN's amendment; and there were—ayes 10, noes 52; no quorum voting.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The committee is dividing.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to rise is not in order, as the committee is dividing.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. JULIAN, and WASHBURNE, of Illinois, were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 10, noes 48; no quorum voting.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot entertain that motion with this question pending. If it be the unanimous consent of the committee, however, that when the House next goes into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union the vote may be taken on this amendment, the Chair will entertain the motion. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. JULIAN. I will withdraw the amendment and offer it again when the House is fuller.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I object to that. The committee is dividing, and if we rise now the first thing to be done when we get into committee again will be to renew the count.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what the Chair supposes.

The question was taken on Mr. FARNSWORTH's motion; and it was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SCHENCK reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 1673) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1870, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

WELLS, FARGO AND COMPANY.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent of the House to make a personal explanation of perhaps from three to five minutes.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I will not object, if it is to be understood that no more business will be done to-day.

No objection was made.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. It will be recollected by the House that considerable has been said with reference to Wells, Fargo & Co., and a proposed investigation into their contract for carrying the overland mails. I ask the Clerk to read some extracts from the correspondence and editorials of the Chicago Tribune, which I have marked and send to him.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Special dispatch to the Chicago Tribune.]

"'Old Economy' on Randall's Trail.—Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, to-day made a statement that the Postmaster General had appeared before the Committee on Appropriations, after the resolution regarding Wells, Fargo & Co. had been introduced, and stated that he should not make any further payment on their contract. To-day Randall wrote to the committee that he had changed his mind, and should at once pay some two hundred thousand dollars. Mr. WASHBURNE asked the House to pass a resolution stopping payment. Mr. FARNSWORTH, of Illinois, objected to its consideration, as he always does when the Post Office is attacked, and the resolution was forced over; which will probably enable the contractors to get their money. The whole affair has a very ugly look."

Editorials.

"We do not know what occasion Mr. FARNSWORTH has to stand between Postmaster General Randall and an investigation of the Wells, Fargo & Co. mail contract. If the contract is a fair and honest one it can easily be proved such, and all parties concerned in making it ought to be anxious to have an opportunity to exhibit the truth to the country. At the present time the public have an extremely unfavorable opinion of it, and this unfavorable opinion will extend to all persons who oppose an investigation into its true character."

"If the Wells, Fargo & Co. mail contract is a fraud, and if Hon. JOHN F. FARNSWORTH is a party to it, or is the hired agent of those perpetrating it, he is taking exactly the proper course to convince the people of his district of such a state of things—voting in the same day first against the investigation of a questionable contract, and second, against a bill which is intended to enable the incoming President to get rid of the scoundrels now in office. We barely suggest that Mr. FARNSWORTH's constituents could have dispensed with one of those votes, or would have preferred that they had been spread over a greater period of time."

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I now ask the Clerk to read an extract from the Washington correspondence of the Chicago Evening Post.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House Refuses to Order an Investigation of the Overland Mail Contract.

[Special Dispatch to the Evening Post.]

"WASHINGTON, January 11.—An effort was made by E. B. WASHBURNE and Mr. ELA in the House this afternoon to suspend the rules, and get a resolution before the House to investigate the contract made by the Post Office Department with Wells, Fargo & Co. and all charges against the Post Office Department. Mr. Randall's defenders appeared in the persons of General FARNSWORTH, of Illinois, and Mr. POMEROY, of New York, who, with the aid of a very few Republicans and the entire Democratic vote, succeeded in defeating the motion to suspend the rules, a two-thirds vote being necessary. The Post Office ring are greatly rejoiced over the action of the House, as it effectually shields the Post Office officials from exposure of complicity with known frauds."

A large majority of Republican members voted for this investigation, but General FARNSWORTH, aided by a few Republicans, succeeded in preventing a suspension of the rules, thus virtually countervailing the swindling operations which exist in Randall's Department."

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I am pretty well satisfied that the two dispatches which the Clerk has just read were written by the same party or prompted by the same brain. I desire to ask my colleague from the Galena district [Mr. WASHBURNE] whether he wrote or dictated either of those dispatches?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. My colleague ought to know me better than to ask me such a question.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Will my colleague answer the question? That will be sufficient.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I am not in the habit of writing or dictating dispatches about my colleagues. If I have any public matters to settle with my colleagues I settle them here on the floor of this House. I have had no written communication or conversation in regard to my colleague [Mr. FARNSWORTH] outside of the Hall of the House of Representatives, excepting some casual conversation. I have made no reflection upon him of any kind or character. I differ with him in regard to this swindle.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. It has been intimated to me that my colleague had something to do with these dispatches. I am glad to hear him say that such was not the case.

I now state, not for the information of the House, for they know the fact, but for the information of the papers in Chicago, which have been assailing me in this matter, and I shall publish with my remarks extracts from the Daily Globe, showing the proceedings in this House in relation to this subject; I now state that on the first occasion that my colleague proposed a resolution asking the Postmaster General to suspend payments to Wells, Fargo and Co., he did not ask for any investigation at all of the subject. I did not say one word upon the matter. Objection to its being considered by the House at that time was made by another gentleman; I did not open my mouth upon the subject.

Two days afterward my colleague again asked consent of the House to present the same resolution, which he said he was authorized by the Committee on Appropriations to report for action at that time. It was precisely the same resolution which he had asked leave to introduce on the first day of the session after the holiday recess. Upon that occasion, after my colleague had made a speech of five minutes, I asked permission of the House myself to speak for five minutes. But I did not object to the House considering his resolution. I discussed the merits of the resolution, and upon its merits I declared myself opposed to it. But it was another member—I forget whether it was a member from Kentucky, [Mr. McKEE,] or a member from California, [Mr. JOHNSON,] who made objection to the consideration of the resolution at that time. And it was upon that, that this lying dispatch was sent to the Chicago paper, saying that I objected to the consideration of the resolution, and therefore it was forced over. I characterize it as a "lying dispatch," because it is a lying dispatch, no matter who wrote it or who prompted it. Considerable debate took place upon that occasion, upon the subject of this overland mail contract, and the manner in which the mails were being carried under it. As I said before, the consideration of the resolution of my colleague was not objected to by myself, but it was objected to by another member.

On Monday last, a week ago to-day, as will be recollected, the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ELA] introduced a resolution. What was his resolution? It not only proposed an investigation, but there was incorporated in it what my colleague had tried to get through the House before—a provision directing the Postmaster General to suspend payment upon the contract. On that occasion I declared myself against that part of the resolution directing a suspension of payment on the contract, but in favor of the proposition for an investigation.

It will be recollected, too, that notwithstanding these newspapers constantly say that it is my colleague who has asked for an investigation, they scarcely pay the gentleman from New Hampshire the compliment of mentioning his name in regard to the matter; it will be observed that in all these proceedings in the House, my colleague has never asked for an investigation of this subject—never. He has never once moved for the appointment of a committee. On the other hand, these proceedings, taken from the Daily Globe, show that on seven different occasions I have myself asked for an investigation of this subject; and on three of those occasions it was my colleague who objected. Once when I asked him to yield the floor to me that I might introduce a resolution for the appointment of a committee to investigate these charges in regard to the contract of Wells, Fargo & Co., he said: "No, I will not yield to my colleague; if I yield to anybody, I will yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire." Very courteous as well as very just! On another occasion, it will be remembered, my colleague had the floor and was "farming" it out to various gentlemen, while I was constantly struggling to get the eye of the Speaker that I might obtain the floor for the purpose of offering this resolution for the appointment of an investigating committee. My colleague constantly refusing to yield me the floor for that purpose, I at last interposed an objection to his "farming out" the floor to other gentlemen, and the Speaker was compelled to say to him that he must either surrender the floor unconditionally or go on with his business. When he undertook to make a bargain and make the Speaker a party to that bargain, to surrender the floor to somebody else and not to me, the Speaker said to him that the self-respect of the Chair required that he should not be a party to any such bargain, and that if my colleague did not go on with his own business the Speaker would recognize me as entitled to the floor. As soon as my colleague discovered the purpose for which I wanted the floor, which was to offer a resolution for this investigation, he took up the thread of his business and went on with it, refusing to yield to me or anybody else. Yet I am lashed by reporters under the eye of my colleague and by his organ in the city of Chicago, and am charged with objecting to the proposition to investigate fraudulent contracts.

Mr. HIGBY. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FARNSWORTH] will allow me to ask whether he knows the reporter who has been engaged in this business?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I do not.

Mr. HIGBY. I wish the gentleman could find him out.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. At last, sir, in order to get an investigation of this whole subject, I was compelled, as my State would not be called for resolutions during the morning hour, to go to a gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBURN] and get him to offer a resolution which I had myself drawn, directing the Committee on Public Expenditures to make this investigation, and authorizing them to report at any time. The gentleman, at my request, kindly consented to introduce the resolution which I had prepared.

It was for the purpose of setting myself right, not before the House, (for gentlemen of the House have been present and have observed the proceedings as they have transpired,) but before my constituents, that I obtained the floor at the present time. In corroboration of what I have stated I submit the following extracts from the Globe:

[From Globe January 6—Proceedings January 5.]

"Wells, Fargo, and Company.

"Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the following preamble and resolution for consideration at this time:

"Whereas the House of Representatives on the 16th December, 1868, referred to the Committee on Appropriations the letter from the Postmaster General in answer to the resolution of the House of the 7th of December, relative to the contract for carrying the overland mail; and whereas it appears by a communication from D. B. Ball, special agent of the Post Office Department, to Hon. George McClellan, Second Assistant Postmaster General, that Wells, Fargo & Co., the contractors for the transportation of said mail, have not provided adequate facilities for such transportation, and that express matter has been carried to the exclusion of the mail, which has been left upon the route 'day after day and week after week, both day and night, entirely unprotected;' and that 'on the 15th day of November some six thousand pounds of mail matter lay piled up in an open stock yard at the head of Bohocanon;' and whereas it is reported by the said agent that 'there are strong indications that the agents of Wells, Fargo & Co. or their employees had a hand in riding the letter mail;' Therefore,

"Be it resolved, That the Postmaster General be directed to make no payment to said Wells, Fargo & Co. until a full investigation can be made by the House in regard to the character of the contract made by said Wells, Fargo & Co. with the Post Office Department, and the truth of the charges of the said special agent of the Post Office Department touching the delinquency of said firm in carrying the mail.

"Mr. JOHNSON. I object to the introduction of the preamble and resolution at this time.

"Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman will not object to the passage of this resolution at this time. The state of facts set out in the preamble shows that this money should not be paid.

"Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection to a resolution of inquiry. But I think we should have more information before we pass such a resolution as this.

"Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I then give notice that on Monday next I will move to suspend the rules in order to ascertain whether the House will pass the resolution at that time."

"Wells, Fargo and Company—Again.

"Mr. FARNSWORTH. In view of the charges made in the resolution reported from the Committee on Appropriations with reference to Wells, Fargo & Co. and their mail contract, I desire to ask the permission of the House that a resolution may be adopted for the appointment of a special committee to investigate those charges. I do not desire, however, to be a member of the committee, if it should be appointed.

"Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. ELA,] who has examined this subject, holds in his hand a resolution calling for the appointment of a committee to investigate this whole matter. The Committee on Appropriations, who have the question before them, desire the appointment of a special committee. I hope that the gentleman from New Hampshire will be permitted to offer his resolution, and that it will be adopted by the House.

"Mr. ELA. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following preamble and resolution:

"Whereas the Postmaster General, in a communication to the House, December 16, asks 'to have a committee appointed to investigate this whole matter,' (of the Wells, Fargo & Co. contract,) and to examine into the great expense of this transportation through an uninhabited wilderness during the fall and winter seasons, so that in case an application is made for relief Congress can act understandingly on the subject; and whereas the regular correspondent of the Boston Traveler of December 16, 1868, makes the following charges:

"Among the post routes established during the reign of our Alexander was one two years ago in the Territory of Arizona. At least it is supposed the route was established, from the reason that a contract was awarded to one Mr. Paston, a brother of the Delegate from that Territory, to carry the mails over said route for the handsome sum of $90,000 per year.

"Everything was going on smoothly, and not a murmur of discontent was heard about this contract, for no one knew of it at the time it was made except the parties directly interested. Now for the sequel. The bill for the first year's service came in, and was promptly paid by the Department. The affair now is no longer a secret; but Governor McCormick, of Arizona, learns in an indirect manner that $90,000 a year is being expended to carry the mails over a route in the Territory of which he is Governor. He examines into the matter, and in a letter to the Post Office Department, signed in his capacity of Governor, and with seal attached, he reports that 'not a single letter or an ounce of mail matter has ever been carried over the route,' pronounces it a swindle from beginning to end, and protests against the payment of any more money. The contractor becomes alarmed, and hastens at once to Washington to fix up matters. The second year's bill is presented for payment; but the pay clerk, with Governor McCormick's letter before him, refuses to pay it. An intimate personal friend of Randall's appears on the scene; has several interviews with him. On the day following one of these interviews the pay clerk has a note laid before him. It reads: 'Pay this bill. A. W. R., Postmaster General.' The bill is paid, and the contractor leaves in high glee.

"But this is not all. The Postmaster General within a year has made a contract with a line of Baltimore steamers running to Havana and touching at Key West, to carry the mails, two trips a month, for $1,000 a trip, when the regular ocean postage by all other lines is only seven cents a letter. The line running from New York was found amply sufficient for the public needs at the regular price. Now for the result:

"During the month of October, 1868, the steamer Maryland made two trips. All told she carried both to and from Havana, including newspapers, mails which, estimated at rate paid for 'sea service' would amount to $169 04; but instead of this amount she received the sum of $2,000.

"The steamer Cuba also made two trips, carrying mails which would have entitled her to $73 48, but instead of this a check is sent by the Post Office Department for $2,000.

"Again I say, let a committee be appointed which will investigate the inner workings of Mr. Randall's Department and not seek to cover up, and evidence will be found which will startle the whole country. Give me such a committee and the evidence will be forthcoming."

"Mr. FARNSWORTH. I must object to that preamble which embraces simply extracts from newspaper reports.

"Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Let the resolution be adopted, then, without the preamble.

"Mr. FARNSWORTH. I am willing that a resolution should be adopted for the appointment of a special committee to investigate these charges.

"Mr. ELA. I ask consent, then, to submit the following resolution:

"Resolved, That a special committee of five be appointed to investigate the matters and charges called for and above set forth, and also the manner in which the mail service has been performed; and whether any mail service has been increased which was not warranted; and if so, to what extent and at what cost; and whether any money has been paid to contractors without certificate of service performed; and if so to whom, and by whose order and to what extent; with power to send for persons and papers, and to employ a clerk and stenographer, and report at any time.

"Mr. McKEE. I object.

"Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope, then, the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ELA] will on Monday move to suspend the rules, that his resolution may be offered and adopted."

[From Globe of January 8—Proceedings January 7.]

"Mr. FARNSWORTH. I suppose it is known to all the members of this House that contracts are made by the Postmaster General with parties for the conveyance of the mails in pursuance of law, and that the law authorizes the Postmaster General when the mails are not carried in accordance with the contract to fine the parties or to withhold such proportion of the contract price as it may seem to him proper to do. But a contract, while it is in existence between the contractor and the Post Office Department of the Government, has the force of law, and the Postmaster General cannot violate that contract by refusing to pay unless he has some authority to do so, and a more resolution of the House of Representatives is not sufficient authority to the Postmaster General to refuse to perform his duty. Certainly a resolution of the House of Representatives instructing the Postmaster General so to do, when that resolution is based upon newspaper paragraphs or upon the outside statements of individuals, is not sufficient.

"It will probably be recollected by members of the House who were here at the last session of Congress that Congress amended the law with reference to the transmission of the newspaper and document mails across the continent, opening the mails for the transmission by land of all the newspapers and heavy documents. This, of course, added very largely to the weight of the mails. I stated at that time what the bids were for the conveyance of these mails, and how that some of the parties had bid with reference to carrying the letter mails as the law then stood, and other parties had bid with reference to carrying the entire mails if we should amend the law and open the mails for the transportation of all the papers. It turned out as I stated to the House. In consequence of the passage of that law parties who had bid for carrying the letter-mails only refused to carry the mails, and did not execute a contract. The Postmaster General fell back upon Wells, Fargo & Co., and made a contract with them. The manner of doing so and the reasons for making the contract he has reported to the House by special communication as well as in his annual report. The whole amount for the conveyance of the mails in pursuance of that contract will probably not exceed $600,000 at the time the railroad is completed across the continent. One quarter or less than a quarter is now due."

"Mr. FARNSWORTH. I desire to say a word in reply to what my colleague has said. I do not object to an investigation. I did not object the other day. I desire that an investigation shall be made. I am no champion of the Postmaster General or of Wells, Fargo & Co., but I do not believe in the right of the House of Representatives to interfere with the performance of a mail contract, and upon the mere statements of some outside parties, the ex parte statements of outsiders or a mere letter of a post office agent, without explanation, to postpone indefinitely the payment of the contract price for carrying the mails in accordance with a contract which has been properly made."

"Mr. FARNSWORTH. The House must understand—if members from the eastern part of the country do not understand from conversation with members from the Pacific slope and Delegates from the Territories, they will understand in a very short time—something about the expense of equipping and running stages in that country. They will readily perceive the importance, the absolute necessity, of paying the contractors for conveying the mails as the money becomes due, in order to secure the proper transmission of the mails. The failure of the Department for one quarter to pay what is due to a contractor for carrying the mails in that country will pretty certainly insure the dropping of the mails and the cessation of the running of the stages. It is, I understand, in view of this fact, that the Postmaster General has revoked, as he has stated in his communication to my colleague, the order refusing to pay the contractor for carrying the mails. And I confess, sir, that I approve the conduct of the Postmaster General in this particular. I think he has done perfectly right. In taking this action he, of course, knows better than I do whether there has been any fraud in making this contract. He has taken this action in full view of the fact that an investigation of the matter will probably be ordered by this House. The whole thing will be investigated; and if he is paying out money from the Treasury in pursuance of a contract which is fraudulent, and which shall hereafter be so proved, he, of course, takes the risk upon his shoulders. But if he is conscious that he has committed no fraud, and that these parties are in good faith performing their contract, I certainly approve and justify his course in paying them the contract price for carrying this mail, notwithstanding my colleague may have interposed a request that the contractors should not be paid. If I were a contractor for the Government, and were performing my duties I should think it exceedingly hard that the Department should refuse to pay me for doing what I had agreed to do upon the mere request of a member of Congress, basing his request upon the flying newspaper reports that he might have cut from some of the public journals."

"Mr. FARNSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, so far as regards the information obtained from Mr. Ball, the special agent of the Post Office Department, I have read that. It was sent to this House by the Postmaster General with his own communication. Mr. Ball, it is true, speaks of several occasions some time ago—not many occasions—when he saw, as he says, large piles of mail matter—six thousand pounds, perhaps—piled up in an open yard. How is that explained? Why, sir, if my colleague had taken the pains that I have taken to investigate this matter; if he had examined other reports and other papers on file (for this report of Mr. Ball came from the Post Office Department) he would have found how the matter happened. Frequently, on account of storms, the Pacific railroad trains do not come in on time; they are a day or two behind hand. In the mean time no mail is brought in, and the stages have gone out empty. But the train comes in with all the accumulated mail matter, amounting, perhaps, to five or six tons, and it is dumped down. As fast as the railroad is extended an additional twenty-five or fifty miles a new depot is established, which is, of course, a very temporary affair, without proper buildings for the storage of the mails. The stages cannot carry off six tons of mail matter in one day—this heavy paper mail. What do they do? They are obliged to draw it off as they can; to take what they can on the stages to-day, then take what they can to-morrow, and the balance of it the day after, until it is all cleared up. That is the way it is done."

"Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask that the resolution be now voted upon."

"The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent for the resolution to be received and acted upon at this time."

"Mr. JOHNSON. I object."

[From Globe January 12—Proceedings January 11.]

"Consular, &c., Appropriation Bill."

"The SPEAKER. The morning hour has now expired, and the House resumes the consideration of the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, upon which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] is entitled to the floor."

"Mr. FARNSWORTH. Will my colleague yield to me to offer a resolution?"

"Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. After the consular bill shall have been disposed of I propose to go into Committee of the Whole on the naval appropriation bill. Before doing so, however, I will yield to gentlemen to get in some business they desire to introduce."

"Mr. FARNSWORTH. I want to introduce a resolution for a committee of investigation on some post office matters that have already been referred to in debate here."

"Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If I yield at all for such a purpose it will be to the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. ELA.]"

"Mr. SCHENCK. I call for the regular order."

"Order of Business."

"Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and take up the naval appropriation bill; and pending that motion I yield, according to promise, to the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. ELA.]"

"Mr. POMEROY. I object."

"Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Then I withdraw the motion."

"Wells, Fargo & Company."

"Mr. ELA. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of offering the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That a special committee of five be appointed to investigate all matters connected with the contracts of Wells, Fargo & Co. for carrying the overland mails, and also the manner in which the mail service has been performed, and whether any mail service has been increased which was not warranted, and if so to what extent; and whether any money has been paid to contractors without certificate of service performed, and if so to whom and by whose order and to what extent; with power to send for persons and papers, and to employ a clerk and stenographer, and report at any time."

"And be it further resolved, That the proper officers of the Treasury Department be requested to make no payment to said Wells, Fargo & Co. on their said contract till the matters connected therewith shall be fully investigated."

"Mr. POMEROY. Allow me one moment. To part of the resolution there is no objection; that is, so far as the investigation is concerned. But as regards stopping the payment of moneys under the Government contract, it would be very extraordinary, it seems to me, to order it to be done without any discussion of the merits of the question."

"Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. There is no contract which has been performed."

"Mr. POMEROY. There has been a contract performed, and more service performed than the moneys due to-day will cover. The company is at a loss to-day for the Government moneys due under the contract, as can be shown to the satisfaction of this House in a debate on the subject. So far as the investigation of the contract is concerned, I wish to have it done; but I do not want, under cover of that proposition, to deprive the company of moneys legally earned and at a loss to them in doing this very service. If the resolution may be divided I have no objection to interpose."

"The SPEAKER. It cannot be divided under the motion to suspend the rules."

"Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the House will adopt the resolution and suspend the payment. It will take only thirty days, anyhow."

"Mr. FARNSWORTH. I desire myself to have the contract investigated, though I see there has been some innuendoes sent out that I oppose the investigation. I tried to get the floor this morning for the purpose of offering a resolution for the appointment of a special committee, intending to say that I did not wish to be appointed on that committee."

"Mr. SCOTFIELD. Is this debatable?"

"The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent."

"Mr. SCOTFIELD. I object."

"The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New Hampshire move to suspend the rules simply to introduce the resolution, or for the purpose of agreeing to it as well?"

"Mr. ELA. For the purpose of agreeing to it."

"Mr. FARNSWORTH. I desire to ask if any member or Delegate interested in this mail service desires this to be done? So far as I know there is none."

"Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I demand the yeas and nays on suspending the rules."

"The yeas and nays were ordered."

"Mr. ELA. I will modify the resolution by striking out the last clause, 'till the matters connected herewith shall be fully investigated,' and substituting therefor the words 'during the next thirty days.'"

"The question was taken; and there were—yeas 88, nays 55, not voting 78; as follows:

"YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Beaman, Beatty, Benjamin, Bingham, Blair, Boles, Boutwell, Bowen, Boyden, Buckland, Burr, Roderick R. Butler, Callis, Churchill, Reader W. Van Horn, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Thomas Williams, James F. Wilson, John T. Wilson, and Wood—78."

"So (two thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended."

"Mr. BOUTWELL obtained the floor."

"Mr. FARNSWORTH. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to give way to me to offer a resolution for the appointment of a committee to investigate this matter, without the other part of the resolution."

"Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. What will be the use of investigating when the money is taken?"

"Mr. FARNSWORTH. It is not investigation the gentleman wants; that is the trouble. It is investigation we want. We want facts. My colleague does not."

"Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I understand what kind of an investigation my colleague wants."

"Mr. FARNSWORTH. I want facts, not hearsay; I want affidavits, not innuendoes."

"Mr. BOUTWELL declined to yield the floor."

"Mr. PIKE. I understand that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FARNSWORTH] is willing that his colleague shall yield to me."

"Mr. FARNSWORTH. I am willing to give way as soon as I can offer a resolution."

"Mr. MOOREHEAD. I wish to inquire what bill comes up if we go into Committee of the Whole? I understand it is the tariff bill."

"The SPEAKER. The naval appropriation bill has priority as a special order."

"Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I am called upon to make any extended reply—"

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. WILSON, of Iowa.) Is there any objection to allowing the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] to reply to his colleague?

There was no objection.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take any part in any quarrels going on between my colleague [Mr. FARNSWORTH] and the newspaper editors and reporters. I presume that he can take care of himself, and that the editors and reporters can take care of themselves. I do not propose to interfere in the matter."

In reference to this investigation I have done simply my duty. My colleague and myself, however, do not exactly agree in regard to this matter of objection. I understood him very distinctly to object to this investigation as proposed in the resolution of the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. ELA.] My colleague has undertaken to hold me responsible for the fact that an investigation was not ordered before to-day."

What are the facts? After this matter was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and after the committee had examined the subject and had come to the conclusion that they could not make the necessary examination, I, in conversation with the gentleman from New Hampshire, suggested that I would yield to him when I obtained the floor in order that he might offer his preamble and resolution. The preamble and resolution were offered, and I understood my colleague to object to them; and when I asked my colleague in reference to it, and as to why he objected to the resolution, he said that was on account of the preamble. I then told him that I would let the preamble go, as the resolution was what we wanted. To that he replied that the resolution without the preamble was of no account. That is the way in which I understood my colleague.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. My colleague is mistaken, and the Globe shows that he is mistaken. He introduced a resolution, soon after we met, instructing the Postmaster General to make no further payments on this contract to Wells, Fargo & Co. When he made that proposition I said nothing at all, although I stood in the aisle close to where he was. The objection came from some other gentleman. The Globe will show that after that, and as soon as I could get the floor, I stated to the House that inasmuch as these charges had been made against the Postmaster General in reference to this matter it was the duty of the House at once to institute an investigation. I had no resolution, and the gentleman from New Hampshire said that he had one. He offered a long preamble to his resolution, and I said that I could not agree to the preamble because I did not know the facts were as they were there stated. I agreed to the resolution, but objection was made by some other gentleman.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Did I not understand the gentleman to say that the preamble being stricken out there was no use in adopting the resolution?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. No, sir.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I so understood him. The gentleman alludes to my preventing him from offering his resolution and allowing the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ELA] to submit a resolution on the same subject. After having a conversation with the gentleman from New Hampshire I was in favor of his introducing a resolution providing for this investigation. I thought there was a peculiar propriety in his offering the resolution for this investigation, while there was an impropriety in my colleague doing so.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I expressly stated to the House that I did not wish to be put upon the committee of investigation, and my colleague knows it. It so appears in the Globe.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Why, then, does my colleague arraign me for preventing him from getting on the committee, when he says that he would not have gone on the committee in any event?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I arraign him because he objected to my offering resolutions for this investigation, and then assuming that he tried to investigate and I opposed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. For the reasons I have stated.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. My colleagues innuendo that he did not want me to offer a resolution providing for this investigation is answered by the fact that I stated to the House several times that I did not wish to be on the committee. I did it in the hope that my colleague would not object to the resolution. He would not allow me to do it unless he could select the chairman of the committee. He knows very well that it is a constant practice for special committees to be appointed on motion of a gentleman who himself declines serving upon it, and that this leaves the Speaker free to constitute the committee as he chooses.

And then, on motion of Mr. KELSEY, (at five minutes to five o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By the SPEAKER: The memorial and resolutions of the board of supervisors of Dubuque county, Iowa, in relation to the free navigation of the St. Lawrence, and for other purposes.

Also, the remonstrance of Hon. C. M. Clay, United States minister to Russia, protesting against appropriation for J. Curtin, secretary of said legation.

By Mr. AXTELL: The petition of A. S.

Rozenbaum & Co. and others, importers and dealers in tobacco in San Francisco, praying relief from double duties;

Also, the petition of H. Voorman and others, distillers in San Francisco, as to excise tax on distilled spirits.

By Mr. CLIFT: Resolutions passed by a meeting of colored citizens of Savannah, Georgia, complaining of outrages, asking congressional legislation for Georgia, and sustaining Governor Bullock.

By Mr. CHILCOTT: A petition of citizens of Denver City, Colorado, asking for the passage of the civil service bill of Hon. T. A. JENCKES; also, a bill transferring all Indian affairs to the War Department; also, a bill to reduce taxation, &c.

By Mr. GOLLADAY: A petition of sundry citizens of Christian county, Kentucky, in favor of the Northern Pacific railroad.

By Mr. JULIAN: A petition of 60 citizens of New York, praying that in any future amendment of the Constitution of the United States on the subject of suffrage no distinction shall be made as between men and women.

Also, a petition of 21 citizens of the same State, praying for the same.

Also, a memorial of citizens of Santa Clara county, California, touching further legislation on the public lands in township seven south, range one west.

By Mr. KELLEY: The petition of the Philadelphia Female Anti-Slavery Society, praying Congress to propose such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States as shall secure the right of suffrage to the colored people of the nation.

By Mr. KERR: The application of Abraham Lusher, for an additional post route in Indiana.

By Mr. MAYNARD: The petition of Mary J. Pearson, of Monroe county, Tennessee, widow of Captain Pearson, company D, third regiment Tennessee infantry, praying for a pension.

By Mr. MOORE: Sundry petitions from masters and owners of vessels of Fall river, Massachusetts, and Gardiner, Maine, praying the intervention of Congress to protect all engaged in navigation from illegal exactions by State and municipal corporations.

By Mr. PETTIS: The petition of John P. Reed, for relief.

Also, the petition of C. M. Allen, for relief. Also, the petition of A. B. Gildersleeve, for relief.

By Mr. PETERS: The petition of Thomas Pool, for a pension.

By Mr. POLAND: The petition of Professor K. M. Hesser, in favor of raising the salary of the President to $1,000,000, and the Vice President to $500,000.

By Mr. SCHENCK: The petition of Thomas Worthington, of Warren county, Ohio, praying Congress for additional compensation under contract with the Government of the United States for supplying water to troops at Camp Dennison, Ohio.

By Mr. SHELLABARGER: A petition of citizens of Ohio for an amendment of the naturalization laws.

By Mr. TIFT: A petition of several merchants of Augusta, Georgia, praying the repeal of so much of sections seventy-eight and ninety-four of an act entitled "An act imposing taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and for other purposes," approved July 23, 1868, as subject the articles therein mentioned after certain dates to a second payment of taxes.

By Mr. WELKER: The petition of Barbara Schlaick, widow of John Schlaick, company G, forty-sixth New York volunteers, for a pension.

Also, the petition of Allen E. Rector, company H, twenty-eighth Pennsylvania volunteers, for a pension.

By Mr. WHITEMORE: The petition of Mrs. Mary Morgan and others, of Georgetown, South Carolina, praying remuneration for rice taken possession of by United States soldiers in February, 1865.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 19, 1869.

Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, D. D.

On motion by Mr. FERRY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, communicating information in relation to the destitute condition of the Kansas Indians and the diversion of the school fund from the purpose of education to the purchase of supplies to them; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMNESTY PROCLAMATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States; which was read, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

The resolution adopted on the 5th instant, requesting the President "to transmit to the Senate a copy of any proclamation of amnesty made by him since the last adjournment of Congress, and also to communicate to the Senate by what authority of law the same was made," has been received.

I accordingly transmit herewith a copy of a proclamation dated the 25th day of December last. The authority of law by which it was made is set forth in the proclamation itself, which expressly affirms that it was issued "by virtue of the power and authority in me vested by the Constitution, and in the name of the sovereign people of the United States," and proclaims and declares "unconditionally, and without reservation, to all and to every person who directly or indirectly participated in the late insurrection or rebellion, a full pardon and amnesty for the offense of treason against the United States, or of adhering to their enemies during the late civil war, with restoration of all rights, privileges, and immunities under the Constitution, and the laws which have been made in pursuance thereof."

The Federal Constitution is understood to be, and is regarded by the Executive, as the supreme law of the land. The second section of article second of that instrument provides that the President "shall have power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States, except in cases of impeachment." The proclamation of the 25th ultimo is in strict accordance with the judicial expositions of the authority thus conferred upon the Executive, and, as will be seen by reference to the accompanying papers, is in conformity with the precedent established by Washington in 1795, and followed by Presidents Adams in 1800, Madison in 1815, and Lincoln in 1863, and by the present Executive in 1863, 1867, and 1868.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 18, 1869.

Mr. FERRY. It will be unnecessary, I presume, to read the accompanying papers; and after submitting a few remarks upon this message I shall move its reference to the Judiciary Committee, with the accompanying papers, and that it be printed.

I regret, sir, that in answer to the resolution of inquiry which I introduced some days since the President has seen fit to make no definite reply. The resolution, as will be seen by the paper which has just been read, requested the President to transmit to the Senate a copy of any proclamation of amnesty, and to communicate to the Senate by what authority of law the same was made. He was asked by what authority of law he had attempted to proclaim amnesty in the proclamation referred to. He has informed us by what authority of law he undertook to declare a pardon, but has given us no information as to the authority of law upon which his proclamation of amnesty rests. The difference between pardon and amnesty is well known and familiar, and is, perhaps, as succinctly expressed in the law dictionary of Mr. Bouvier, under the title "amnesty," as anywhere else. It is as follows:

"Amnesty. An act of oblivion of past offenses, granted by the Government to those who have been guilty of any neglect or crime, usually upon condition that they return to their duty within a certain period."

"3. Amnesty and pardon are very different. The former is an act of the sovereign power, the object of which is to efface and to cause to be forgotten a crime or misdemeanor; the latter is an act of the same authority, which exempts the individual on whom it is bestowed from the punishment the law inflicts for the crime he has committed. (7 Pel., 150.) Amnesty is the oblivion and forgetfulness of the offense; pardon is forgiveness. A pardon is given to one who is certainly guilty or has been convicted; amnesty, to those who may have been so.

"4. Their effects are also different. That of pardon, is the remission of the whole or a part of the punishment awarded by the law; the conviction remaining unaffected when only a partial pardon is granted; an amnesty, on the contrary, has the effect of destroying the criminal act, so that it is as if it had not been committed, as far as the public interests are concerned.

"5. Their application also differs. Pardon is always given to individuals, and properly only after judgment or conviction; amnesty may be granted either before judgment or afterward, and it is in general given to whole classes of criminals or supposed criminals, for the purpose of restoring tranquillity in the State."

Now, sir, as I said in introducing the resolution of inquiry, it was not that I wished to learn upon what authority the Executive had undertaken to grant a pardon; I desired to know his authority of law for an amnesty; and in the few remarks which I propose to submit I shall show what the effect upon those embraced within the proclamation of amnesty, in the true legal sense of that word, must be if the President possesses the power assumed by him.

We have as to pardon both judicial expositions and executive precedents in this country. The judicial expositions are found mainly in three leading cases decided by the Supreme Court of the United States—the case of the United States vs. Wilson, 7 Peters; ex parte Wells, 18 Howard, and ex parte Garland, 4 Wallace. By these it substantially decided that whatever is included in the legal signification of "pardon" by English law is granted to the President, including, therefore, the power to the President to pardon before as well as after conviction, and to grant absolute, limited, or conditional pardons. But in all these cases decided by the Supreme Court of the United States the recipient of the executive clemency was designated by name, and all these decisions extend only to cases of that kind, to wit, where the recipient was designated in the instrument of pardon by name; so that we have no judicial decisions as to the capacity of the President to issue even a general pardon without designation, that is, of the recipient of the executive clemency by name, and in order to ascertain the existing law as to the executive power in this respect, we are necessarily turned to the executive precedents, which the President has properly cited in the message to the Senate and the accompanying papers.

There were three executive precedents, before the late war, of general pardon without designating by name the recipients, and they are referred to by the President, namely, the proclamation of President Washington in 1796, of President Adams in 1800, and of President Madison in 1815; but not one of these was a proclamation of amnesty. They were proclamations expressly of pardon, and expressly operating only to remit the punishment which the law would inflict upon the crime which the recipients of the pardon had committed. But the acquiescence of all departments of the Government and the people in the exercise of executive clemency by the mode of general pardon without designating the recipients, as employed by these three early Presidents, would seem to my mind to have settled the law of the country at the present time in favor of the power of the Executive to grant a general pardon in the true and proper sense of the word "pardon," to wit, the remission of the penalty which the existing law would otherwise inflict upon the crime of which the recipient has been guilty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Against the decision of the Supreme Court, who hold that it must have certain requisites that a general pardon has not?

Mr. FERRY. I was about to remark there is at once arising upon a general pardon a difficulty as to the mode in which the recipient shall receive the benefit of that pardon; for supposing the recipient to be indicted notwithstanding the pardon, there is no mode in which he can take advantage of it in the court in which he may be indicted, for the court is not bound to take judicial notice of a general pardon. The accused must plead the pardon which he claims exonerates him from liability to punishment; and in pleading it the Supreme Court have decided that he must plead it, and in fact it must be endowed with the ordinary requisites of other deeds, an instrument delivered, accepted, and pleaded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And naming him.

Mr. FERRY. And naming him. Of course, therefore, a general pardon cannot be taken advantage of by the accused upon an indictment brought against him after the pardon had been issued by the ordinary mode, in accordance with the decision in 7 Peters, and therefore when the President has proclaimed a general pardon, as I think in President Madison's proclamation, he at the same time directs the executive functionaries, to wit, the Attorney General and the district attorneys in the different districts, to cause all pending indictments and prosecutions to be nolled or discontinued—the course which the President has also pursued in regard to the present proclamation, having instructed his Attorney General to order a nolle prosequi in all cases of pending indictments and prosecutions. The mode in which the benefit reaches the recipient differs from the mode in which the benefit of a special pardon reaches him. As to the power to grant such general pardon, although as an original question I should certainly believe no such executive power did exist in this Government, yet I must look at the law as it is, and that power would seem to me to have been settled by the exercise of the power by Washington, Adams, and Madison, by the acquiescence of the other departments of the Government in that exercise, and by the acquiescence of the people for half a century.

But, sir, while arriving at these conclusions with respect to the exercise of the power of pardon, in the proper legal signification of the term, we have as yet no light whatever upon the authority of the President to proclaim a general amnesty. In order to exhibit precedents showing the Executive to be clothed with that power the President, in the communication before us, has referred to the various proclamations of President Lincoln and to his own proclamations since his own accession to the executive office. But, sir, I affirm without fear of successful contradiction that in the history of this Government there is not a single precedent until the 4th of July, 1868, where the President of the United States has undertaken to grant amnesty without the prior sanction of an act of Congress. In every instance of the proclamations of President Lincoln, referred to in the papers now before us, those proclamations were issued while a law stood upon your statute-books expressly authorizing the President to make them. Upon the repeal of that law the power, so far as amnesty was concerned, exercised by the President, fell with the law, and Andrew Johnson alone among the Presidents of the United States has ever attempted to issue a proclamation of amnesty without previous sanction of Congress, and he not until the 4th of July, 1868. So that absolutely no light is thrown upon the inquiry, which is the gist of the resolution which I offered to the Senate a few days ago, by the message and the accompanying documents which are now before us.

The existing state of the law with regard to the power of amnesty in this Government is this: the Constitution is utterly silent upon the subject. The judicial decisions of the highest tribunal of the nation are utterly silent upon the subject. There is not an executive precedent in favor of the power of amnesty until the 4th of July, 1868, when President Johnson assumed the exercise of that power. Now, sir, let me refer again to what this power of amnesty is, what the President has attempted to do, in order to see whether this extraordinary assumption ought to be sustained by the coordinate departments of the Government. Mark the language of the proclamation of the President in reference to the amnesty, in which he declares:

"Amnesty for the offense of treason against the United States, or of adhering to their enemies during the late civil war, with restoration of all rights, privileges, and immunities under the Constitution and the laws which have been made in pursuance thereof."

Now, what is amnesty? Amnesty is an annihilation of the act done; pardon is remission of the punishment which the law had previously prescribed for the act done. Invest the President of the United States with the power of pardon in the very broadest terms, for the purpose of the argument, and you advance not one jot or tittle on the road toward giving him the power of amnesty, which he now proposes to exercise. If it be true that the President of the United States to-day can grant amnesty in these terms, annihilating the fact of rebellion, of treason, of adhering to the enemies of the Republic, he can restore and has restored every rebel throughout this nation to the exercise of every privilege, every franchise which he ever possessed precisely as if no rebellion had ever existed at all. That is amnesty; that is what the President has expressly attempted to exercise by this proclamation, without authority given in the Constitution, without the sanction of a judicial decision, without a precedent in the history of the executive department of this Government.

Now, sir, as I said when I introduced the resolution, I am myself, as is well known, in favor of the removal of all political disabilities remaining upon our statute-book. But, at the same time, it will not do to permit even that which is right and just to be accomplished by unlawful methods. Every assumption of power becomes a precedent, and every assumption of unlawful power is a dangerous precedent. I move that the message and accompanying documents be printed, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of persons confined in jail in Savannah, Georgia, praying that they may be released from confinement; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MORGAN presented a memorial of saw manufacturers of Rochester, New York, and also a memorial of citizens of Rochester, New York, remonstrating against any further increase of the duty on imported steel; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOWE presented the memorial of the Board of Supervisors of Polk county, Wisconsin, remonstrating against any further extension of the time for the completion of the railroad from the Saint Croix river to Bayfield, in Wisconsin; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VAN WINKLE presented a petition of citizens of Kansas, settlers on the Cherokee neutral lands, praying the ratification of the sale of the residue of the Cherokee neutral lands to James F. Joy, in June, 1868, by the Secretary of the Interior; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented the petition of Benjamin Blackford, of Virginia, praying to be relieved from political disabilities; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DAVIS presented the petition of Joseph Wilson, praying compensation for certain mules and horses captured by the rebels in consequence of the refusal of the pickets to permit him to pass within the Union lines for the purpose of delivering the same under his contract with the Government at the city of Washington in July, 1864; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CORBETT. I desire to offer a memorial from prominent citizens of Washington Territory, in which they set forth that they protest against submitting the question of the claims of Great Britain to the Haro archipelago and the channel between San Juan Island and Vancouver's Island to the arbitration of any foreign Power. They set forth that having already conceded from the line of 64° 40' to that of 49°, for the sake of peace, neither the honor nor the interests of the United States will admit of further surrender of right. I will add that these views coincide with my own; and the information that I have on the subject, after careful examination, satisfies me that our Government only deviated from the line of the forty-ninth parallel, that we might have no division of the island of Vancouver. The British Government claim the island of San Juan, but in my opinion they have no right to such island. The deepest channel running between San Juan Island and the island of Vancouver is the line. These memorialists, who are prominent citizens knowing all the circumstances of the case, petition in very earnest terms that this question be not submitted for arbitration. I move that the memorial be printed, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL presented a memorial of the mayor and common council of Chicago, Illinois, praying the passage of a bill to enable the city of Chicago to enlarge its harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. POMEROY. I have received and been requested to present a petition from citizens of the State of Maryland, earnestly and respectfully requesting that in any change or amendment of the Constitution of the United States that may be proposed we shall extend equal suffrage to all citizens, both male and female. This petition is numerously signed by citizens of the State of Maryland, and done up by the ladies in a neat and tasteful manner, and I respectfully call the attention of the committee to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SUMNER, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom were referred the following petition, memorials, resolutions, and messages, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to:

A petition of William Cornell Jewitt, praying an appropriation of $7,200,000 for the purchase of Alaska;

A memorial of William Cornell Jewitt, in relation to the proposed vote of censure against Hon. Reverdy Johnson, minister to England;

Resolutions by Mr. CAMERON, to inquire into the facts in respect to the designs of foreign Powers in imposing their systems of monarchical government and institutions upon the people of this continent;

A message from the President of the United States, of May 25, 1868, communicating a report from the Secretary of State in relation to recent events in the empire of Japan;

A message from the President of the United States, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of January 13, 1868, further information in relation to the appointment of Hon. Anson Burlingame to a mission by the emperor of China;

A message from the President of the United States, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, correspondence in relation to a claim to the guano on Alto Vela, an island in the vicinity of San Domingo;

A message from the President of the United States relating to the act of Congress prohibiting persons in the diplomatic service from wearing uniform or official costumes; and

A message of the President of the United States of July 10, 1868, communicating further information in relation to events in the empire of Japan.

Mr. SUMNER. The same committee, to whom was referred a message of the President of the United States, of July 20, 1868, communicating correspondence between the Secretary of State and the minister resident in Japan, showing the importance of an amendment to the law of the United States prohibiting the coolie trade, ask to be discharged from its further consideration. In making this report I desire to state that at the last session of Congress the committee directed me to report a bill in pursuance of this recommendation, which has passed the Senate, and, I believe, is now pending in the other House, making our laws against the coolie trade applicable to Japan.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1046) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works, and for other purposes, have directed me to report it back with certain amendments and to recommend its passage. I will here state that most of the amendments are deductions made of the amounts taken from the $1,500,000 appropriated at the discretion of the Secretary of War in the prosecution of works during the first part of the present fiscal year.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 667) to enable the Holley, Wayne, and Monroe Railway Company in the State of Michigan to have the subscription to its capital stock stamped, and the stamps already affixed and to be affixed to be duly canceled, have directed me to report it back with amendments; and if there is no objection, as it is merely to allow the company, which has failed to put stamps on the certificates of its capital stock at the proper time, to do so, I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does any Senator object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOWARD. I object.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Very well. I leave it to the Senator. I asked for it on his account.

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 771) authorizing payment to be made for certain services rendered to the United States in the late insurrectionary States, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. TRUMBULL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 800) to enable the city of Chicago to enlarge its harbor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ABBOTT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 801) to amend an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific ocean," approved July 27, 1866, and to facilitate the early construction of the Atlantic and Pacific railroad, the Union Pacific railway, eastern division, the Southern Continental railroad, and the Southern Pacific railroad; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONKLING asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 802) amendatory of an act to protect the rights of actual settlers upon the public lands of the United States, approved July 27, 1868, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 803) for the relief of the president and directors of the Terre Haute and Richmond Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COLE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 804) relating to the securities of national banks; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. McDONALD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S.

No. 805) to perfect and complete railroad and telegraph communication with the Pacific ocean; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CORBETT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 806) to establish certain mail routes in Oregon and Washington Territory; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONNESS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 807) to provide for a line of United States mail steamships for the conveyance of mails and emigrant passengers between New York and Europe; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish to say, in this connection, that I do not know anything about the contents of the bill; but it embraces several respectable names, and at their instance I present it.

Mr. THAYER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 199) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. THAYER. As the amendment proposed is short, I ask that it be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

No male citizen of the United States twenty-one years of age and upward, not insane or an idiot, shall be deprived of the right to vote at any election held by the people for national, State, and municipal officers, or for Representatives in Congress, unless guilty of crime, of which he has been duly convicted by law.

Mr. THAYER. A proposition has been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States in relation to suffrage. I therefore move that this resolution lie on the table and be printed, to be considered when the other shall come up for consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

FISHERIES.

Mr. WILSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the Senate any correspondence or documents on file in the Department of State not heretofore published, relating to the resources and extent of the fishing grounds of the North Pacific ocean opened to the United States by the treaty of Alaska, showing the markets which are or may be made available for the produce of the fisheries, and relating also to the fisheries of the principal commercial nations, their markets, and their capacity.

DYER COURT OF INQUIRY.

Mr. HOWARD. I move to take up the resolution which I offered on Friday last, relating to the court of inquiry now in session in this city.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 198) in relation to certain testimony to be used before the court of inquiry now in session in the case of General Dyer, chief of ordnance, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of War to permit Messrs. Arrick and Kennon, the attorneys for the accusers before the court of inquiry convened in Washington city under special order No. 217, dated "Headquarters of the Army, Adjutant General's Office, September 10, 1868," to make in presence of General Dyer, at present chief of ordnance, if he shall desire, such personal examination of the records of the Bureau of Ordnance of the War Department as they may deem necessary to the full and thorough investigation contemplated by such order; and after such examination, and upon the request of the attorneys named, or either of them, he is directed to produce before the court, for the perusal and inspection of its members, all of such parts thereof as the attorneys may deem material to the inquiry.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to strike out the names of the attorneys and to insert "the Judge Advocate General," who is the representative of the Government on all courts of inquiry, and who, I understand, is present at the court of inquiry named as its representative.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. In order to show the reason for the resolution being framed in the form which it now bears, I will trouble the Senate one moment by reading an indorsement on the communication which I hold in my hand. The counsel for the accusers in the case mentioned in the resolution made application to the Secretary of War for the privilege of inspecting personally the records in the office of the Ordnance Bureau of the War Department. On this communication was the following indorsement by the Judge Advocate General:

BUREAU OF MILITARY JUSTICE,
December 29, 1868.

Respectfully submitted for the consideration of the Secretary of War, with an expression of opinion that the distinct averments made by the writers on their professional honor are quite sufficient to justify the granting of this request for a personal examination, of the records referred to.

J. HOLT,
Judge Advocate General.

Then the Secretary of War indorsed on the same paper:

WAR DEPARTMENT, December 29, 1868.

Respectfully returned to the Judge Advocate General, who is the official prosecutor in this case, and whose duty it is to procure from the records of the War Department and its bureaus all evidence which ought to be brought before the court. For this purpose he may in person or by either of his authorized assistants, search the records, and may employ to aid him such experts as may be necessary; but permission to search the records of the War Department cannot be given by the Secretary of War to persons not subject to his authority.

J. M. SCHOFIELD,
Secretary of War.

It seems that the counsel for the accusers in that case find it impossible to get access to the original records in the office of the Ordnance Bureau of the War Department. They allege that they have good ground to believe, and do believe, that those records have been mutilated and altered by some person, and that these mutilations and alterations are very material in the prosecution of the inquiry now pending before the court of inquiry. I take it that there can be no objection to permitting the counsel to inspect the original documents in that office in the presence of General Dyer, who is the party charged before the court of inquiry.

Mr. GRIMES. I conceive that there may be very great objections to establishing a precedent such as the passage of this resolution would establish, that wherever there shall be any private prosecutors against any officer of the Government or any persons who feel interested in making a personal examination of the records of any of the Departments of this Government they shall be permitted to do so by an act of Congress. I call the attention of Senators to the indorsement of the Secretary of War read by the Senator from Michigan. He there declares that the Judge Advocate General, the chief of the Bureau of Military Justice, has the power to examine these records himself or through anybody else that he may choose to designate for that purpose. He is associated with these men, who are the complainants in this case, who represent what are called the prosecutors; for this, it seems, is not a prosecution of the Government, but a prosecution of private individuals against an officer of the Government, and it is in that capacity that these persons appear before us to-day with their petition. General Holt has the power, under that instruction and order of the Secretary of War, to authorize Messrs. Arrick and Kennon to go into the Department and examine thoroughly the records. Wherefore, then, the necessity for coming to Congress to get Congress to pass a solemn act to authorize Arrick and Kennon to go and overhaul and rummage the records of the Department? Are not the Committee on Ordnance, who represent this case, willing to trust General Holt, who is the official representative of the Government, who sits there in the court and watches its proceedings, who has expressed his desire that these men should be permitted to investigate and examine the records, and who has the power to grant them that privilege according to the order of the Secretary of War indorsed upon the back of their application, if he chooses to do so? I do not object to this order being made so far as this individual case is concerned; but I do object to the establishment of a precedent by which any party who wants to go and rummage the records of any of the Departments of this Government shall come in here and in the morning hour rush through a resolution authorizing him or his attorney to overhaul and overturn all the records of any of the Departments of the Government.

Mr. HOWARD. The Senator from Iowa does the joint Committee on Ordnance great injustice when he speaks of them as being the representatives of this case, or as having anything to do with it.

Mr. GRIMES. I did not speak of them in that capacity; I spoke of the attorneys, of Arrick and Kennon, whose petition the gentleman held in his hand, as being the representatives of the case, and as being private prosecutors according to the admission of the Senator himself.

Mr. HOWARD. I understood the honorable Senator very distinctly, as I thought, to say that the committee were the representatives of this case. He certainly made a reference to the joint Committee on Ordnance for some purpose, and I understood him to say, very clearly, that they were the representatives of this case either before the court of inquiry or somewhere else. In that the honorable Senator is entirely mistaken.

Mr. GRIMES. I am not responsible for the Senator's understanding of what I said. I am only responsible for what I did say. I did not say any such thing. I said that this proposition came from the Committee on Ordnance.

Mr. HOWARD. The Senator is equally mistaken there. This proposition does not come from the Committee on Ordnance at all. The committee have nothing to do with it. I offer the resolution here upon my own responsibility, in order to promote justice and to enable facts to be presented before that court of inquiry which some person is anxious, as it seems to me, to suppress. It is very true that the Judge Advocate General has authority to allow an inspection of these records, if he chooses to do so; but he does not permit it for some reason or other, and the counsel for the accusers allege that an inspection of these records is absolutely essential to the administration of justice and to the ascertainment of the whole truth in the case. To ascertain that truth is undoubtedly the object for which the court of inquiry was organized. I do not see any objection to the passage of such a resolution as this by Congress. Without such a resolution, it may turn out to be utterly impossible to arrive at the truth, and the whole truth, in regard to the charges made in respect to General Dyer, chief of ordnance. I trust that the truth will not be suppressed by defeating this resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRIMES. I call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GRIMES. I simply desire to say that this is a proposition to authorize private persons, who are denominated by the Senator from Michigan as the representatives of private prosecutors, to go into the Ordnance Bureau of this Government and overhaul the records there. I have proposed to amend the resolution so as to give authority to the Judge Advocate General, who is the official representative of the Government, and who is acting with these representatives of private parties, to do that.

Mr. HOWARD. And it is fairly to be inferred from the indorsement of the Judge Advocate General that he is unwilling to allow an inspection of the original records. If he has the power he has refused to exercise it. He indorses upon the request made to him the following words, which I read before:

"Respectfully submitted to the consideration of the Secretary of War, with an expression of opinion that the distinct averments made by the writers on their professional honor are quite sufficient to justify the granting of this request for the personal examination of the records referred to."

That is what General Holt says.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now read what the Secretary of War says, and we shall understand the whole case.

Mr. HOWARD. I read it before, but I will read it again:

December 29, 1868.

Respectfully returned to the Judge Advocate General, who is the official prosecutor in this case, and whose duty it is to procure from the records of the War Department and its bureaus all evidence which ought to be brought before the court. For this purpose he may in person or by either of his authorized assistants search the records, and may employ to aid him such experts as may be necessary; but permission to search the records of the Department cannot be given by the Secretary of War to any person not subject to his authority.

J. M. SCHOFIELD,
Secretary of War.

I know nothing in the nature of a public record, whether it be in a Department, in a court of justice, or elsewhere, that is so sacred that parties interested in the record are to be excluded from an actual inspection of the paper itself in order to ascertain whether the record has been preserved, as is required by law, or whether it has been mutilated and diminished for some sinister purpose. The counsel in this matter allege that they have reason to believe, and do believe, that there has been such a mutilation of the records in the ordnance office; and they therefore ask permission, in the presence of the chief of ordnance himself, if he chooses to be present, to make an actual inspection of the ordnance records, to ascertain to their own satisfaction whether there has been a mutilation or not; and I think it becomes the honor and the dignity of the Government itself to see to it that its records have not been mutilated or injured.

Mr. GRIMES. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Michigan is hardly justified, judging from this indorsement of the Judge Advocate General, in saying that he manifestly is unwilling that the records of the Ordnance Bureau should be investigated by these parties. On the contrary, he expresses a willingness that it should be done, and recommends that the Secretary of War shall grant such permission.

Mr. HOWARD. But the Secretary says he has no power to grant it.

Mr. GRIMES. Very well. What I was speaking to just at this moment was that the Senator from Michigan seemed to convey the idea that if this matter was left to the Judge Advocate General, he would not grant these parties the permission to examine the records. To that I say he has already committed himself by the indorsement which he made upon their application, that they ought to be permitted to examine the records.

Mr. HOWARD. No; there is a mistake about that. He is silent on that subject.

Mr. GRIMES. Here it is:

Respectfully submitted for the consideration of the Secretary of War, with an expression of opinion that the distinct averments made by the writers on their professional honor are quite sufficient to justify the granting of such a request for the personal examination of the records.

J. HOLT.

He says that the specific averments alleged in their application are sufficient to justify an order authorizing them to make this examination. The Secretary of War says in response to that: "I do not think it proper to allow those private persons to go in there and overhaul the records and examine all the transactions of this Government in connection not only with this particular thing now under investigation, but everything else during the last fifty years; but I will authorize the Judge Advocate General to make that examination either through himself or through anybody that he may appoint." Have they applied to the Judge Advocate General? Have they been refused by the Judge Advocate General?

Mr. HOWARD. I suppose they have.

Mr. GRIMES. I suppose they have not. There is no evidence of it. So far from it, we have reason to suppose they have never made any such application, and have never been refused, because the Judge Advocate General is upon the record indorsing the application and saying that they ought to be permitted to make the investigation. But, instead of applying to the Judge Advocate General, who is associated with them as one of the attorneys in the case, they run off to Congress and ask us to interfere in this special case and give them authority to overhaul those records.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And entirely independent of him.

Mr. GRIMES. And, as is remarked by my friend, entirely independent of him, without any reference to the Judge Advocate General or anybody else.

Mr. HOWARD. The resolution expressly says that it may be done in the presence of the chief of ordnance if he chooses to be present. In point of fact I have been informed by the counsel that they have been refused absolutely access to these records. They cannot get at them.

Mr. GRIMES. By whom have they been refused?

Mr. HOWARD. By the Judge Advocate General.

Mr. GRIMES. Now, Mr. President, I want to have this resolution lie over until to-morrow until that matter can be investigated. I cannot believe that a man of honor like Judge Holt, who has made such an indorsement as that on that paper, could within a few hours after having made it turn around and deny to those persons the privilege of doing the very thing he put himself on record as being in favor of their having the power to do. If he has, it ought to be known to the Senate, that we may know what confidence in future to place upon the representations of a man in as conspicuous a place as General Holt is. As my friend from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] suggests, we ought to know, if he has done it, the reasons why he has done it. Those reasons may be of great consequence; they may affect the public interest; and we ought not to be called upon to pass upon a question of this kind, involving, it may be, the safety of the public records, upon the mere declaration that a public officer has ignored what he has already authorized to be done and expressed himself in favor of being done.

Mr. HOWARD. The Senator is mistaken in the inference he draws from the indorsement made by Judge Holt upon the application which was made to him for this privilege to inspect the records. He does not give the permission, but he refers the paper containing the request to the Secretary of War, who returns it to him with an indorsement saying substantially that he has nothing to do with it and has no power over it, referring the whole thing back to Judge Holt. There the thing stands, as a matter of fact. Now, as I said before, I am informed that the Judge Advocate General refused to give to the counsel access to those records for the purpose of inspecting them. There is no danger whatever of the records being lost. It is only the privilege granted to every private party who has an interest in a subject-matter of inspecting the public records; and it seems to me it is little better than mere pretense to refuse it on this occasion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, the unfinished business of yesterday is before the Senate, being the bill commonly called the copper bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 173) respecting the provisional governments of Virginia and Texas, with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1599) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1870; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 413) in relation to lands and other property of W. W. Corcoran in the District of Columbia, used by the United States Government during and since the war of the rebellion.

VIRGINIA AND TEXAS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 173) respecting the provisional governments of Virginia and Texas, which was to add the following proviso:

Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to persons who by reason of the removal of their disabilities, as provided in the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, shall have qualified for any office in pursuance of the act entitled "An act prescribing an oath of office for persons from whom legal disabilities shall have been removed," approved July 11, 1868: And provided further, That this joint resolution shall not take effect until thirty days from and after its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. POMEROY. I should like to have that amendment explained. I presume it is all right, but I do not understand it. I should like to have the Senator who has it in charge state what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill and amendment will lie on the table.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1599) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1870, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 413) in relation to lands and other property of W. W. Corcoran in the District of Columbia, used by the United States Government during and since the war of the rebellion, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

DUTIES ON IMPORTED COPPER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1460) regulating the duties on imported copper and copper ores.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, there is a misapprehension on the part of many Senators as to the amendment which was offered and adopted yesterday. One of the Senators from Massachusetts informed me that had he been aware of the adoption of that amendment he would have sustained the bill yesterday. I will read that amendment as it was adopted by the Senate:

"On copper in rolled plates, called brasier's copper, sheets, rods, pipes, and copper bottoms, eyelets, and all manufactures of copper or of which copper shall be a component of chief value, not otherwise herein provided for, forty-five per cent. ad valorem."

It was understood by the friends of the bill that the adoption of that amendment would remove the objections from that quarter to the bill; and I was rather surprised that it was not understood universally by the body. That amendment was adopted, and is now a part of the bill before the Senate.

The Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. FERRY,] in my judgment, led the Senate into a mistake in his remarks yesterday. He said:

"Well now, sir, I have just this to say about my State of Connecticut in this connection: we ask no favors of the Senator from Michigan; we have not been accustomed in that little Commonwealth to look up to the Government of the United States to help us in developing our resources and building up our enterprises. Sir, by the energy, the industry, the capital of Connecticut, invested and developed through the indomitable perseverance of its people since the very foundation of this Government, its rocky hills have been made to blossom as the rose; its every valley has been made to resound with the hum of machinery.

"Sir, you may strike off from your statute book every farthing of protection which you give to our interests, and Connecticut will go on as she has gone on in the past. You may take away from us your tariffs; you cannot take away from us the indomitable energy of our people."

Mr. President, I would not detract one iota from the indomitable energy of the people of Connecticut; but I believe the Senator from Connecticut to be under a very grave misapprehension as to the effect of removing all protection from that people. While I admit their indomitable energy, I will say that there is not a people in these United States who have shown so indomitable an energy in seeking for the protection of every article that is produced by them as the people of Connecticut. There is not an article produced there, from a wooden button to a brass clock or from carpetings to jew's-harps, that is not heavily protected by this Government; and yesterday, when I called up this bill asking for a small protection upon this great copper interest, the very first movement was to look out for every single production of Connecticut by increasing the duty on the manufactures of copper ten per cent., and we accepted it, with the understanding that with that increase it would be satisfactory. Sir, she was early in the field.

Mr. FERRY. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. FERRY. With whom did the Senator have any such understanding?

Mr. CHANDLER. Not with the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. FERRY. The implication of the remark would lead to such a conclusion.

Mr. CHANDLER. It was not with the Senator from Connecticut. Now, sir, I do not wish any misapprehension on this subject. I have no remarks to make as to the energy and success of Connecticut. I rejoice in it. I have a right to speak on this question of the tariff, for I have been a tariff man all my life. There never has been a tariff brought here since I have been a member of the body—twelve years—that I have not voted for; and in every instance I think I have voted for the highest tariff proposed. I have no recollection of ever having deviated from that course. I believe in protecting American manufactures and American productions. I believe in protecting the labor of the nation, and I have voted in consonance with that belief.

But, sir, let us look a little at the products of Connecticut and the protection afforded them. Connecticut is largely interested, as we all know, in manufactures. The manufacture of sewing-silk is protected by forty per cent.; of velvets, sixty per cent.; of ribbons, sixty per cent.; dress and plain goods, sixty per cent.; pongees and vestings, sixty per cent.; shawls—and they are a very large article in the produce of Connecticut—sixty per cent.; hosiery, sixty per cent.; laces, braids, fringes, galloons, &c., sixty per cent. These are the products of Connecticut that the Senator is willing shall be deprived of their protection. I can tell the Senator that if you deprive these articles of that protection every single factory in Connecticut producing them would stop within a week; ay, sir, they would stop within a day. And so you may go through with the entire list of articles produced in that State. Silks, and manufactures of silk, ready-made clothing, a large product there, are protected by sixty per cent. Silk manufactures, wholly of silk and not otherwise specified, fifty per cent.; silk mixed goods, fifty per cent. Even roofing slate—and is there a rarer material than roofing slate?—has a protection of thirty-five per cent. And now when we ask for twelve and a half per cent. upon copper that you have to go two thousand feet into the bowels not of the earth but of the rocks to raise, the Senator objects to affording us that little protection. Slate and slate-pencils, a large manufacture of Connecticut, are protected by forty per cent.; common castile, and all like soaps, thirty per cent.

So you may go through with the list. As I said before, there is not a button or a jews-harp, not a clock or an article that is produced in Connecticut that is not, on an average, in my judgment—I have not looked it over accurately—protected by forty or fifty per cent. ad valorem.

Then you may take other articles. Take back-saws not over ten inches in length, on which the duty is seventy-five cents per dozen and thirty per cent. ad valorem; over ten inches in length, one dollar per dozen and thirty per cent. ad valorem; files, rasps, and floats not over ten inches in length, ten cents per pound and thirty per cent. ad valorem. So you may go through with every article produced in Connecticut, and you will find the protection about in that ratio. And yet the Senator says he can run his factories if you abolish all duties; he asks no odds. I presume it is because the Senator knew nothing at all about the tariff or its application to the manufactures of Connecticut. While this enormous protection is granted to everything that Connecticut produces, when we come in and ask for a protection amounting to twelve and a half per cent., or thereabouts, upon a product in which $50,000,000 is invested, he is unwilling to grant it.

Mr. President, there is not a single article produced in the United States that I am aware of on which the protection is so small as that which we ask for this copper interest. This copper interest is not confined to the State of Michigan. Tennessee, Vermont, West Virginia, California, and other States are interested as well as Michigan; and let me say that the California mines, the richest mines in the United States, are stopped to-day, are not raising a single pound, because you do not grant them this little protection. They could mine copper enough there, for aught I know, to supply the world, but they cannot raise it in competition with the Brazilian ores.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE] was likewise mistaken in his figures, and very greatly mistaken. He says that the whole product of the Lake Superior mines is nine million pounds a year. Sir, the product of the Lake Superior mines has amounted to more than seventeen million pounds a year for the past four years. Then, again, he says that the consumption is about twenty-five thousand tons. The consumption of copper amounts to only about twelve thousand five hundred tons, or twenty-five million pounds a year. That is the whole consumption.

Mr. WHYTE. The Senator will permit me to correct him. I said twenty-five million pounds.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I misunderstood the Senator. I stand corrected. Michigan alone furnishes seventeen million pounds of that twenty-five million pounds, and has done so for the last four years on an average. Other parts of the United States have supplied so as to make up over twenty out of the twenty-five millions. So the product, instead of being one third of the consumption of the United States, is four fifths of the consumption to-day, and with this little protection we can supply the whole consumption within one year. Why, sir, the amount of copper produced last year would amount to $5,000,000 in gold. That would have gone out of the United States in gold for the purchase of that copper but for the product of these mines. Are you prepared to say that these mines shall be shut up and your gold go abroad for the purchase of copper, when the earth is filled with the mineral that you require?

But, sir, the Senator was mistaken in another respect. The Senator is not conversant with the facts, I presume, and has been deceived by those who were either interested or intentionally deceived him. I wish to call his attention, and the attention of the Senate, to a few statements of facts made by him, that they may be corrected. The Senator says:

"A quintal is one hundred and one and forty-four hundredths pounds.

Ore usually costs in South America three dollars per quintal, which is, per ton of 2,240 pounds.....$66 54
Export duty about.....1 00
Commissions for buying and shipping, five per cent.....3 34
Cost of sampling, assaying, &c.....1 00
Freight, £3 5s. sterling.....15 73

Total.....$87 61

"One ton of eighteen per cent. ore is four hundred and three pounds copper, making copper in ore cost twenty-one and three quarter cents per pound in gold, not including any duties or exchange."

Now, Mr. President, I hold in my hand a price current, printed in Valparaiso, Chili, on the 9th day of December, 1868, wherein these ores are named, and I presume this is as late advice as the Senator has from Valparaiso. If he has any later, I shall be very happy to stand corrected. This was the public advertisement of the prices on that day, in the most influential paper in Valparaiso:

"Fourteen thousand quintals of ore, yielding twelve and one third per cent., at 35 10-100 cents per quintal; fourteen thousand quintals, yielding twenty-five per cent., $2 81 25-100 cents, free on board."

That is under three dollars a hundred for ore yielding twenty-five, not eighteen, per cent. The Senator has been mistaken in his figures. They do not import ores yielding eighteen per cent. They import ores yielding twenty-five per cent., and rarely do they go below that, and never if they can help it. Now, sir, ores yielding twenty-five per cent. were sold on the 9th of December last at $2 81½ free on board. Then I find quotations of six thousand quintals at $2 75, and again at $2 81½ free on board. So you see, Mr. President, that instead of being three dollars per quintal, as he states, for ores yielding eighteen per cent., it is $2 81½ per quintal for ores yielding twenty-five per cent., or nearly one third more. So it makes a very material difference in the cost of the article. I have here the estimate, reckoning twenty-five per cent. ores, mark you, at three dollars per quintal, which is eighteen and three quarter cents more than the price current of those ores was on the 9th day of December. The estimate is eighteen and three quarter cents above the cost:

"The published statement of Mr. Martin that 'copper ore costs in South America (Chili) ordinarily three dollars per quintal,' is not true of eighteen per cent. ores, and his figures in this connection are a gross perversion of facts.

"The following figures show the approximate cost of copper in Chili ores landed in the United States, duty paid.

"It may be remarked that three dollars per unit is above the average price paid in 1868 for eighteen per cent. ores in Chili on shipboard, and that freights have varied from twelve to fifteen dollars to the United States.

"At Valparaiso, October 3, 1868, copper ores of twenty-five per cent. purity were costing $2 75 per unit, delivered on board ship at the ports of Chili.

"But suppose we take a higher price, say three dollars per unit, the cost of copper in the ores, delivered at New York or Baltimore, would be as follows:

Twenty-five per cent. ores at three dollars per "unit" of one per cent. per ton of ore.....$75 00 gold
Freight to United States at fifteen dollars per ton of ore.....15 00 gold Duty five per cent. on seventy-five dollars.....3 75 gold

Cost in United States per ton of twenty-two hundred and forty pounds, duty paid.....$93 75 gold

"A ton of twenty-five per cent. ores would yield in fine copper five hundred and sixty-two pounds, which would cost, landed in New York or Baltimore, as above, $93 75, or sixteen and three quarter cents per pound gold."

Sixteen and three quarter cents a pound, instead of, as the Senator's informant stated, twenty-one and three quarter cents, and this duty paid. It makes a great difference whether these ores yield twenty-five per cent. or eighteen per cent., and it is some difference whether they cost two dollars and seventy-five cents or three dollars a unit.

*The difference in exchange at Valparaiso in favor of shippers, usually from seven to nine per cent., would cover the cost of commission, insurance, and petty charges.

Eighteen per cent. ores at three dollars per unit would cost per ton on board ship.....$54 00
Freight to United States.....15 00
Duty, five per cent.....2 70

Cost per ton landed in the United States, duty paid.....$71 70

"Eighteen per cent. ores would yield four hundred and three pounds of fine copper per ton of ore; costing in New York or Baltimore in the ore $71 70, or seventeen and seven tenths cents per pound gold.

"But the Atlantic coast smelters would, of course, import ores of twenty-five per cent., and thus save in freight.

"Mr. Martin's published assertion that the copper in Chilean ores costs twenty-one and three quarter cents per pound gold, not including duty, (and not counting the cost of smelting), is an amazing untruth."

Mr. Martin, it seems, is the man who furnished these figures. Now, Mr. President, I have no doubt that whoever furnished them has deceived my friend from Maryland, and that he has stated them without any knowledge as to the actual facts. I hold in my hand the Valparaiso West Coast Mail of December 9, 1868, which shows the exact cost of these ores free on board at that date. The figures that I have now presented here may be relied upon; and I trust, with this explanation, that this bill will be allowed to pass without further amendment, and as it is.

Mr. SHERMAN. I simply wish to correct a statement that I made to the Senate yesterday, on the authority of a distinguished member of the House of Representatives, in which I think we were both in error. I stated that the gold price of copper was twenty-five cents a pound. I am now satisfied that that must be erroneous. I was partially misled into making the statement by the statement of Henry Martin, president of the Baltimore Copper Company, who says that the net cost of a ton of fine copper, not the fluxed ore, is, when landed in the United States, twenty-two and a half cents per pound in gold. Making a proper allowance for fluxing it, I suppose the statement made to me by a member of the House of twenty-five cents was not unreasonable; but I am satisfied now from examining the prices current shown to me by the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Vermont that probably the currency price of copper is about twenty-five cents a pound, so that the rate of duty on copper ore, according to the terms of this bill, will be something in the neighborhood of from fifteen or sixteen to seventeen per cent., counting the gold price of copper at about eighteen or nineteen cents a pound, which I think is about the price of copper delivered here. It may be quoted a little less in foreign markets by the foreign valuation.

I desired to make this statement merely because on questions of precise facts I prefer to be accurate rather than loose. I made the statement I did yesterday on the authority of a member of the House and a member of the committee who reported this bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Senator from Ohio desires to be strictly accurate. The foreign valuation is the valuation on which an ad valorem would be levied if we had an ad valorem duty. This being a specific duty it amounts to a larger sum than even that now named by the Senator. As the foreign cost of copper is not quite sixteen cents, varying from fifteen to sixteen cents, a duty of five cents a pound on copper would be something like thirty or thirty-three per cent., and on the ores the duty here proposed would amount to something like twenty or twenty-one per cent.

Mr. SHERMAN. I stated the cost here in gold.

Mr. CHANDLER. The rate of duty fixed by this bill does not amount to over fifteen or fifteen and a half per cent. on the ores.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It amounts to precisely three cents a pound on all the copper contained in the ore.

*The difference in exchange at Valparaiso in favor of shippers, usually from seven to nine per cent., would cover the cost of commission, insurance, and petty charges.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is very easy to figure. Ores are worth to-day twenty-four cents, and a duty of three cents in currency would be twelve and a half per cent. Any man can figure that out without any difficulty. Then there is to be added simply the premium or difference between gold and currency.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. But the Senator makes a mistake. Our duties are not levied on the currency value nor on the home value; they are levied on the gold value abroad.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, I gave notice yesterday that I had one or two amendments to move to this bill; and to the one with which I begin I think there can be no objection by the Senators from Michigan. I propose to introduce, after the word "enumerated" in the fourteenth line, the words "including sulphate of copper or blue vitriol," the object being to give that article, blue vitriol, the same protection with copper. On that I shall content myself with reading a precise statement which I have received from a business firm.

Mr. CHANDLER. Allow me to ask the Senator whether he can tell what proportion of copper is contained in blue vitriol?

Mr. SUMNER. I think there is something about that in what I am going to read now.

Mr. CHANDLER. My impression is that there is a very large proportion of copper in it, and therefore it is included in the amendment already adopted.

Mr. SUMNER. I took notice of that amendment, and I think it does not cover it.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the chief component part is copper, as I am informed, it is covered; but I shall not object to the amendment.

Mr. SUMNER. I did not suppose the Senator would object to it. With his permission I will read the statement to which I have referred, so that it may be of record. These writers say:

"The copper interest no doubt needs protection; but it would be ruinous for us if the bill as passed the House should become a law unless a corresponding increase was made to the duty on blue vitriol, every additional cent a pound on copper being equal to one quarter of a cent on blue vitriol, and unless this is done, by assisting the copper interest in the way proposed, you would close every blue vitriol establishment in the country. You will readily see the great importance of this question, and we beg that you will immediately take such steps as will prevent the bill from passing the Senate unless an amendment of the above import accompanies it."

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no objection to this amendment.

Mr. SUMNER. I understand there is no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I have another amendment, which I propose to come in as a proviso at the end of the bill:

Provided, That all sheet copper or yellow metal imported in any American ship or vessel, to be used and actually used for her own sheathing, may be imported duty free.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object to that.

Mr. SUMNER. Let my friend from Michigan hear the explanation. I know he is full of justice, and I think I shall have the support of my excellent friend if he will only listen to a statement of one minute.

He is aware that the commerce of our country has suffered much during these latter years; and I know that, as the head of the Committee on Commerce, he certainly will not be against anything for its relief. What I propose is very small; but it is in the nature of relief, and in this way: the excellent ships of our country that are built in Maine and Massachusetts and generally on our coast go abroad on their first voyage without being sheathed, and they get their copper and are sheathed in a foreign port. Why is that? It is for economy, because under existing tariffs if they were sheathed at home they would be obliged to pay the duty on the copper used in the sheathing. It is to save that additional expense that they go abroad unsheathed and get their sheathing in foreign yards. Now, I simply propose that these ships shall have the privilege of bringing their sheathing-copper home and employing it in our own yards. The Government will lose nothing by this proposition, because these very vessels, if you do not allow them to bring their sheathing-copper home, will find it abroad and have it put on there. Why shall they not be allowed to bring it home with them and have it put on in our own ship-yards, and thus give employment to our own mechanics and give to the owners of the ships the satisfaction of completing the vessels in our own yards?

I can see no objection in principle to this proposition; and further, I do not see how in any way the revenue can be affected, because, as I have already said, these very ships will be sheathed while they are abroad if you do not allow them to bring the copper home. Now, I hope I have convinced my friend.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I do not wish to go into a discussion of this question. It has been thoroughly discussed and tried, I believe, at every session of the last four or five years—the question of giving a drawback.

Mr. SUMNER. Oh, no.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly; it was tried by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] last winter and winter before last. It is the same old question. I do not wish to go into an argument on it. It will take a great deal of time if we open up that question. Our lake vessels have not the facilities for going abroad, and by this proposition you would discriminate in favor of ocean vessels against lake and river vessels. It is opening up the whole subject of a drawback on everything that goes into the manufacture of ships, which would lead to a long discussion; and I hope the Senate will vote down the amendment promptly.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, it opens no question of drawback. It opens the simple question that I have proposed. It cannot be extended to any other case. Of course it cannot be extended to the navigation of the lakes; they are not in the predicament which will allow it; and the practical question is whether when ships that sail from our coast are in the predicament to allow this favor they shall not have it. Already that commerce has suffered inconceivably. Our ships are almost driven from the sea. Ship-owners wish for assistance of some kind. Now, I propose one way of giving them very slight assistance, but still something that may be so called. I hope there will be no objection to it. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. I should like to see how the Senate stands on the question of aiding in some way our shipping.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to say that by any vote I shall give on this subject I do not propose to commit myself in regard to any theory relative to drawbacks on articles used in the manufacture of ships or to protection for shipping.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it would be a great deal better to postpone the passage of this bill than to complicate it by throwing off duties on manufactured articles. Copper is a manufactured article now, subject to a duty of forty-five per cent. There will be disputes as to this copper when it is brought in. There will be questions of fact as to whether the copper was used upon the vessel. Various questions of that kind will arise. I think it will be better at once, rather than load down this bill with amendments which would raise the question of drawbacks on manufactured copper, to let the bill go over. I never felt any great solicitude about this bill, and I only agreed to report it because it will give a small relief—not so much as the Senator from Michigan seems to think—to an interest now very severely depressed; and unless the Senate is willing to take it as a simple proposition by itself for that sole purpose I do not think it will be wise to pass it. If it is to be loaded down with amendments providing for a system of drawbacks, providing for increased duties on manufactured articles, you will complicate the subject so much that I shall feel it much better not to pass the bill until we make a general revision of the tariff. I shall therefore vote against this amendment or any other amendment that will sacrifice revenue.

Mr. SUMNER. I will meet the Senator on his last two points. And first, as to loading down the bill, I do not propose to load down the bill. There is no load in my proposition. It is light, because it is just. Then, in the second place, the Senator insists that this proposition should go into some more general bill. Why so? It is a proposition which has in it so much of essential justice that the Senate cannot err in adopting it on any bill.

The Senator also says that he is unwilling that the revenue should suffer; but by this amendment of mine the revenue cannot suffer. If the Senator had listened to the proposition I think he would have seen that he is mistaken. The revenue cannot suffer at all by this proposition, and our commerce will be helped. Now, the practical question for the Senate is, whether upon a case where the revenue will not suffer a dollar you will refuse a proposed relief to the commerce of the country.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 14, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Davis, Dixon, Edmunds, Ferry, Fessenden, McCreery, McDonald, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson of New Hampshire, Spencer, Sumner, Warner, and Wilson—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Cameron, Chandler, Cole, Conkling, Doolittle, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Kellogg, Morgan, Morton, Nye, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Rice, Robertson, Sawyer, Sherman, Stewart, Thayer, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Vickers, Wade, Whyte, Wiley, and Williams—32.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Buckalew, Cattell, Conness, Corbett, Cragin, Drake, Hurlan, Hendricks, Morrill of Maine, Norton, Osborn, Pool, Ramsey, Ross, Saulsbury, Sprague, Tipton, Welch, and Yates—20.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SUMNER. I have still another amendment. I have made an effort in behalf of commerce; I now make an effort in behalf of another article which at this moment has not adequate protection under the existing tariff. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the bill:

On hair-cloth of the description known as hair-seating, forty-five cents per square yard.

On hair-cloth known as crinoline cloth or padding or similar goods however designated, forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

On this proposition I have to say that it is identical with one which has already passed the Senate during the second session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress, which has already passed the House of Representatives in another bill which has been recommended by the Ways and Means Committee at the last session of Congress, both in the general bill and in what is known as the MOORHEAD tariff, and is also approved by Commissioner Wells in his report; and I am not aware that anybody has ever presented any objection to the proposition.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Is it not covered by the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SUMNER. No; I beg pardon, it is not. This is hair-cloth.

Mr. CHANDLER. It has nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from Michigan says it has nothing to do with this bill. I beg the Senator's pardon; it has something to do with the manufactures of the country and with the public interests, and therefore it is germane to this bill. The specific duty which is proposed in the amendment I have moved is equal to about forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Now, I do not wish to go into any minute discussion on this question. I shall content myself by reminding the Senate that this article is one which has only comparatively recently taken a considerable place in commerce. Down to a late period hair-cloth was made by hand-looms moved by the cheap labor of the old world. Latterly in our own country it is made by machinery. There are certain persons who have invested a great deal in this machinery who have produced excellent work. It is used extensively, as we all know, throughout the country, and is also exported. The existing tariff on this fabric is about thirty per cent. It is the tariff that was originally imposed some eighty years ago, and it was then in harmony with the tariff on other textile fabrics; but while the tariff on other textile fabrics has risen in a constantly ascending ratio this has stood still. It is still only thirty per cent. I am told that the average on textile fabrics is sixty-two and a half per cent., while on this there is a tariff of only thirty per cent. Those who are engaged in this business, and most meritorious persons they are, have had to struggle under a duty of only thirty per cent., while there was this large duty on other textile fabrics. They naturally appeal to Congress for relief at this moment when, under the lead of my friend from Michigan, it is beginning to revise the tariff system and to apply a remedy in a specific case; and why should they not have it? The case, to be sure, does not commend itself so grandly as that represented by my friend from Michigan; it does not concern so many millions; it has not so large a name; it is not a great mineral interest, but it is an honest, true, substantial manufacturing interest.

My friend, I know, is against no such interest as that, and I ask that he shall receive and welcome on his bill and be hospitable to this proposition, which has in it simply elements of justice. I will read to you a portion of a statement which has been made by gentlemen interested in this fabric. They say:

"Our machinery is admirably adapted to its purpose, but almost worthless for any other use; we must make hair-cloth on it or stop it entirely, in the latter emergency reducing its value to about that of old iron.

"The rate we now ask is a minimum rate, but we think it will enable us to run our mill until such time as there shall be a general tariff revision, when we shall claim to be made equal to kindred interests, whatever may be the rate. In our present distress we prefer to make our demand so moderate that no question can be raised.

"We really ought to have a higher rate than the average of textile fabrics, inasmuch as our labor account is a heavy percentage of entire cost, the best looms under the best management producing only some five yards per day.

"Our enterprise is not an experiment; it is in full operation, producing the best goods of their class in the world; it is in every respect creditable to American industry, and is worthy of attention by Government such as is given to similar interests. We ask no more, and think we ought not to be asked to expect less."

I do not know that I can add anything to this simple statement of the case. I see no objection to the amendment on a bill like the present. If the Senate is undertaking to legislate on this subject; if it thinks it proper now in a bill to provide for a specific interest in order to meet the exigency of the time, then I submit that I have made out a case, and a good case, for a similar provision.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I am informed by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means that if any amendments go on to this bill not germane to copper they will defeat the bill in the other House. No amendments have gone on except those connected with the copper interest, and I hope this amendment will be voted down, as it will defeat the bill. It will do no good to the hair-cloth interest, but will ruin the copper interest. I hope, therefore, the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope not.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not see how it is going to ruin the copper interest to put a fair protection on another interest, or how it is going to hurt this bill to put on it a proposition that has received the assent of both Houses of Congress, that has received the assent of the Committee of Ways and Means and the Finance Committee, and that is recommended by the Special Commissioner of the Revenue. It seems to me it will strengthen the bill. This is a new branch of manufacture, and a very interesting branch of manufacture, developing a new industry in the country, and giving employment not only directly but indirectly to a large amount of capital and a large number of men. There are more than half a million dollars invested in this manufacture now in my own State. It cannot go on under the present system. Not only is the duty too low, but the manufacture is peculiarly subject to fraudulent undervaluation in the foreign article. The hair-cloth that is imported into this country does not pay the duty, as is made very apparent by a table now before me drawn from official sources which I will not trouble the Senate with.

I think that the Senator from Michigan being sure of his bill, having the Senate with him, might oblige his friends who are equally interested in other branches of industry, and allow this proposition, which has already received the assent of Congress to go upon this bill. It will not hurt his bill; it will be of very great benefit to us. If there is any tariff proposition that has received the assent of both Houses of Congress why not put it on this bill? If another proposition comes before us with the weight of this, a proposition that has already been agreed to, let it go on this bill. It will not hurt this bill, and it is merely carrying out the will of Congress as heretofore expressed; and it is very well understood now that there can be no general revision of the tariff at this session. Here you are taking a particular interest and separating it from all others. I do not think it is hard to put a particular interest through in that way, but I think it is hard to refuse to receive, as my friend from Massachusetts said, with some degree of hospitality, other propositions that are equally important and equally necessary to the industry of the country.

Mr. VICKERS. The amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts is an evidence, it seems to me, of the impropriety of selecting a single article upon which the duty shall be raised, leaving out other articles of an important nature. In the adjustment of the tariff it seems to me there should be a general adjustment, because the different sections and the different articles raised in different sections all have some relation to each other, as well as to the capital and to the labor employed. If this article of hair-cloth is to be introduced into this bill there are other interests that might also be introduced. The Senator from Massachusetts has not exactly told us of the character of the hair that is to enter into this composition, whether it be straight hair or curly hair. [Laughter.] If it be the latter I shall be opposed certainly to his amendment. [Laughter.]

But we are now, sir, in the anomalous condition of absolutely asking Congress to protect ourselves against ourselves; to protect us against the labor of our own people. I have always understood that the object of a tariff was to protect the industry and the interests of our own people against foreign labor and foreign capital; but this bill is to protect a particular section of our country and a particular interest against other interests of our country, and against the labor and capital of our own country. This is to me an anomaly in legislation. These mines upon Lake Superior have grown up since 1845, and they have grown up under the legislation of Congress. Capital was invested in these mines, labor was employed, and if it was not found as profitable as anticipated capital would seek other investments and more profit could be realized. Now, sir, what is the condition of the interests advocated so eloquently by my colleague and others in this Chamber? Not, as represented by the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. HOWARD,] simply an issue between the smelting company of the city of Baltimore and the great works upon Lake Superior; but, as was properly said by the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. FERRY:]

"We have before us, adverse to this bill, the petition of the Baltimore Copper Company, with a capital of $1,000,000; we have a petition of ship-builders of the United States; we have a petition of ship-owners of the United States; we have a petition of three California mining companies; we have the petition of Moore & Co., of the Keystone copper mine; another of the copper mines of Nevada; another of the Mineral Hill mine of Maryland; the Cornwell ore bank of Pennsylvania; of the Bear Hill mine of Maryland; and of the Waterbury Copper and Brass Company of Connecticut."

These are the diversified interests which are to be affected by the operation of this bill, and not as the Senator from Michigan said yesterday simply a smelting company in the city of Baltimore, against which he made a fling of a want of patriotism; but if I understand the political complexion of those who are engaged in that company they would measure up to the highest standard, perhaps, of patriotism and loyalty to be erected by the Senator from Michigan. But, sir, questions of that sort I do not conceive should enter into the discussion of a great measure which involves the financial condition and industry of the country.

The operation of this bill would be to injure the finances of the country. The revenues would certainly be diminished. If I understand the object of this bill, it is a prohibitory bill; in its effect it is prohibitory, and I should like to know where we get the power of passing a prohibitory law in reference to the introduction of foreign fabrics. Why, sir, the Constitution gives to Congress the power to collect duties and imposts and excises; but it is for two purposes: to pay the debts, and to provide for the general welfare of the country. These are the purposes for which the power is given to Congress. The power to regulate commerce certainly does not imply the power to destroy the very object for which commerce is to be carried on.

I say, then, this bill will materially reduce the revenues to be derived from imports. Why, sir, looking at the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, we find that during the past year the duties on imports have decreased $12,000,000 and the tax upon incomes has brought $28,000,000 less this year than it did in the preceding year.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him how much duty has been paid on the importation of copper ores?

Mr. VICKERS. Well, sir, I will answer the Senator by asking him a question. I asked the Senator yesterday to inform me how much duty was paid upon copper ores, and he said he could not do it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I told the Senator that the whole amount was under fifty thousand dollars, and I believe it is under thirty thousand dollars; but I am not quite sure. I have not the exact figures; but $50,000 will cover the whole amount.

Mr. VICKERS. I was anxious to obtain the precise amount of duties derived from the importation of copper ore, but I was unable to do so. It was estimated, in a printed circular which I had upon my desk, at $50,000. The Senator from Michigan thought it was less, but was unable to give me the particular information desired. But, sir, be it $50,000 or $30,000 this bill will diminish the revenue to that amount. Then we have, as I stated, a diminution of the revenue on the single item of income to the extent of $28,000,000, and upon import duties of $12,000,000, making in these two items $40,000,000. Your national debt increased last month $1,500,000, and the preceding month $30,000,000. Now, sir, with an increase of the national debt, and a diminution of the revenue derived from imports, I ask how the national debt is to be paid and the honor of the country preserved?

If it be our sincere wish and desire to provide for the payment of this debt we should husband our resources, institute a system of retrenchment and economy, vote no money for new works of any description and economize in those which have been commenced, and endeavor, if possible, to reduce the expenses of the collection of the revenue and the number of persons employed in that collection. If we do this, if we economize and retrench and curtail, and by our legislation improve the amount of duties derived upon imports, we may possibly see the end of the payment of the national debt; but while the debt is increasing on the one hand and we are diminishing the revenues upon the other I cannot see that we shall extend any hope to the people that this debt will be paid.

Why, sir, we here seem to lose sight of this enormous debt. It is appalling in its contemplation. When we approach it and look at it in all its parts and dimensions it is appalling to the human mind. The people are now taxed to the utmost of their ability to pay. They are heavily taxed. The taxes are becoming oppressive, and there is a discontent growing up in the public mind in reference to this taxation. Let us, then, hold out to the people some hope that the taxes shall be diminished, or at all events not increased, and that there is some period in the future, perhaps not far distant, when they shall be to a certain extent relieved of taxation and hope to see this debt paid.

But, sir, there is another reason why we should not interfere with the tariff as it now stands. Stability in legislation on such subjects is one of the most important elements in political economy. If we are fluctuating every year in our legislation in matters of revenue, and especially in our tariff, capital will not be invested, labor will not be employed. We should be firm and stable in our legislation on such subjects, and not be changing it from year to year, selecting now and then a single article for protection and encouragement.

The copper mines in Michigan have grown up within a comparatively recent period, and, if I understood the Senator from Connecticut correctly yesterday, the receipts from those mines during the past year were greater than they had been in any previous year. And, sir, we are now called upon to do—what? We are called upon to tax the labor and the capital and the interests of one section of our country to benefit another section, and to remunerate the labor of that other section. It is not a tariff against foreign labor and foreign capital, but it is against our own capital and our own labor. If this bill passes we prejudice to a very material extent the capital and the labor of our own country, particularly of the section upon the Atlantic sea-board and some of the interior portions of the country; and we do this not against foreign labor, but we do it against ore extracted from the mines of foreign countries, and we do this when our own labor is to manufacture that ore and make fine copper out of it. I read, sir, from a communication of Dr. Piggot, a distinguished chemist, who says:

"It is difficult to define exactly the relative expenses of the two processes. To attempt to smelt copper from sulphurets alone would ruin any one who undertakes it at our present prices of labor and coal. He would be compelled to subject his ore to ten or twelve operations before he could get pig-copper from it." "The smelting of sulphurets ores by themselves would probably ruin either the miners or the smelters."

That is the opinion of a distinguished chemist. But now it is proposed that you shall tax the very ore that contains the principle by which you are to cheapen the production of copper here and make it profitable to our own people. He further says that the carbonate ores are not produced in this country. If they are not produced in this country, and they can only be had by importation, is it right to tax that article which we can only get from abroad, when it enters so largely into the manufacture of copper in this section of the country?

I understand that the tariff bill of 1866 proposed to impose a duty of six cents per pound upon imported wool. Imported wool enters into the manufacture of woolen goods in this country, and the duty was a small one; but upon imported woolen goods manufactured abroad by foreign capital and labor the duty was twenty-five cents per pound and forty per cent. ad valorem. Now, here we are to have this duty on ore raised from three quarters of a cent to three cents per pound. The duty by this bill is four times as large as it is by the existing law. If the Senator would make it one half, reducing it to a cent and a half per pound, and see what effect that would have upon the mines of his own section of the country, and by the next session of Congress we should ascertain what effect it had upon commerce and upon the imported ores, it seems to me we should legislate with more information and with better practical results.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire to say a word or two in relation to this proposed duty upon hair-cloth. In relation to this article I have no question but that it needs some additional protection more than it now has, but mainly for the reason of the difference in the valuations of the parties abroad who sell it to our merchants, the price varying upon an article twenty-seven inches wide from different manufacturers thus: one sells at sixty-eight cents a yard, another at seventy-five cents, another at fifty cents, another at sixty-seven and a half cents, another at fifty-six cents, another at fifty-four cents, and another at sixty cents. An ad valorem duty upon such a basis as that, of course, is no protection whatever. But I think in relation to this article as I do in relation to copper ores, that the amount asked is too much. Forty cents a yard would give a little addition in the amount and would prevent this fraud of undervaluation. If the Senator from Massachusetts will propose forty cents per square yard I shall be quite ready to vote for his proposition; and forty cents per square yard is enough, and for the reason that the parties who manufacture this article have their raw material either in a cleansed or uncleansed state free of duty; but the manufacturers of silks and of the other textile fabrics of which the Senator spoke, which have large amounts of duty placed upon them, pay a large percentage upon the raw material. Singles, tram, organzine—any silk in that advanced state—has a very considerable duty on it; and then when you come to place it in the form of velvets or dress silks or ribbons, of course it should have an increased rate. That is the reason why these articles have so high a rate of duty, and it is not mainly for protection either; it is mainly for purposes of revenue that these high duties are placed upon silks.

Mr. SUMNER. Do I understand the Senator to make a suggestion?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I suggest that the Senator should lower the rate of duty he proposes upon hair-cloth to forty cents per square yard, which will be a slight increase and will be a fixed fact against an undervaluation, which is the principal evil under which these manufacturers labor.

Mr. SUMNER. May I ask my friend if he has looked into this precise case, so that he can say that forty cents is sufficient?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I have.

Mr. SUMNER. My own impression, from the papers I have examined, is that more than that is needed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Why, sir, one of the best manufacturers in New England at the time of the establishment of the tariff of 1861 told me that if they could have their raw materials free all the duty they would ask was fifteen per cent. Here is a duty of thirty per cent. already upon this article. Now we propose to put a specific duty that shall raise the rate.

Mr. ANTHONY. What per cent. will it make it?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Forty cents per square yard will make it at least equal to forty per cent. on any honest valuation. It is enough.

Mr. SUMNER. I modify my amendment in conformity with the recommendation of the Senator from Vermont. I do it with hesitation; I fear he is mistaken, but I will defer to him and say forty cents instead of forty-five cents.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was read as follows:

On hair-cloth of the description known as hair-seating, forty cents per square yard.

On hair-cloth known as crinoline cloth, or padding, or similar goods, however designated, forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the amendment will not prevail. It will kill the bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. How can the Senator from Michigan say that it is going to defeat the bill to put upon it an amendment that the Senate have already agreed to, that the House have already agreed to, and that every organ of the Senate and of the House and of the Government that we listen to on matters of finance recommend?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Why not put on a whole tariff bill?

Mr. ANTHONY. If there is a whole tariff bill that both Houses have agreed to why not put it on? To put on a whole tariff bill that has not been considered by either House of Congress, and that would give rise to fresh discussion, would be manifestly improper. But I say that if you can take out of the MOORHEAD tariff bill, or any other tariff bill, any proposition that has recently received the assent of both Houses of Congress, it is proper to put it on this bill or any other bill. I appeal to the justice of the Senate, now that we are legislating for one interest, not to neglect this interest, which has equal claims upon us, and which has already been adjudicated upon by us.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from Michigan makes no objection to this proposition on its merits; but he says that if we put it on this bill it will kill the bill. He is mistaken; it will make the bill stronger, if the bill needed any additional strength. It will go back to the House of Representatives with an additional support, because it will contain a proposition which has already twice over received the votes of the House and also once before received the votes of the Senate. What can be the objection? Let the Senator from Michigan make an objection on the merits; he has not ventured upon it, but he ejaculates, in an oracular style, "It will kill the bill." Now, I say it will not kill the bill. I take issue with my friend on that proposition.

Then, again, on the merits, as the Senator from Rhode Island has so closely put it, why should we not take on this bill any proposition that has already received the support of both Houses? We do not wish to take on this bill a debatable proposition, a proposition that will kill the bill possibly when it goes back to the other House; but why should you not take a proposition that has already had the sanction of both Houses and which cannot hurt the bill? I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 17, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Anthony, Cragin, Dixon, Edmunds, Ferry, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson of New Hampshire, Pomeroy, Pool, Sawyer, Sumner, Vickers, Warner, Whyte, Williams, and Wilson—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Cameron, Chandler, Cole, Conkling, Corbett, Davis, Doolittle, Drake, Fessenden, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Howard, McCreery, Morgan, Nye, Osborn, Patterson of Tennessee, Rice, Robertson, Ross, Stewart, Thayer, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, and Wiley—30.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Buckalew, Cattell, Conness, Hendricks, Howe, Kellogg, McDonald, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norton, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Tipton, Welch, and Yates—19.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FERRY. Mr. President, in addressing the Senate yesterday I confined my remarks, as I stated at the time, to the proposition of the Senator from Vermont, being an amendment relating to so much of this bill as levies a duty upon copper in the ore. I indicated at that time that I should take an opportunity before the conclusion of the debate to submit some general remarks upon the bill itself. I am aware that the Senate, perhaps, is already weary with this protracted discussion; but I feel that the bill as it now stands is so unjust in itself and so dangerous as a precedent that I cannot remain silent until the vote is taken.

In the first place, this bill is objectionable as being special legislation. It is admitted on all hands, by the chairman of the Committee on Finance, who reported the bill, that it must require extraordinary circumstances to justify the taking out of one single special interest from the general range of interests in the country to legislate for that alone without reference to the bearing of such legislation upon other and coördinate interests. Of all legislation in which Congress engages there is none to which this objection more forcibly applies than legislation upon our tariff system. Interwoven as the interests of the country which are affected by such legislation are in all their details, and exceedingly difficult as it is to understand without great labor and study the effect of legislation upon one branch of business on other branches, it is, if in any instance, absolutely essential to safe legislation that the laws which we enact upon the subject of our tariff should be enacted upon a general revision of the whole system and after a careful elaboration.

In this case we are proceeding, according to the precedent set in the case of the wool tariff two years ago, to select a special interest, only one among hundreds of interests which are said to be equally depressed with this; and the reason given for bestowing special favor upon this interest at the present time is that it is so depressed as to be in danger of absolute ruin unless the Legislature of the nation shall interfere in its behalf.

Well, sir, in this debate reference has been had to prior discussions of what is, I admit, this very measure. It is said that the bill passed the House of Representatives two years ago and was there fully discussed; that it came into the Senate and was there fully discussed; and it is true. And two years ago when this bill was before the House of Representatives the same argument was made, the same appeal to the sympathies of the Legislature, because the interest of the Lake Superior copper mines was in 1867 so greatly depressed that without legislation their utter ruin must inevitably ensue. The legislation was not obtained; and what was the result? The production of the Lake Superior copper-mining interest has increased every hour from that day to this, and the records which I read here yesterday demonstrate it. The pretense that was set up here two years ago, identical with that which is set up here now for special legislation, that ruin impended over this great interest, has been falsified by the events of the last two years. And so when at a later period the measure was pressed upon the attention of the Senate the same arguments were used; the bill failed to receive the sanction of Congress; and month after month during the year 1868, so far as the official reports have reached us up to July, the production from these mines has steadily increased. These facts in the past lead me to suspect that there is something unreliable, at least, in this claim of impending destruction to the copper interest.

Now, sir, there is an immense pressure upon us from some source for the passage of a measure of this kind. Is there no way in which we can explain that pressure other than the danger really apprehended by the true mining interests? Sir, I referred yesterday to the fact that the copper regions of Lake Superior are owned by a great number of corporations whose capital stock has not been paid in; and I insisted that the want of working capital growing out of the neglect of the shareholders to pay up the capital which they had pledged themselves to pay was the real difficulty with that mining interest, and not the want of legislation. I have obtained the last number of the Wall Street Journal, containing the names of all these copper-mining companies, the number of shares, the nominal amount of their capital stock, and the amount actually paid in. I find of them twenty-seven with nominal shares of twenty thousand each at twenty-five dollars per share on which less than two dollars per share has been actually paid in; and I find fifty-six of them of twenty thousand shares each at a par value of twenty-five dollars, of which less than five dollars has been actually paid in. Sir, they have sunk themselves in the mire of mining-stock speculations, and instead of putting their own shareholders to the wheel for their extrication they call upon the Hercules of Government to help them. That is the truth about it.

But, sir, perhaps it is immaterial to this argument out of what speculation or otherwise the pressure upon us here arises. I want to call the attention of the Senate to the bill itself as it originally stood in the first place before the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island was put upon it. The bill came in here with a report from the Committee on Finance, and was urged also by the Senator from Michigan, informing us that the ad valorem rates of this bill upon copper in the ore were between eleven and twelve per cent., and that the ad valorem upon pig-copper was from fifteen to sixteen per cent. Now, sir, I hold in my hand the American Mining Journal, containing the last London metal circular, and from that the last quotations of the dutiable valuation of copper can be ascertained by any one. The last quotation of copper in the ore is fourteen shillings one and a half pence per unit, which produces the result of an ad valorem duty by this bill of between twenty and twenty-one per cent., and it is impossible, if any gentleman will take the actual quotations, to avoid this result. Taking the same London quotations, the latest quotations, I find that the ad valorem duties on pig-copper laid by this bill are a little over thirty-one per cent.

Astonished at a result like this, after the statement which had been made to us by the chairman of the Committee on Finance yesterday, I showed him this morning the authority, and the result at which I had arrived. Hence the chairman of the Committee on Finance has to-day risen in his place and informed the Senate that the estimates upon which that committee finally agreed to report this bill are all wrong. The Committee on Finance, to whom every one of us must look for correct information in regard to measures of this kind when they are brought before us, have themselves been led by a false light, have come into the Senate, and yesterday the amendment of the Senator from Vermont was rejected upon the statement proceeding from the Finance Committee, while to-day we know out of their own lips that the ad valorem duties proposed even by the amendment of the Senator from Vermont would be greater than those stated to us yesterday, as in this bill, by the Senator from Michigan and the chairman of the Finance Committee.

Nor is that all, sir. We were also informed that this bill had been before the House of Representatives and before the Senate, and that the duties imposed by it are substantially the same as those imposed by the bill which formerly received the sanction of the Senate. I have taken the trouble to compare the details of that bill with the provisions of this bill, and I affirm, and it is incapable of successful contradiction, that the duties levied by this bill are double the duties levied by the bill which formerly received the sanction of the Senate. The present tariff levies a duty of five per cent. on ores; that bill as it passed the Senate, January 31, 1867, levied a duty of ten per cent., and the present bill levies a duty of between twenty and twenty-one per cent. The same proportion will be found to be carried out on regulus of copper, old copper, and copper in pigs.

Now, sir, with this exceeding uncertainty necessarily resting on the mind of the Senate in regard to the details of the bill, is it right and proper that we should proceed to pass it now and in hot haste without some further examination by the committee?

But, sir, that is not all. The Senator from Rhode Island has offered to this bill a sweeping amendment, which the Senator from Michigan has accepted in order to secure the passage of his bill. That amendment as now incorporated into the bill is as follows:

On copper in rolled plates called brazier's copper, sheets, rods, pipes, and copper bottoms, eyelets, and all manufactures of copper or of which copper shall be a component part of chief value, not herein otherwise provided for, forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

What man in the Senate knows the effect of that amendment? Suppose that at the moment the Senator from Rhode Island, yesterday introduced that amendment, instead of introducing it thus he had risen in his seat and offered a bill for a public act in the very language of that amendment, and then insisted that we should pass that bill without even letting it go to a committee, is there a Senator who would have assented to such legislation as that? And yet we have now a bill doubling, and more than doubling the expense of all the great copper-consumed articles in this country, with a sweeping section embracing all possible manufactures of copper, the former of which the Finance Committee has been induced to report under utterly mistaken impressions as its chairman admits, and the second of which has not received a single inquiry from a committee. Can we tell what will be the effect of such legislation as this? Is it safe? Is it wise? I am sorry that the chairman of the Committee on Finance is not here, for I would appeal to him, and I appeal to such members of the committee as are here to let this bill go back to the committee, that they may inform us correctly what are the rates of duty which are imposed by the original bill, and what is to be the effect upon the great interests of the country of the sweeping amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Rhode Island and accepted by the Senator from Michigan. The chairman of the Committee on Finance occupies too responsible a position before this country; representing a majority of this body especially, does he occupy too responsible a position before the country to permit such legislation as this upon information laid before the committee when the bill was under their consideration, which he now admits to be false; and we as a Senate ought not to permit such legislation, guided by false lights or groping in the dark, or sweeping, as the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island does, over the whole range of one great interest in this country, without an inquiry from a committee what effect it is to have.

Now, sir, I do not wish to go any further at length into this discussion; but I do think if Senators will guide themselves by the ordinary rules of a wise legislation the motion which I am about to make will—it certainly ought to—prevail. I move that the bill and amendments be recommitted to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Connecticut is mistaken as to the bill we passed in 1867. It was verbatim the same as this.

Mr. FERRY. No, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. It was three cents per pound on the copper in the ore, four cents on regulus, and five cents on bar copper.

Mr. FERRY. I know it was four cents on the regulus and five cents on bar copper.

Mr. CHANDLER. And three cents on copper in the ore, the same as this bill now stands; and it was agreed to after thorough discussion.

One word as to the continuation of mining operations in the Lake Superior region. They have carried on their operations in the hope of relief from Congress. When that bill, to which the Senator alludes, passed the Senate, but failed between the two Houses, the mining interest believed that at the next session they would receive that relief. During the war they sent abroad for miners at a cost of over one hundred thousand dollars, and every man went into the Army and not into the mines. They cannot afford to dismiss their miners so long as they run without a loss. The whole capital invested there in the past year has not paid one and one third per cent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. FERRY,] to recommit the bill to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FERRY. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 15, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Cragin, Davis, Dixon, Ferry, Fessenden, Grimes, Henderson, McCreery, Norton, Sumner, Van Winkle, Vickers, Whyte, and Wilson—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Cameron, Chandler, Conkling, Conness, Corbett, Doolittle, Drake, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Harlan, Harris, Howard, Howe, Kellogg, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Nye, Osborn, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Pool, Rice, Robertson, Ross, Sawyer, Thayer, Trumbull, Wade, Wiley, and Williams—32.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Buckalew, Cattell, Cole, Edmunds, Hendricks, McDonald, Morrill of Maine, Patterson of New Hampshire, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Stewart, Tipton, Warner, Welch, and Yates—19.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. COLE. Mr. President, there have been laid on our tables and presented to me personally several protests and petitions bearing on this question; some in favor of the passage of the bill, and others protesting against its passage. This fact affords perhaps sufficient excuse for my giving very briefly some reasons for the vote which I shall cast when the bill is put upon its final passage.

I do not suppose that the passage of the bill will afford any very great relief to the copper interest. Indeed, I believe that the vast increase of the product of copper throughout the world in the last few years will, after all, override a tariff of this nature, so that there will be importations of this article at lower rates than they can be afforded from the American mines. But, sir, it is a well-known fact that the large interest engaged in this enterprise of mining for copper is, and has been for a year or two past, perhaps longer, very much interfered with by the importation of metal from foreign countries. The facts which have been stated in reference to the mines near Lake Superior are equally applicable to the mines that exist in the State which I have the honor in part to represent. The copper mines of California, of Nevada, of Colorado, and Arizona are believed to be, and in fact have been proven to be, very extensive, very rich; but these mines, so far as they exist in the State of California, are at present of very little use; very little, if any, copper is longer produced from them, owing to the low price the article bears in the market. One of the largest mines, the Union mine at Copperopolis, which formerly produced such a vast amount of this ore, I am informed, has been in a measure or temporarily abandoned, and work upon it has been suspended. Perhaps if our mines were more conveniently located in reference to facilities for reaching the market they would be worked still; but most of the mines upon the Pacific coast are so far from the market, and so far from the means of the conveyance of the metals to market, that the working of them had to be abandoned. I believe this bill will afford some relief. I hope it will afford more relief than I expect it will. I shall therefore support it.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, few persons in the country are satisfied with the existing tariff. Two years ago we undertook to make a new tariff, but through want of industry or incapacity we failed to do it. Then the wool and woolen interests were taken out of the general tariff bill, and under a great pressure a measure was forced through Congress in their behalf. It was then supposed that the wool interest was to receive great benefits from that measure, and that the woolen manufacturing interest was to derive some benefit from it. Nearly two years have passed, and I understand that the knife is being put to hundreds of thousands of sheep in the country, and that no very great benefit has been derived from that measure.

And now, instead of taking up this whole subject and adjusting the tariff according to the new condition of the whole country, and taking care of all the varied interests of the country, we single out one interest and force it through. I have no doubt the copper mining interest is very much depressed; but there is a great deal of speculative interest about it. There are a great many people who own stock in these mining companies, and they expect it to rise on the passage of this bill. It was brought here without that portion of it that had been put into the bill in the House of Representatives; I mean so much of the measure as concerns the various manufactures of copper. We have, however, incorporated that provision into the bill.

I do not believe that this mode of legislation is satisfactory to anybody in the country, to the men who call themselves protectionists or to the men who call themselves free-traders; and I am very sure that it is not for the interests or to the honor of the country to construct a tariff in this way. It shows on our part either a want of comprehension of the whole condition of the country or that we are willing to take care of certain interests and neglect other interests. I think the tendency of such legislation is to make enemies to the revenue system.

I voted for some amendments to this bill in order to get the measure in as good a condition as possible; but such is the impatient haste with which the measure is sought to be crowded through that we are reproached even for attempting to better it. I voted to recommit it for the same purpose, in the hope that if we were to take up a portion of the tariff measure we would make that portion as perfect as possible. We failed to recommit it, and now we come directly to the vote upon the measure. This mode of legislation, I think, will create hostility in many directions toward Congress and to the protective policy. Congress should have addressed itself before this time to the work of making a tariff according to the needs of the finances, according to the condition of the currency and the business interests of the people. We are now to vote upon the bill. I shall vote for it, but I do so with a great deal of reluctance.

Mr. CORBETT. As my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] has broached the subject of a protective tariff, I desire to say that being a friend to protection, for the purpose of protecting our own country against the importation of foreign goods to an excess over and above our ability to pay for them, I think it is necessary that we should give our attention to such a bill at the earliest possible moment. I have been in favor of protecting all classes of the industry of this country. I believe that the interest represented by the Senator from Michigan is one of the most important, and I believe that it is necessary to pass the bill before us. But I must say that I regret that we have not a tariff bill reported here upon which we could act, and which we could examine and adjust to the necessities of the country, and thus prevent an excess of importations. We are evidently importing a very large amount of goods over and above what the productions of our country enable us to pay in exchange.

We are now exporting bonds and gold from the country to an alarming extent to make up the deficiency. During the past year we exported some $30,000,000 of gold over and above our productions of gold from the mines and our importations of gold from foreign countries. How are we going to stop this excess of importation unless we pass a bill that will adjust the tariff in such a manner as to prevent it? Suppose we do not import as large an amount of goods; suppose our income from importations is not so large, we certainly shall not send as much gold out of the country. It seems to me that this is one of the most important measures for our Finance Committee to bring to the attention of the Senate at this session. The bill that we have now before us, which has been reported by the Finance Committee, is a very important one undoubtedly, but there is lying back of it one still more important, and that is a bill to guard and protect our interests as to the excessive importations.

It is true we are now raising a large amount of cotton in the southern States which we are exporting to help to pay the exchange. I was in hopes that the large amount of cotton exported might prevent the exportation of gold, but it appears only to have stimulated importations of goods to an excessive extent. In my opinion, the only manner in which we can prevent this is to add an additional duty to all goods that are imported where they will bear it, for the protection, first, of our manufactures, and then for revenue.

I am in favor of the bill of the Senator from Michigan, and shall vote for it as a separate measure. I voted against the amendments that have been offered because they were partial; they only affected certain interests. The copper interest, as I understand, is suffering to a very great extent for the want of this protection. I am in favor of giving them that aid and that protection at this time, and I am also prepared at the earliest moment to give my support to a measure that will guard and protect our country from the excessive importations of foreign goods and the excessive exportation of gold from the country.

Mr. WHYTE. I desire now to renew the proposition which I offered yesterday and temporarily withdrew.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was to insert at the end of the bill the following proviso:

*Provided, however, That if any person, corporation, company, or partnership engaged in the business of smelting copper ores shall import any foreign carbonate copper ores into the United States, and shall, on making such importation, file with the collector of the port into which such foreign copper ores were imported a bond with security, to be approved by the collector of said port into which said ores are imported, to use two tons of copper ore mined in the United States to one ton of said imported ores in the smelting of copper, such person, corporation, company, or partnership shall be entitled to a drawback upon the foreign copper ores so imported to the extent of the duty paid thereon: *Provided, The said person, corporation, company, or partnership shall furnish evidence under regulations to be established by the Secretary of the Treasury that he, it, or they have or has used the said copper ores so imported, and also copper ores mined in the United States in its, his, or their business in the proportion of two tons of copper ore mined in the United States to one ton of imported copper ore.

Mr. VICKERS. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "thereon" and before the word "provided" where it last occurs in the amendment the words "less the amount of five per cent. ad valorem;" so that that portion of the amendment will read:

Such person, corporation, company, or partnership shall be entitled to a drawback upon the foreign copper ores so imported to the extent of the duty paid thereon, less the amount of five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. WHYTE. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment is accepted. The question now is on the amendment, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was rejected.

Mr. WHYTE. I move to amend the bill by adding to it the following proviso:

And provided also, That the increased duty imposed by this act shall not apply to any of the articles therein enumerated which shall have been in course of transit to the United States before the passage of this act.

Mr. VICKERS. I move to amend that by inserting after "transit" the words "or bona fide contracted for."

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I suppose it has always been the practice to fix some future time for the going into operation of a tariff bill where it related to distant and foreign commerce. It is perfectly apparent that many of the vessels that are engaged in this business may be now on the way; may be loading; orders may have been given. It is manifestly proper that anything that is already on ship-board should be provided for in the bill. Otherwise parties may be taken at very great disadvantage.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the amendment will not be made.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a great diversity in the recent practice of the Government in regard to fixing the time for the taking effect of tariff acts. In the last two or three tariffs no time was fixed, as the Senate will remember. This question has been a very troublesome one always in the Committee on Finance. In some cases we have had a period of sixty days. In the last two tariffs the bill took effect from its passage. Sometimes cases of great hardship have occurred, and under the last tariff act there was a question whether or not the law took effect on the 2d of March or the 4th of March, which created a good deal of confusion. I think the later practice has been to let the act take effect on the day of its passage, and all vessels that arrive after that time pay the duty, and all fortunate enough to get in before that day are exempt. You have got to fix some time. Any time that you fix will operate injuriously to somebody. If you put off the tariff for sixty days it will induce speculation and increase importation in order to evade the new duty. On the whole, therefore, I think it better that the tariff should take effect on the day of its passage. Everybody is then treated alike.

Mr. WHYTE. I desire to correct the Senator from Ohio. The very last tariff act of 1861 did not take effect from and after its passage.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was speaking of the last tariff act which, I think, was passed the session before last.

Mr. WHYTE. The act of 1861 is the act which fixes the rate of duty on copper.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like the Senator from Ohio to state whether the last act was not the wool act?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; and that took effect on the date of its passage.

Mr. GRIMES. Was there not a subsequent law introduced in regard to it?

Mr. SHERMAN. There was a bill introduced, but no action was ever had upon it. A great many hard cases occurred under that law where the importation was not completed. In fact, before the taking effect of the act cases of reclamation were made.

Mr. WHYTE. The tariff act relating to ores of copper and so on, was passed in March, 1861, and it did not take effect until a future day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I should like to have it reported again.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

And provided also, That the increased duty imposed by this act shall not apply to any of the articles therein enumerated which shall have been in course of transit to the United States before the passage of this act.

Mr. SUMNER. Let us have the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I suggest to the Senator from Maryland to insert the words "and actually on shipboard," in his amendment.

Mr. WHYTE. I have no objection to that. It is to cover just such a case.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me state to the Senate some facts on this question. This bill must go back to the House, as it has been amended. It is difficult to tell exactly when it will take effect. Probably it will pass some time before the 4th of March. I am not aware whether the telegraph has extended to Chili or whether telegrams can be sent there; but at any rate persons who are fortunate enough to hurry forward and get this ore on shipboard by the 4th of March next or whenever this law takes effect will have the advantage of evading a duty of some ten or twenty per cent. It seems to me that the better way is to let all take their chances and fix the time for the taking effect of the act either on the passage of the bill or the 1st day of April or on some other fixed day, so that all parties may act in view of it. I do not think it is a correct rule to allow exceptions for cargoes on shipboard. There have been many such exceptions in tariff bills, but, according to my observation, they have not always worked well. In many cases they have led to excessive importations in order to evade the duty. Therefore if a future day is to be fixed it would be a great deal better to fix the 1st of April next, or some specific day.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, there are millions of tons of these ores on store at all times in the immense warehouses of London. The telegraph is in communication with Cuba and London, and before the middle of next week all the ores that are mined to-day in the great marts of the world could be placed on shipboard. I hope that the bill will take effect from and after its passage, for if you leave this opportunity to telegraph over the world you will have all the copper ores of the world afloat before this bill takes effect.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I suggest to the Senator from Maryland to modify his amendment so as to provide that all copper ore on shipboard on the 19th of January be exempt. I look upon copper that is on shipboard now coming to this country the same as if it had landed here.

Mr. WHYTE. As every proposition I make in the Senate is made in good faith and with no tricks about it, I accept the modification suggested by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope the amendment will not pass in any form, for I cannot see why we should invite importers to bring in large quantities of this article to glut the American market, thus injuring the interest which we are endeavoring to protect. I cannot see why the article on shipboard and bound to the United States, if you please, ought to be exempted from the additional duty, while the same article ready to be shipped in a foreign port and actually shipped the day after is to be subjected to the additional duty. It seems to me to be unequal and unjust. We are seeking revenue primarily by the imposition of this impost, and incidentally protection to our own domestic product. Why should we make fish of one and flesh of another?

Mr. WHYTE. I will state to the Senator from Michigan that that is just what we complain of, that he is making fish of one and flesh of another.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. ANTHONY. How does the amendment stand now?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read once more as it stands.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the increased duty imposed by this act shall not apply to any of the articles therein enumerated which shall have been in course of transit to the United States and actually on shipboard on the 19th of January, 1869.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 26, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Conkling, Davis, Dixon, Edmunds, Ferry, Fessenden, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Howe, McCreery, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Norton, Patterson of New Hampshire, Sumner, Van Winkle, Vickers, Warner, Whyte, Wiley, Williams, and Wilson—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Cameron, Chandler, Cole, Conness, Drake, Harlan, Harris, Howard, Kellogg, McDonald, Nye, Osborn, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Rice, Robertson, Ross, Sawyer, Sherman, Stewart, Thayer, Trumbull, and Wade—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Buckalew, Cattell, Corbett, Cragin, Doelittle, Hendricks, Morrill of Maine, Pool, Ramsey, Shulsbury, Spencer, Sprague, Tipton, Welch, and Yates—16.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, intending to vote for this bill, I yet desire to say a word or two to justify my efforts to improve it. Here is a bill that at one blow strikes out of existence all the commerce that we have in copper ores, employing a very considerable number of vessels. We raise the duty at least three hundred per cent. If the Senator from Ohio was right yesterday in his estimate of the proper amount of protection upon ores, when he is corrected to-day he ought to go for the amendment that I proposed yesterday; for yesterday we took the vote upon his statement that the value of copper was twenty-four or twenty-five cents per pound in gold, when to-day it is conceded on all hands that that is only the value of it in currency, which makes at least one third difference, and that is all the difference that I proposed in my amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRIMES. I have a good deal of curiosity to hear the Senator from Vermont explain the reason why he is for this bill if the passage of it is going to destroy all the commerce that we have with the countries that produce this ore.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. For the reason that I understand that the people who are engaged in the business of mining at Lake Superior are starving for bread.

Mr. GRIMES. Is that the reason why the Senator proposes to tax every article of domestic and household economy that is made of copper forty-five per cent.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not propose to go into the general discussion. I desire only to occupy three or four minutes in order to justify the efforts which I have made to improve this bill.

Again, I am not at all certain that the benefits of this bill are going to accrue entirely to the State of Michigan. I know, indeed, that three fourths of all the stock of these mining companies is owned in the city of Boston and its vicinity. It is to benefit speculators in fancy stocks, as well as the hard-working men of Lake Superior, and to a much larger extent.

Then, again, this bill raises the duty upon every spike and bolt that is put into our ships two and a half cents. The present duty is two and a half cents per pound, and now we raise the duty to five cents a pound, thus adding to the burdens on our commerce. Under such circumstances, I did suppose that the Senate of the United States would listen to some moderation, but I see they will not, and therefore I propose to vote for the bill in its raw and ragged shape, with the intention, whenever I have the opportunity, to vote to improve it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I shall vote for this bill simply to carry out the deliberate purpose of both committees two years ago. The Senator from Vermont was then chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives. He sent us a bill which imposed upon copper ore substantially the duty imposed by this bill. It was fully considered in the Senate and we somewhat reduced it. But the House Committee of Ways and Means sent us the old tariff bill, as it was called, with these rates of duty prescribed:

"On copper ore, fifteen per cent. ad valorem; on regulus of copper, twenty per cent. ad valorem; on copper in pigs, ingots, or bars, five cents per pound."

That was the recommendation made two years ago. We have substantially carried this out in specific duties. The duty of three cents a pound on copper ore is just about equivalent to fifteen per cent. According to the statement of Mr. Martin the gold value of the copper in the ore when it arrives here, before it is smelted, is twenty-two and a half cents per pound; and according to any statement I can find it cannot be less than twenty cents a pound in gold; so that even at twenty cents a pound in gold the rate of three cents a pound is equivalent to fifteen per cent. The bill of two years ago prescribed on regulus of copper twenty per cent., a higher rate of duty than is proposed by this bill. It seems to me, therefore, that Senators are making a great deal more out of this increase than one would think for. The Senator from Vermont says this is an increase of three hundred per cent. So it is. Why? Because there was no duty on copper ore before except five per cent. Now, when you increase it to ten per cent., the lowest rate of duty that is prescribed by our tariff, it is an increase of one hundred per cent. It sounds very largely stated in that way, but if you take the case of copper in bars, manufactured copper, it is about forty-five per cent. You might increase that fifteen per cent. and it would only be an increase of some forty per cent. on the old rate, and it would sound very differently. The way in which my friend states the operations of this bill makes it appear a great deal larger than it is.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Senator from Ohio undoubtedly intends to be accurate, and this matter admits of mathematical demonstration. When he says that the duty imposed here is but ten per cent. I cannot think he understands it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not say that; I said about fifteen per cent.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. If the foreign copper ore is worth sixteen cents a pound, and if the duty is to be three cents on each pound of copper found in the ore, it manifestly cannot be less than eighteen per cent.; and if it is but fifteen cents a pound, it is still more than that. The duty which I proposed was at least twelve per cent.

Mr. SHERMAN. We have prices-current here to show that manufactured copper is worth sixteen or seventeen cents a pound in England; but here is the duty on copper ore, and the only evidence we have of the value of copper in the ore is the statement of Mr. Martin, who is opposed to this bill, and he fixes it at twenty-two and a half cents a pound. Now, there is a distinction between copper in the ore here in gold and the manufactured copper in England. The rate on manufactured copper is undoubtedly higher than fifteen per cent.; but on the ore it is about fifteen or sixteen per cent., and not so high as that, if we can rely upon the estimate of Mr. Martin. Before I made any statement on this subject I went to the honorable Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WYTT,] who, as he tells us, was long engaged in the copper business, and I asked him the value of the copper in the ore that was brought here, and he told me, if I remember aright, that it was twenty-three cents a pound.

Mr. GRIMES. Mr. President, I am very glad to know at last upon what theory this bill proceeds. We learn from the Senator from Vermont, a member of the Committee on Finance, from whom it emanated, or who have reported it back to the Senate, that it is a charitable measure; that it originated in a pure spirit of humanity. It seems that there is a class of people somewhere in the State of Michigan who are in a starving condition, and because they are in a starving condition the Senator has been willing to acknowledge here that he is content to destroy all the commerce of this country that is used in connection with this copper interest to increase the value of every spike and nail, and the sheathing and yellow metal with which vessels are covered, to the extent of a very large per cent. I do not know exactly what per cent. I suggest to the Committee on Finance whether it would not be a cheaper measure to organize a branch of the Freedmen's Bureau and send that up into Michigan.

Mr. DAVIS. If the honorable Senator will permit me, I will say that we will consent that the branch of the Freedmen's Bureau that is in the State of Kentucky shall be sent to Michigan. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRIMES. It is immaterial whence it is taken; but if that is the spirit in which this bill originated and by which it is being carried through, it seems to me it would be infinitely better to organize a branch of the Freedmen's Bureau to take charge of those famishing and suffering people in Michigan than to increase, as this bill proposes to do, the duty on every article of household economy that is made of copper to the extent of forty-five per cent.

With the approbation, I believe, of the Committee on Finance, the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY,] looking after the interests of his region of country, has succeeded in incorporating into the bill the following provision:

On copper in rolled plates, called brazier's copper, sheets, rods, pipes, and copper bottoms, eyelets, and all manufactures of copper, or of which copper shall be a component part of chief value, not herein otherwise provided for, forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ANTHONY. The duty is now thirty-five per cent., so that is an increase of only ten per cent.

Mr. GRIMES. That is all!

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator said forty-five per cent. It is only an increase of ten per cent.

Mr. GRIMES. But this ten per cent. comes off every laboring man, artisan, and mechanic in the country. It comes off every man who is compelled to buy a cooking-stove. Instead of taking money out of the wealth of the country for the purpose of feeding these famishing people up in Michigan you make every man in my State and in Illinois and Massachusetts and Rhode Island poorer to just the extent that the Senator has succeeded in inducing this body to increase the per cent., that is, from thirty-five to forty-five per cent.

The Senator from Vermont has dropped another idea here in connection with the passage of this bill. I do not know how far that may influence any of the outside movements that have been used to secure its passage; but I believe he has intimated that there is a very considerable influence emanating from the Copper Stock Exchange in the city of Boston. I think I have heard such an intimation before. Of course that does not influence anybody here; but it does, I have no doubt, exhibit itself through the press, and in some indirect way it may, perhaps, influence the minds of members of Congress.

There is another question I should like to have solved by the Senator from Michigan or some of the gentlemen connected with the Committee on Finance. I should like to know how much copper there is on hand. They protected us in my country two years ago by passing a wool bill, putting a high duty on wool, by which they succeeded in lowering the value of wool in my State from forty-five or fifty-five cents down to no market at all; but there were parties who were protected, and those were the people who had large quantities of wool on hand.

Mr. ANTHONY. How did they do that?

Mr. GRIMES. By prohibiting the importation of wool.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How did that cause the price of your wool to fall?

Mr. GRIMES. Because such articles as the Senator wears cannot be manufactured without being mixed with foreign wool. I did not think, until I learned the contrary, that there was a man of good sense in the world who did not suppose that if you put a tariff on the production of potatoes the result would be in two years, or one year, that you would have five bushels of potatoes where you had one before.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is not that good for the people?

Mr. GRIMES. The effect of it would be this: you would bring down the price of potatoes from fifty to ten cents a bushel. The immediate effect of the tariff on wool was precisely the same. Everybody in the whole western country attempted to increase the production of wool, and doubled his flocks or increased his flocks to the largest extent possible. But, while they were doing that, you put a high duty on the imported wool which was necessary to be used in order to manufacture the very articles that each one of you wears here to-day, and the result was there was not any market for our wool. But there were parties who were benefited by that law, and those were the parties who had up to that time, in anticipation of the passage of that law, imported large quantities of foreign wool, which they were able to sell, realizing the advance which we put upon the tariff.

Mr. ANTHONY. Our wool did not rise a cent.

Mr. GRIMES. It did not rise after the passage of the law, but it rose before the passage of the law, and the Senator knows it if he has examined the subject. It rose in anticipation of the law, just as copper has risen to-day in anticipation of the passage of this bill. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. FERRY] will tell you, I presume, that the manufacturers in his State who use copper in their manufactures have refused to buy copper because it has gone up, and to some considerable extent have diminished their production of manufactured copper articles because copper has gone up to so high a pitch in anticipation of the passage of this bill. It was just so with wool before we passed the wool tariff.

Now, sir, I do not know anything about the quantity of copper on hand; but I am told there is a vast quantity of it on hand—copper ore, copper manufactured articles, copper bottoms, brazier's articles, and so on; and the passage of this bill will put immense sums into the pockets of the men owning it; and that is the advantage of passing tariff bills in this way. Whenever you confine yourselves to one particular article, as for instance, wool to-day, and the next year copper, and the next year iron, and so on, with these articles that are in such a terribly depressed condition that they must have relief, a man can embark all his capital in one particular article; but when there is a general tariff bill, embracing all the articles that are ordinarily incorporated into a tariff bill, he does not have, perhaps, quite as certain a prospect of making money as he has when he embarks his money in the importation of one particular article. Of course, the large importers of copper have not been importing anybody about Congress to pass any such bill as this; but I am only attempting to show you who is going to be benefited by it and where the relief is going. It is going to exactly the same parties that it went to when you passed your wool bill.

Mr. President, I need not indicate, I think, that I shall vote against this bill and against all other tariff bills that are not levied strictly for revenue purposes.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not desire now to go into a discussion of the tariff on wool, but at the proper time I think I shall be able to show my friend from Iowa that the wool tariff did benefit the wool-grower, and that the purchaser of woollens has not been injured, for to-day I believe the fact to be that woollens are as low as they were prior to the passage of that tariff, and perhaps lower.

Mr. GRIMES. How is it as to wool?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I say that at the proper time I shall be prepared to discuss that subject from top to bottom.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, it has always seemed to me that in protecting articles of American industry everything to be protected belonged to the same family. I object, as the Senator from Iowa does, to this separate apportionment of members of the same family. When there are bounties and premiums to be distributed by authority of Congress to this tariff family, it seems to me that the correct principle is to consider the claims of every member of the family at the same time, and to make a just and equal apportionment among them all, and not to isolate the case of wool or copper or anything else. It seems to me that a proper system and a proper comprehension of the amount of protection that all the articles embraced in the tariff act should receive could be best considered altogether; and that is one reason why I object to the consideration and passage of the present bill.

But, sir, there are other objections. I understand that copper ore was protected three fourths of one cent. a pound a few years since, when the duty was first laid. What is the proposition now? It is to make a single jump of three hundred per cent. It seems to me that the extent of the increase that is proposed on copper ore is without precedent in the history of our legislation. Under what state of facts is it proposed to make such an enormous increase upon the protection of copper ore? The honorable Senator from Maryland who first addressed the Senate on this subject showed that the increase of the production of copper ore had been steady up to the present year. If from less than fifty per cent. of its present amount of product it has doubled itself in a few years certainly this industry cannot need a great deal of protection. Now, I understand that gentlemen concede that if there was a proper amount of protection upon other articles that are protected, and which articles are consumed by the miners of copper ore, the copper ore would have a sufficient protection.

Now, Mr. President, I think if the mass of the American people agree on any one proposition, it is that they are already taxed too high, not only upon this article, but upon all articles. They wish relief in the form of a reduction generally of taxes, not only internal taxes, but the taxes upon foreign imports. As a general rule, they are greatly too high and are burdensome to the people of the United States, and they want relief from this burden in the form of a reduction of taxes, both internal and the taxes upon imported goods. The objection is not that there is enough of protection upon copper ore, but the objection is that it is not proportionate to the excessive protection with which many other articles are made burdensome to the people. Then, let gentlemen adopt the plain, common sense, and just principle, not of increasing the duty upon an article of industry that is already taxed too high, but of establishing the equilibrium that ought to prevail between it and other articles by reducing the taxes on other articles that are so much in excess of what in justice and sound policy they should be.

Sir, I cannot understand why the article of copper ore needs an additional protection at this time of three hundred per cent. when its production has increased steadily—not uniformly, but steadily—from the time it was first protected. It could not have increased at all if there is any justice in its present demand for three hundred per cent. upon the amount of protection it has had heretofore. I, therefore, shall vote against this bill. I vote against it also upon the general principle that I want no increase of taxation in any form or upon any article. I want the oppressed people of the United States, who are now groaning under an unexampled weight of taxation, to be relieved in every possible shape on every article and at every possible time from this oppressive taxation. I shall therefore vote in accordance with what I believe to be the just and politic principle of a general and universal reduction of taxation, both internal and external, by refusing to vote for this bill.

Mr. WHYTE. I desire merely to ask the Senate to do what it has done heretofore; that is, to fix some period of time when this act shall take effect. There are certain amendments already added to the bill which will carry it back to the House of Representatives; it may be delayed there; and therefore there is an uncertainty as to the time when the act will take effect. In order merely to do what has been done before, as I called the attention of the Senate to the act of 1861, which provided "that from and after the 1st day of April, A. D. 1861," the act should go into effect and the duties under it be imposed, I now propose to strike out the words "passage of this act" in the third line of the bill, and to insert "1st day of April, A. D. 1869."

Mr. CHANDLER. An amendment already adopted fixes the date on the 19th of this month. I submit that the present amendment is not now in order, the time having already been fixed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a different proposition.

Mr. WHYTE. I do not understand the adoption of the previous proposition made by me to affect this at all. That has reference simply to goods which are on ship-board, but this amendment states the time when the act itself shall go into operation.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the amendment will not be made.

Mr. WHYTE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—ayes 10, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Davis, Dixon, Ferry, McCreery, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Vickers, Whyte, and Wilson—10.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Anthony, Cameron, Chandler, Cole, Corbett, Drake, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Harlan, Harris, Howard, McDonald, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Nye, Osborn, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Pool, Rice, Robertson, Ross, Sawyer, Sherman, Stewart, Thayer, Warner, Wiley, and Williams—31.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Buckalew, Cattell, Conkling, Connors, Cragin, Doolittle, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Kellogg, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norton, Patterson of New Hampshire, Ramsey, Sausbury, Sprague, Tipton, Wade, Welch and Yates—24.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended; and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in. The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time.

Mr. GRIMES. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. President, as it is supposed that the State of Minnesota to some extent is interested in the subject of this bill, and as I shall vote against it, I deem it due to myself to state the reasons why I shall do so.

It would be to me personally a sufficient objection that this subject is brought here alone, disconnected with all other subjects which may be properly and which ought to be within the provisions of a general tariff bill. I have given some attention to this matter, and examined with some care the representations that have been made by parties who have claimed to be interested in the bill; and I find that substantially the representation made by Mr. A. H. Sibley, who speaks or presumes to speak for a large interest, is that because the price of copper in the market in New York is too low or so low that the mines of Lake Superior cannot profitably be worked, therefore a tariff should be imposed upon imported coppers, which will increase the price so that they can profitably work their mines. From the discussion of this question, too, I have learned that that is really the substantial argument made in favor of the passage of this bill. It is that because the price of copper is low Congress should interfere and raise it, and that they should do this chiefly in the interest of the Lake Superior mines, which it seems, from the representation made, produce three fourths of the copper consumed in the United States. We are told that the estimated consumption of refined copper in the United States is twelve thousand tons per annum. During the year 1867 there were produced—

From Lake Superior about.....	9,000 tons.
From Tennessee about.....	1,000 tons.
From California, Vermont, and other points about.....	2,500 tons.

In view of the magnitude of the Lake Superior interest, as it is represented here, even with the duty now imposed it seems to me that it would be a very easy matter for that interest to control the whole copper interest of the country. This premium or this gratuity to that copper interest is to be made, as has been said by the Senator from Vermont, at the sacrifice of all the commerce in copper ores to the injury of the ship-building interest, which consumes so much of copper, and to the detriment to the consumers and of the labor of the country, as was said by the Senator from Iowa, by the increase of price in the articles they consume.

I cannot see, Mr. President, that the interests of the country require any such bill. I should vote against it if I were permitted to vote, but I have paired with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] who would vote for the bill if present, and I should vote against it.

The yeas and nays being taken, resulted—yeas 38, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Anthony, Cameron, Chandler, Cole, Conkling, Connors, Corbett, Cragin, Doolittle, Drake, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Howe, McDonald, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Nye, Osborn, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Pool, Rice, Robertson, Ross, Sawyer, Sherman, Spencer, Stewart, Thayer, Warner, Wiley, Williams, and Wilson—38.

NAYS—Messrs. Davis, Dixon, Ferry, Fessenden, Grimes, McCreery, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Vickers, and Whyte—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Buckalew, Cattell, Edmunds, Hendricks, Kellogg, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norton, Patterson of New Hampshire, Ramsey, Sausbury, Sprague, Tipton, Wade, Welch, and Yates—17.

So the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the resolution of the Senate to continue the joint Committee to Revise and Fix the Pay of the Officers of the two Houses of Congress, appointed at the first session of the Fortieth Congress, and had appointed Mr. F. E. WOODBRIDGE of Vermont, Mr. E. R. ECKLEY of Ohio, and Mr. H. McCULLOUGH of Maryland, the committee on its part.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1261) amendatory of an act entitled "An act relating to habeas corpus and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases."

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 1261) amendatory of an act entitled "An act relating to habeas corpus and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases;" and

A bill (H. R. No. 1598) to relieve from disability R. W. Best and Samuel F. Phillips, of North Carolina.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report from the Secretary of War communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of December 14, 1868, further information in relation to the late Indian battle on the Washita river; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, communicating an estimate of appropriations required for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the northern Cheyennes and northern Arapahoe Indians under the treaty of May 18, 1868, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOWARD. I move to take up for the purpose of bringing it up for discussion to-morrow Senate bill No. 256, relating to the Central Branch Union Pacific railroad.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope that will not be done. I had the impression that most gentlemen understood that the resolution on the subject of the duty of the nation to pay its debt in coin would be taken up in order that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. DAVIS] and myself might say what we desired to say upon it, and that then, if it was the pleasure of the Senate, it should be postponed or proceeded with. I hope the Senator from Michigan will permit that to be taken up.

Mr. HOWARD. I should be very glad to accommodate my friend from Vermont and also my friend from Kentucky, but really this is a bill which was discussed at considerable length in the Senate at the last session, and it is one which ought to be acted upon, in my judgment; and I hope the Senate will consent to take it up now so that it may be left as the unfinished business for to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The order of business is entirely under the control of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to move an amendment.

Mr. NYE. I ask gentlemen to give way that I may make a motion for an executive session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I believe I have the floor. I move to amend the motion of the Senator from Michigan, as he will not withdraw it, by substituting for the name of the bill that he proposes to take up the words "Senate joint resolution No. 66," so that it will be a proposition to proceed to the consideration of that instead of the other.

Mr. STEWART. If that is in order—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is informal, but I do not know any rule against it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It has been frequently done.

Mr. STEWART. I move to amend the amendment by inserting Senate resolution No.

8, the constitutional amendment extending suffrage.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think that is in order. There is no good sense in it.

Mr. HOWARD. It appears to me the amendment is out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The general rule of the Senate is that the first motion made is first put off. The Senator from Vermont insists that he can amend it. If so, that is still amendable.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no question about it. I do not care in what form the Senate come at it. If it is the pleasure of the Senate to declare that it will not consider or hear anything upon the subject of this great question that has agitated the two parties of the country and agitates the country now, and which, some people suppose, has something to do with the public credit, then I shall have nothing to say. But I have found it impossible to get the floor in season, because I am somewhat dwarfish in stature, and did not catch the eye of the Chair to make a motion of that kind in the ordinary way. I feel justified, therefore, in order to have the Senate decide in some form, whether they are willing to hear or act on this question, in proposing this amendment, which, according to parliamentary law, is strictly in order, as I believe, and I have known it to be done in this body. That is all I have to say now, sir.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Vermont seems to me a novelty; but I will not take a point of order on his motion. All I have to say is, that here is a bill which has been discussed at considerable length at the preceding session of Congress and left unfinished, and it ought to be taken up and acted upon finally. It will not probably lead to much debate, as the discussion has already been quite thorough, whereas the subject-matter of the honorable Senator's resolution from Vermont is in its nature a mere abstraction, and if the discussion shall once commence upon it there is no possibility of telling where it will end, or when it will end. I think we had better go to some practical business in the first place, dispose of something that is of practical importance. I do not say that his measure is not of practical importance; but I say we had better go on and finish some of the matters which we have discussed already before we take up new matter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly I must confess that the central branch proposition is one of practical importance to the Treasury, while I believe most people imagine that the proposition to which I have had the honor to call the attention of the Senate is also of practical importance. That is not an abstraction unless the promises of the Government are abstractions, because it proposes to pledge our faith to a certain construction of the statute, and most lawyers and most statesmen have supposed that when a great and civilized nation pledged its faith to anything it stood by it; but if we have reached that high state of civilization which authorizes Senators to say that the pledges of the public faith are mere abstractions, as I confess some people are beginning to believe they are, let us say so.

Mr. HOWARD. The Senator will excuse me for interrupting him, but I did not say that the obligation of the public faith was an abstraction.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The honorable Senator said that the resolution to which I referred was a mere abstraction. That resolution declares in unmistakable language that the faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to pay a particular debt in a particular way. Now, I shall be glad to have the honorable Senator distinguish, if he can, between the construction that I have put upon his words and the truth.

The question, therefore, is, Mr. President, whether the Senate are willing to give the preference to a railroad bill, a grant of money and land, which it is true has been discussed here, but not discussed since a very large addition has been made by the representatives of States coming into this body, and which, therefore, necessarily requires—unless it has been prearranged—that there should be discussion in order to develop to the judgments of Senators who have not heard the previous discussion or of those who may have forgotten it whether they ought to go for this railroad grant or against it.

Now, I do not propose to enter into the question whether this grant ought to be made or not; but I do say that a bill fastening the payment of so large an amount upon the public Treasury ought not to pass, as my friend would say, unless it was prearranged; that it ought not to be refused until every Senator who has not been made familiar with the law and with our duty, with the public faith upon which the Senator from Michigan relies in relation to this matter, shall become acquainted with it. Therefore, Mr. President, I trust the Senate, waiving this technical question as my friend does, will decide whether they are willing to hear anything said upon this question of the public faith and the public debt or are willing to act upon it, or whether they will set it aside for the consideration of this local question, which will take just as much time as the other will.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask the Senator's consent to withdraw that motion that one may be made for an executive session. There is upon the desk a great amount of executive business which the committees want. There are a number of postmasters' nominations which the Post Office Committee want for consideration. It will take but a short time; and I hope the Senator will withdraw his motion for that purpose.

Mr. GRIMES. I withdraw my motion.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 19, 1869.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. C. HOLBROOK, D. D., of Homer, New York.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

TROOPS IN UNRECONSTRUCTED STATES.

Mr. PAINE. Mr. Speaker, on the 6th of this month the House, on my motion, adopted a resolution calling upon the Secretary of War for information as to the number of enlisted men now on duty in Texas, Mississippi, and Virginia who were citizens or residents of the late rebel States during the rebellion, and the number who were soldiers of the late rebel army. I have received from the War Department a communication, which I think it my duty to lay before the House in order to make a motion.

The Clerk read the communication, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, January 16, 1869.

SIR: Referring to a resolution of the House of Representatives, dated January 6, 1869, calling for information relative to the number of enlisted men of the Army now on duty in Texas, Mississippi, and Virginia, who were citizens or residents of the late rebel States during the rebellion, and the number who were soldiers of the late rebel army, I am directed by the Secretary of War to inform you that the information called for in the resolution cannot be obtained from any of the official records, and the only way to get it is from the individual statement of each soldier, which will consume much time and require that each commander of a post in the States named should be called upon to question the men under his command, and report the result.

The Secretary desires to know if, under the circumstances, you desire to have the resolution answered in terms.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant.
E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant General.

Hon. H. E. PAINE, M. C.

Mr. PAINE. Mr. Speaker, I very much regret that the information called for by that resolution cannot be obtained. From the communication just read it is manifest that the resolution could not be answered during the present Congress, so that the inquiry would be fruitless. I therefore ask unanimous consent of the House to relieve the War Department of this duty by rescinding the resolution.

No objection being made, the resolution was rescinded.

REVENUE COMMISSIONER REPORT.

Mr. ELA. The Committee on Printing have directed me to report the following resolution.

Mr. SCHENCK. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Printing is authorized to report at any time.

Mr. MULLINS. There are other committees that desire to report whenever they can be called. I insist upon the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair repeats that the Committee on Printing is authorized to report at any time.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to ask a parliamentary question. I wish to know if it would be a privileged question to offer a resolution granting the use of this Hall to George Francis Train, who has made application to the Speaker for that privilege? I would like to offer the resolution now.

The SPEAKER. It would not. The House has resolved that the Hall shall not be granted except for specific purposes in which the House itself participates.

The Clerk read the resolution reported by the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved, That twenty thousand copies of the report of the Special Commissioner of the Revenue, with the appendices complete, be printed for the use of the House, and one thousand bound copies of the same for the use of the Treasury Department.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask to be allowed to say a word on that resolution.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman how long he intends to discuss the resolution?

Mr. KELLEY. Half an hour.

Mr. ELA. I will first call the previous question, and then yield to the gentleman.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. ELA. I now yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I hope the resolution reported by the committee will not be adopted. I do not think the report ought to receive such an indorsement. I do not see how Congress can consistently cast it broadcast over the country. It is a report full of figures, which are so ingeniously selected and marshaled that one might suppose it had been prepared specially to show the pestilent character of that most false and dangerous of all the aphorisms embodied in the English language, namely, that "figures cannot lie." They are so culled and marshaled in this report as to lead to conclusions false, delusive, and damaging to our country, and especially unjust to that Congress which has carried the country through the great struggle from which she has just emerged. I do not mean to say that the figures embodied in it are in themselves false; upon that point I do not speak now; but I do mean to say that they are so detached from their correlatives as to lead to conclusions utterly at variance with notorious facts which are familiar to every gentleman on this floor.

The gentleman who is announced several times in the report as collecting the statistics and making the calculations has, so far as I know, done his duty fairly; but the commissioner who selected the material for this report, and prepared and marshaled it, has not done so with a view to letting Congress and the country establish conclusions from an impartial array of facts, but to sustain a foregone conclusion and advocate a favorite theory of his own, which is, in my judgment, at variance with the true interests of the country.

Let me, Mr. Speaker, demonstrate the truth of my assertions, and before doing so let me say that if the conclusions of this report are true—and I ask gentlemen from the southern States to give me their ear on this point—if the conclusions of the Commissioner as set forth in this report are true, good conscience requires the American Congress to notify the laboring people of the world that they cannot improve their condition by coming to this country. If this report be true in its deductions it is a fraud upon individual immigrants and a wrong upon humanity to invite working people to leave their homes in other lands and come to dwell among us.

The thesis of the report is that we have since 1860 so legislated that while wealth is accumulating more rapidly than it ever accumulated in any other land or age the poor are steadily growing poorer and the rich richer; that the yawning gulf between poverty and wealth is ever widening in this country, and that the laboring man and his family cannot live as well upon their earnings as they could in 1860.

The report—and it is voluminous—devotes five or six pages only to the progress of wealth and productive power in this country, but they suffice to show that it is with constantly increasing velocity and momentum. If it be true in that respect, and the laboring people are really becoming poorer daily, we are on the eve of an aristocracy more potent than any that has preceded it, and of a social condition such as the world has never seen. I propose to inquire whether this startling proposition be true. The Commissioner, assuming that his array of facts have established it, says on page 21:

"It has been well said that there can be no true theoretic conclusion which will not be proved by the facts whenever the theory can be applied. We have given the theory of the effects of inconvertible paper money, and we find that the facts prove it. The rich become richer and the poor poorer."

Not satisfied with this, he says:

"The aggregate wealth of the country is increasing, probably, as rapidly as at any former period; yet it does not follow that there is the same increase in general prosperity. The laborer, especially he who has a large family to support, is not as prosperous as he was in 1860. His wages have not increased in proportion to the increase in the cost of his living. There is, therefore, an inequality in the distribution of our annual product, which we must, in no small degree, refer to artificial causes. This inequality exists even among the working classes themselves. The single man or woman, working for his or her support alone, is in the receipt of a rate of wages from which savings may be made equal or greater than ever before, especially in the manufacturing towns, where the price of board is, to a certain extent, regulated artificially by the employer."

And again, I ask gentlemen to listen to the Commissioner's statement of the condition to which their legislation has reduced our countrymen:

"Unmarried operatives, therefore, gain; while those who are obliged to support their own families in hired tenements lose. Hence, deposits in savings-banks increase, while marriage is discouraged; and the forced employment of young children is made almost a necessity in order that the family may live."

If this be the condition of our country, do we not, as I have said, perpetrate a fraud when we ask the laboring immigrant to come and dwell among us? In order to illustrate this point, I, too, have looked up some facts. I have not had official station and clerks and agents to enable me to collect them; but as a citizen with my eyes open I have seen enough to enable me to detect the deception perpetrated in this report, although the figures by which they are perpetrated may perhaps be true in themselves. Pages are filled with tabular statements of the wages of laboring people in 1860 and the cost of living at that time, as compared with the wages and prices in 1867-68. Sir, 1860-61, and from 1857 to the autumn of the latter year, was one of the darkest periods ever seen by the laboring people of America. Not one out of five of the skilled workmen of the country was steadily employed. In Philadelphia, when they wanted to build a street railroad they advertised for two hundred and fifty hands at sixty cents a day, and more than five thousand offered, a majority of whom were skilled artisans who could find no other employment. In the neighborhood of one of the establishments, the statistics of which go into this report, a rolling-mill, the number of unemployed men was so great that the county authorities, to save its skilled workmen from open pauperism, determined to build a turnpike, and experienced hands from rolling-mills were employed at breaking stone and road-making at fifty cents a day rather than become paupers. For the comparatively few who had employment the wages are, I assume, honestly given in the report; but of the many who were picking up a precarious living by getting an occasional day's work at half wages or quarter wages no account is taken; and thus facts that may be true in themselves, by being separated from those which would have explained and interpreted them are made to libel our country and the Congress that carried it through the war. Let me in this connection bring the attention of gentlemen to some facts.

Look at the palatial buildings erected in this city during the last year and the comfortable dwellings for mechanics and laborers. How many of them there are you have all seen. They are built by squares and blocks. I have endeavored to ascertain how many were built in 1860, and can hear of but four dwelling-houses built in Washington in that year. In 1861, so far as I have been able to learn, but one dwelling house and one public school-house, the contract price for which was $3,500, were erected. Leaving Washington, I go to my own city, and by turning to the report of the building inspectors find that in 1860 twenty-four hundred and seventy-two houses were built. The decline had commenced, and in 1861 but sixteen hundred and seventy-three were built. In 1860 we enlarged five hundred and eighty-eight buildings; in 1861 but two hundred and four were enlarged. But in 1868, when the Commissioner tells us labor was not as prosperous as in 1860, we erected forty-seven hundred and ninety-six buildings and enlarged twelve hundred and fifteen. In 1868 there was an active demand for labor, and labor was high. It could determine its own wages. In 1860 labor was begging employment and wages were low. As a general thing mechanics had to accept whatever wages were offered, though in a few instances favored establishments were able to run continuously and pay fair wages. These exceptional cases have furnished the Commissioner data for what he announces as a general law.

The low rate of wages that ruled in 1860 would have led a proficient in political economy to look for the facts I am now about to lay before you. It is a law of social science that when employment is scarce labor must accept low wages and losses time; but when employment is quick and active labor regulates its own wages and is constantly employed. The tables presented by the Commissioner ignores this law, and is consequently a fraud upon Congress and a slander upon our country, the working people of which were never so prosperous as now.

Let me also exhibit some comparisons between 1860 and 1868, which bear upon the question at issue. In that blessed year, 1860, which the Commissioner eulogizes, the sheriff of Philadelphia received seventeen hundred and forty writs for the sale of real estate, while in 1868, the year of congressional wrong and pecuniary depression, the sheriff of that city received but seven hundred and six writs for the sale of real estate, a falling off of largely more than fifty per cent., though in the interval there has been an increase of forty per cent. in the population and more than that in the wealth of the city.

I turn now to savings-banks. The Commissioner refers to them, and should have known that their records would be to his statistics what the governor is to the steam-engine; they would have pointed him to the fallacy or confirmed the correctness of his conclusions. Saving institutions are not favorites in Philadelphia. Our workmen prefer to take up land on ground rents and build their little homes. To ascertain the savings of the working people of Philadelphia we must obtain the figures from building associations, which I have not had time to do. We have, however, one saving institution that has stood for nearly half a century and is a representative institution. It had in 1860 twenty-one thousand two hundred and sixty-five depositors. When the year 1861 closed it had but twelve thousand six hundred and sixty-two depositors. The year 1860 found it with $4,083,450 of deposits, and the year 1861 left it with but $2,251,646. This is the depository of the laboring people of Philadelphia, while they gather their first $300 toward building their homes, and its records prove that nearly nine thousand of them were stripped of their accumulated savings by the lack of employment in the year which the Commissioner of Revenue tells us was so favorable to them and their class, and two millions of their hoarded dollars were withdrawn from deposit and expended for the necessities of life in two years of that happy condition, to which he would restore the country. But in 1868, for which he says we have legislated so crudely and unwisely, the number of depositors had grown to be twenty-four thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight, and the deposits had swollen to the sum of $5,008,379.

But let me pass beyond the capital of our country and my own city, and ask how it has been and is with the people of other parts of the country? I find by official reports that in Maine there were in 1860 on deposit in the savings banks the sum of $1,466,457, but that in 1867, when Congress had ruined the working classes, the less than one million and a half dollars to their credit had swollen to $5,598,600, in that sparsely populated seaboard State.

If we go to New Hampshire, we find that the savings deposits there in 1860 were $4,600,000, while in 1866 they were $7,857,601. And I am assured they have increased steadily in both the succeeding years, although I have not been able to get the precise figures.

In Massachusetts in 1860 there were two hundred and thirty thousand depositors, with the sum of $45,054,236 on deposit. But the effect of the exemplary year of the Commissioner was such as to reduce the number of depositors five thousand and ten, and the deposits $268,797, as they stood at the close of the bank year of 1861.

In every State the record shows that there was either a positive reduction of the number of depositors and amount of deposits in those two years, or that the increase of the volume of deposits was arrested by the pressure upon the laboring classes in the happy years between 1857 and 1860, for the return of which the Commissioner sighs so piteously.

But to return to the statistics of Massachusetts. Although in 1861 a drain had been made upon the $45,000,000 on deposit in 1860, in 1866 the deposits in the savings banks of that little State reached the enormous sum of $67,732,264. And since 1866, in two years of congressional wrong upon the laboring classes, they have swollen from $67,732,264 to $94,833,336 54. In spite of the wrongs inflicted upon them by our legislation the laboring people of Massachusetts have in those two years deposited more money in the savings banks, have added to their deposits more money than they had accumulated in nine years preceding and including 1860. In those two years, in which, according to the report of the Commissioner, their wages were so low that they could not marry for fear of the expense of supporting families, they have added to their accumulated deposits an amount equivalent to nearly sixty per cent. of the entire amount of deposits in the savings banks of the State in 1860.

I have made this examination as broad as I could make it in the limited time that has elapsed since I received a copy of the Commissioner's report. Had not the report of the Committee on Printing come in at this time I should have been more elaborately prepared and exhibited fuller figures. I will give you such as I have collected, and believe that they will, imperfect as they are, prove a sufficient offset to the fallacies of the Commissioner.

In Rhode Island in 1860 the deposits in savings banks were $7,765,771; in 1866 they were $17,761,713, an increase of one hundred and fifty per cent. in spite of greenbacks and a protective tariff. In Connecticut, from 1860 to 1866 they rose from eighteen to thirty-one millions. And so it is all over the country. If the Commissioner of Revenue is to be believed the unmarried men who, by reason of the unwise legislation of Congress, dare not marry, have annually added hundreds per cent. more to the savings-banks deposits than all the laborers of the country could when they were wisely cared for by free trade legislators! I do not believe it; and if there be any great-hearted girl and her lover on the other side of the Atlantic who want to come to a country in which they may prosper, I tell them that the warning of the Special Commissioner of Revenue is false and fraudulent; and that they may come to the United States with the certainty of finding a country in which the morals of the working people are good, because their condition is prosperous enough to guaranty to each sober and industrious family a home.

Sir, let me tell you more than this: while these deposits have been accumulating thousands and tens of thousands of our laboring people have been making provision for the future by insuring their lives. In Massachusetts alone, the amount of life insurance on January 1, 1868, on maintained policies was $1,284,680,478. When people in addition to laying up money at interest are insuring their lives, they are living well; but when, as in 1860, past accumulations in savings banks are running down, and they are wasting their time in enforced idleness, they cannot live well and contribute freely to the support of the Government. Accept the recommendations of the Commissioner and you will paralyze industry, reduce wages, throw the producing classes upon their deposits for support and deprive them of the power to keep up the insurance on their lives. Such facts as I have presented are sufficient to refute a thousand fine-spun theories. It may with the ingenuity that fashioned this report be said that the policies to which I have referred are on the lives of wealthy people. But such is not the case; two hundred and sixty-five out of each thousand of them are for $1,000 or less; five hundred and forty out of each thousand are for $2,000 or less; seven hundred out of each thousand for $3,000 or less. Only three hundred out of each thousand are for amounts over $3,000. These policies are the precautions taken by well-paid industry to provide for widowhood and orphanage after the head of the family shall have paid mortality's last debt.

I am admonished by gentlemen near me that my time is nearly out. I may, therefore, have to return to this report. I ask gentlemen from West Virginia, Kansas, Michigan, New York, and Alabama to look at its statements relating to salt. It dwells upon the Island of Carmen, in Lower California; it tells how cheaply salt could be furnished from that island were it not for the duties imposed by the tariff; but it does not breathe a word of Vermilion bay or Avery's Island or Petit Anse, the world-famed salt island in Louisiana, where all you have to do is to use the crowbar, the pick-ax, and rollers to produce and prepare salt finer and purer than that of Carmen's island or than the world elsewhere yields—a deposit of salt that was deemed sufficient to justify Jefferson in the acquisition of Louisiana even if it had been the only advantage; a deposit of salt that has never been resorted to except by the confederacy, (and it drew its whole supply of salt from it.) because the southern leaders, holding to the revenue-tariff doctrines of the Special Commissioner of Revenue, preferred having their ships and their workshops on the other side of the Atlantic—preferred preventing the development of the mineral resources of the South especially, and of the whole country. The island near the head of the Atchafalaya, in Vermilion bay, but ninety miles from New Orleans, is within our own limits; and I apprehend the Commissioner is not ignorant of the fact that northern enterprise and capital have purchased it, and under the protection given by our tariff to such a preliminary outlay of money, are about employing freedmen to prepare a cheap way to market by water carriage, by which they hope to afford a cheap and full supply of that superior salt to the markets of the Atlantic slope of the continent.

The Commissioner also dwells at length upon the subject of pig-iron, and tells us that a profit almost equal to that on general merchandise has for a short time been made on the manufacture of pig-iron. But, he does not tell us how completely the want of that iron has enslaved us to England, or how the report of these profits is stimulating the erection of furnaces not only in Pennsylvania and Ohio, but in Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, West Virginia, Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, Oregon, and other States. I may ask the gentleman to yield me two or three minutes more, that I may complete this statement. The rapidity with which furnaces are being built in new fields gives us the promise of a supply of native pig-iron. Nothing will do more than that to promote a return to specie payments. I hold in my hand a circular which reads thus: "Fifty-eight, Old Broad street, London, November 30, 1868, from S. W. Hopkins & Co., exporters of railway iron. Monthly Report of Exports of Rails from Great Britain, extracted from the Government Returns." By this report it appears that in the ten months ending October 31, 1868, Great Britain exported five hundred and nine thousand nine hundred and sixty-eight tons of rails. Gentlemen probably think that England's colonial dependencies took most of this iron; that British India, British North America, and Australia took it. No, gentlemen; we are her chief commercial dependency. She is our mistress, and we maintain her throne and aristocracy. No; the British dependencies took but eighty-four thousand tons, and her American dependency, the United States, took two hundred and twenty-eight thousand tons. Of the five hundred and nine thousand nine hundred and sixty-eight tons of rails we took twenty-one thousand tons more than British India, Russia, British North America, Sweden, Prussia, France, Spain and Canaries, Cuba, Brazil, Chili, and Australia.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. I ask the gentleman to yield for five minutes longer.

Mr. ELA. I cannot yield any further.

Mr. KELLEY. Very well; I will then have to recur to the subject hereafter, for I mean to show up the fallacies of this report more fully than I have been able to do in half an hour.

Mr. ELA. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARFIELD. I confess my great surprise at the opposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to the printing of this report of the Special Commissioner of the Revenue. I think, if the gentleman is really in earnest about it, he has made a most damaging admission. We have an officer appointed to examine and report to us facts and recommendations in regard to our financial condition. His annual report is before us, and the gentleman does not wish it printed. He admits, in the first place, that the facts stated are generally correct; that the statistics collected and arranged in tables are true and correctly stated; but declares that the marshaling of the facts is dangerous; that they are put together in such a way and such an inference is drawn from them that the report is dangerous to Congress and to the enlightened people of the country. The gentleman asks this House to make a humiliating confession, in which I, for one, am not ready to join. If any theories or opinions of mine can be damaged by facts so much the worse for my theories. It seems to me that the gentleman gives away his case, abandons his ground of attack, when he starts out by admitting the general correctness of the figures.

What, then, is the fault he finds with the Commissioner? If the things stated are facts what is the matter? Why, the gentleman's grievance is contained in a single paragraph of the report on page 15. As the result of the tables collected from a very wide range of observation, the Commissioner concludes that the cost of living, the food, clothing, shelter, light and fuel of families in this country was about seventy eight per cent. higher in 1868 than it was in 1860-61, the year before the war; while the average wages of the unskilled laborer is but fifty per cent. higher, and of the skilled laborer but sixty per cent. higher than in 1860-61. Those are the two deductions drawn by the Special Commissioner from the great mass of facts and figures brought under his observation, and from these it appears to the Commissioner that the laboring man can lay up less of his earnings at the end of the year than he could in 1860. The Commissioner had also shown that the wealth in the hands of the capitalists of the country is rapidly increasing. This did not provoke an attack from the gentleman. He either does not deny it or is glad to have it proved; but he is unwilling to have it shown that labor is not reaping its full share of the increasing wealth. Has the gentleman impeached the correctness of the Commissioner's facts? Not at all. He even admits them. It must be then that he refuses to print this report because its facts and deductions do not square with his theories and notions. I call the gentleman's attention to the tables. Here are twenty five pages of the appendix to the report, just from the press, wholly devoted to the very subject of the gentleman's complaint. Appendix D is a series of tables exhibiting the comparative cost of provisions, clothing, rent, and all that make up the cost of living in the years 1860 and 1868. These prices were taken from the cities and rural districts of every State, beginning with Maine and reaching to Ohio. I wish the tables included the West also. Now it becomes gentlemen who discredit the report of the Commissioner to answer the facts set forth in these tables. Appendix E shows the average wages of labor, and these tables are made up from an equally wide range of observation. The various classes of trades and labor are exhibited in the different States named, and if the statements are incorrect let them be met and exploded. I do not quarrel with these facts. I only regret that the tables do not include statistics from Ohio and the States further west.

Mr. DAWES. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Commissioner is at fault in omitting the western States?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not. I only say I regret that these States were not included. Now, sir, this result reached by the Commissioner is no new thing. In 1866 the Commissioner reported that from 1860 to 1866 wages had risen sixty per cent. and the cost of living ninety per cent. Why was not that fact challenged at that time? The statement has been long enough before the country to have been refuted long ago if it is not true.

Let me ask attention for a moment to some facts I have lately obtained. Hearing that this attack was to be made I have asked information from two sources, in order to test the correctness of the Commissioner's position. In the first place, we have in the Army a very good mode of testing the cost of living by the price of rations. The fullest competition is allowed to bidders, and the price of the ration is the result of this competition for supplying the Army. I have examined the records of the commissary department, and find that the price of rations during the war confirms in a remarkable manner the conclusions of the Commissioner in regard to the cost of living. In the next place, I hold in my hand a table that shows what we have been paying to laborers employed on our public works; and the price, which is adjusted to the general market, proves fully the report of the Commissioner on that subject. In 1861, here in Washington, we paid unskilled laborers $1 25 per day; we now pay them $1 75—an increase of about fifty per cent. For skilled labor the increase ranged from fifty-five to seventy-five per cent.

The following is an official statement of daily wages paid in this city:

	1861.	1868.	Increase per cent.
Carpenters.....	$2 00	$3 50	75
Laborers.....	1 25	1 75	40
Stone masons.....	2 50	4 00	60
Brick masons.....	2 50	4 00	60
Machinists.....	2 00	3 00	50
Plumbers.....	2 25	3 50	55
Blacksmiths.....	2 00	3 00	50

We are building custom-houses and post offices and improving our rivers and harbors all over the United States, and our own official records, which were not carried into the Commissioner's table, so far as I have been able to examine them, all verify the statistics of the Commissioner. I hold in my hand also one of the leading papers published in New York only a few days ago, in which the editor says:

"There are few men in this tax-ridden country who are more familiar with the cause or who more clearly see the unfortunate tendency of the unnatural style of living which prevails at the present day than Mr. David Wells, the Special Commissioner at Washington, from whose report we have previously taken much that was interesting and instructive. In his opinion these are unhealthy times for individuals, and many of us can heartily indorse that opinion. We are, to be sure, getting on an average better pay than in other days, but how about our expenses? Look at houses, coal, flour, butter, milk, eggs, wood, cloth, and leather: they are no better than they were ten years ago nor less plentiful, but their cost is vastly greater; so much greater, in fact, that rents are positively extortionate, and the absolute necessities of life beyond the reach of thousands in this very city."

This is the opinion of a journalist who is speaking of affairs in his own city and speaks of his own knowledge.

But the gentleman from Philadelphia has given us a new and remarkable revelation about the year 1860. It is the first time I have ever heard it said by a responsible gentleman that the year 1860 was a disastrous one for the American people.

The gentleman stated—I wrote down his words—that 1860–61 was the darkest period ever seen in this country; and he went on to exhibit how hard it was for laboring men to find employment. Now, Mr. Speaker, I differ widely from the honorable gentleman. I remember very well that the distinguished chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. MORRELL] some three years ago referred to the year 1860 as the most prosperous year which this Republic ever saw; and he gave his reasons for the statement. It was a year of plenty, of great increase. I remember, moreover, that it was a year of light taxes. There was but one great people on the face of the globe so lightly taxed as the American people in 1860. Now we are the most heavily taxed people except one, perhaps, on the face of the globe; and the weight of nearly all our taxes falls at last on the laboring man. This is an element which the gentleman seems to have omitted from his calculation altogether.

The gentleman says that at the present time laborers are doing better than in 1860. I ask him how many strikes there were among laborers in 1860–61? Were there any at all? And how many were there in 1868? Will the gentleman deny that strikes exhibit the unsettled and unsatisfactory condition of labor in its relations to capital? In our mines, in our mills and furnaces, in our manufacturing establishments, are not the laborers every day joining in strikes for higher wages, and saying that they need them on account of the high price of provisions or that the capitalists get too large a share of the profits? I want to say, in this connection, that I believe the condition of the laboring man in the West is better than in the East. The element of transportation does not enter so largely into his cost of living. I confess that I was somewhat surprised at these statistics of the Commissioner, for if I had been asked I should have said that the laboring men of my district were doing nearly as well and perhaps in some cases better than they were doing in 1860; but still I cannot impeach the array of facts he has exhibited. They refer to the eastern portion of the country, however, and the local conditions may be different there.

But let me advert for a moment to another point in the statement of the gentleman. He speaks with great triumph of the amount that is deposited in savings banks by laboring men now as compared with 1860. Why, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the facts lead to exactly the opposite conclusion from that which the gentleman draws. What does it mean? It means that in this country, and especially in the East, in the unsettled state of our commerce and of our currency men dare not invest their little earnings in business, and they, therefore, put them into savings banks, where they are lightly taxed, to await solid values and steady times. In the West it is not generally so. A man can buy land and improve it, and thus can work for himself and have his profits as well as his keep while he is laboring. I think that will explain the reason why savings banks are more patronized in the East than in the West.

The gentleman has referred to railroad iron and the vast amount recently brought into this country. Sir, that is the most natural thing in the world. During the war the building of railroads was almost wholly suspended. The work has revived and greatly increased since the war, and in 1868 the new roads were ready for their iron. Hence the unusual demand and the large importation of the rails to which the gentleman refers. The gentleman must remember that railroad iron has the least protection of any form of iron. It bears a tariff duty of but seventy per cent., while the next higher grade of iron bears a tariff duty of one hundred and twenty-five per cent.

Another fact: while speaking of rolling-mills in this country I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] and my friend from the Johnstown district [Mr. MORRELL] if they know of any railroad-iron mill in this country that has not all the business it can do? Does he know such a mill in this country that this day has not more orders than it can fill? I say this to show that even the heavy importation of English rails have not broken down our manufacturers.

Mr. COVODE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GARFIELD. I must decline to yield.

Mr. COVODE. The gentleman asked a question of "the gentleman from the Johnstown district," and I desire to answer it.

Mr. GARFIELD. One word more. This is not the first time we have heard a clamor against the Commissioner of the Revenue. I must advert for a moment to something that occurred about two years ago. At that time the Commissioner recommended a reduction of the tax on whisky, and gave it as his opinion that thereby the amount of revenue from that source would be increased. In certain quarters a great clamor was raised against him, and I remember very well that a circular was laid before the members of this House charging the Commissioner with being in the interest of the whisky men. Now, what was the fact? After wasting the revenues of this country in a fruitless and vain attempt to collect the tax of two dollars per gallon the tax was reduced. And with what result? Everything promises that the revenue from the tax on whisky will this year reach $40,000,000, while it never before has reached the sum of $30,000,000 a year, even with the tax at two dollars.

I have in my hand a record of the collections in the Chicago district in a few months of this year, showing that during the corresponding months in 1867 and in 1868 the amount of revenue from the present rate of tax upon whisky is greater than when the rate of tax was higher. It shows the amounts of tax paid on whisky under the sixty-five-cent tax and under the two-dollar tax for the same months of 1867 and 1868:

	1867.	1868.
July.....	$4,934	$165,552
August.....	6,821	214,726
September.....	11,654	84,772
October.....	54,825	219,916
November.....	33,291	304,405
December.....	87,755	326,369
Total.....	$200,279	$1,303,140

The tax in 1867 was three times as large per gallon as in 1868, and yet look at the respective receipts from each rate. On a sixty-five-cent tax the receipts are nearly seven times as great as on the two-dollar tax!

An officer who has served the country so ably and faithfully deserves well of Congress and the country. I trust the motion to print will prevail.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ELA. I now yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Rhode Island, [Mr. JENCKES.]

Mr. JENCKES. I hope the resolution from the Committee on Printing will be adopted. The report of the Special Commissioner of the Revenue, it seems to me, contains something more important than the estimates of the cost of pig-iron, or a discussion of the question of reducing the salt duties, or even the estimates of the cost of living in 1860 and 1868. This Commissioner was appointed for a special purpose, and has explained the whole subject of our finances and the financial condition of the country. He has added to the testimony already laid before this House by the Committee on Retrenchment, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Commissioner of Customs, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The Special Commissioner says that a large portion of the money to which this Government is entitled as the proceeds of internal revenue and of the customs is not received because of the positive dishonesty and gross inefficiency of great numbers of subordinate officials intrusted with this branch of the public service. And he goes on to give an estimate of the amount so lost to the Government. He says that from the internal revenue alone, assuming as a basis the revenue of last year—$175,000,000—the sum of $75,000,000, as a minimum under existing laws, could be added to this branch of the revenue alone. And he further adds:

"But allowing for all these contingencies it seems possible for the Treasury to have at its command at the close of the next fiscal year an available surplus of from one hundred million to one hundred and twenty-five million dollars, and with such elements of strength there is not a single fiscal problem of our immediate future which will not be greatly aided in its solution. The Commissioner furthermore maintains that the realization of such a surplus involves nothing impractical, and nothing which partakes of the nature of an experiment."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish the House and the country to understand just the cause and the measure of this deficiency. It results from the gross dishonesty or total inefficiency of the subordinate officers in the revenue department alone; and the amount of the deficiency thus created is sufficient to pay every dollar of the national debt within the time that it becomes due, assuming the whole at $2,500,000,000. We have here the means pointed out to us of putting into the Treasury from one hundred to one and twenty-five million dollars in each year, without altering or amending the law upon our statute-book, without entertaining or passing any of the schemes of finance which are now pending in both branches of Congress. The evil is before us, and the remedy is plain and clear. The Commissioner adds:

"It requires, however, that there should be unity of purpose on the part of the Executive, of Congress, and of the people, and a full realization of the fact that the work to be accomplished is of such paramount importance that nothing else should be allowed to interfere with it. It requires that the agents who are to be intrusted with the collection and disbursement of the revenue shall be appointed on some other grounds than the devotion to party service, the length and number of their campaign speeches, or the amount of money contributed to aid in elections."

I am thankful to the Commissioner for furnishing this evidence. As I have said, it is but confirmatory of such as is already before the House and the country; but coming as it does from the office especially charged with inquiring into this business, and whose duty it is to report the facts to Congress and the country, it is entitled to great weight, and shows that the measure now pending before this Congress is of paramount importance, as the Commissioner says, in this regard.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ELA: I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts: I had not intended, Mr. Speaker, to take part in this debate further than to say a word or two as to the printing of this report. While there are some of the conclusions of the Commissioner to which I do not agree, yet the fairness, the correctness, and the reliability of his statistics are, I think, such as to command attention; and they should be sent to the country and given especially to this House. Many different deductions will be made from those statistics; but the value of the report is not in the deductions, but in the figures; and I hope that this document will be printed; that there will be no hesitation upon the question.

Saying this much, I should have stopped were it not for the remarks of the gentleman from Rhode Island, [Mr. JENCKES.] While I accord to him the utmost good faith in the advocacy of what is known as the civil service bill, yet I cannot believe that measure to be a panacea for all evils to the extent claimed. What does it provide? That the clerical force of the various Departments of the Government shall be subjected to an examination in Greek, Latin, algebra, &c., before a commission, because the bill does not propose to touch anybody, as it cannot under the Constitution, whose appointment is within the confirmation of the Senate. Now, I have not heard that the clerical business of this Government is corruptly or improperly done. I do not think the responsibility for the deficiencies in the collection of the revenue rests with the clerks, nor with the tide-waiters, nor with the watchmen, nor with any of the men in subordinate positions who are to be subjected to the examination provided for in the bill. I think the trouble is with the higher officials, who are not touched by the bill of the gentleman from Rhode Island. Not to use words of characterization, my own experience in the Army has taught me that mere examination in the school branches or an examination given by a commission is not the test of merit for officers in the Army. The officers sent by examining boards into the field were not one half so good as the men who were selected from the ranks, whom we had seen under fire, and whose qualifications we knew; officers that failed before an examining board were worthy of a brigadier general's stars, and officers who had successfully passed an examining board proved unfit for even a lieutenant's commission; although he came to us indorsed by the boards for the commission of a colonel.

Sir, what is this bill, when we come to bring it down to its exact action? It is to settle a rule in this country for the first time by which all subordinate officers shall be life officers. And in the selection of such officers we are to settle qualifications in a manner by which the deserving volunteer soldiers who have been fighting for their country for four years are to be passed by because, losing the time which they otherwise would have improved at school, they cannot pass examination, but must give place to the boy who stayed at home and went to school or college while they were fighting. Never will I vote to let that thing be done.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ELA. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I will ask how many copies the resolution proposes to print?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The resolution was read.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I see it proposes to print twenty thousand. I would inquire what is the usual number?

Mr. ELA. This is the usual number.

Mr. MOORHEAD. If this is the usual number I shall not oppose it, but I certainly would oppose the printing of an additional number. I think the report should be treated fairly. I think there are some statistics in this report which are valuable, and I have some interest in its being printed to a limited extent. That interest arises from a remark I made last summer in discussing the tariff bill, about the Special Commissioner. It was drawn out by a remark made by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] and is as follows:

"But before leaving this point, as my sensitive friend, the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] seemed a little anxious about the Special Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to whom I unfortunately referred in this connection, I deem it proper to say to the House and to the country that if it is necessary or important that this Government should keep an officer in its service at a large salary for the purpose of guarding the interests of the foreign manufacturer, the foreign importer, the foreign agent in New York, then the Secretary of the Treasury has been signally fortunate in the selection he has made, and Mr. Wells is the proper man for the place."

Now, sir, the interest I have in printing this report is in the fact that the report proves what I said. It is a free-trade document, and I have no doubt the Free Trade League will publish it and scatter it broadcast.

Mr. ELA. I simply want to say that the resolution is to print the usual number of copies. There has been a great demand for this report. It certainly contains most valuable information, and if some of its tables should be so arranged as to support one view of the question I think members of the House can so arrange them as to suit their own views if they can be sustained by facts, which I think nobody disputes, upon which the whole matter is based. I only want to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] in regard to savings-banks, as that may be deceptive as well as other things. I know the vast increase of deposits in the savings-banks in New Hampshire grows as much out of the fact that they pay less than half as much taxes as other property, as from the fact of the additional prosperity of the people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken on the resolution, it was agreed to.

Mr. ELA moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REVENUE-CUTTERS.

Mr. MULLINS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent for a change of reference. I move that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the consideration of a matter referred to it in regard to authorizing the construction of four steam revenue-cutters, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I will ask the gentleman to state what was the judgment of the Committee on Commerce on the subject.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts. The judgment of the committee was, after careful examination, that it was important that the Treasury Department should have charge of collecting the revenue and preventing frauds on the waters in the southern States and in the northwestern territory; that it was absolutely necessary that some means should be provided by which the Treasury Department could carry on the administration of the revenue laws. They have, in point of fact, no means within their control to enable them to do that which the law requires at their hands.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is insisted on by several gentlemen. The Chair supposed it was simply a change of reference, the gentleman desired.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts. That is all. I think I have answered my friend.

The motion of Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts, was agreed to.

ALEXANDER DUNBAR.

Mr. WOOD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform this House by what authority Mr. Alexander Dunbar, a citizen of Canada, is employed to instruct the horse-doctors of the United States Army in his so-called secret for the treatment of horses' feet, and to travel over the country delivering lectures on the same, what amount is paid him per month for his services, and if it be true that, in addition to his monthly salary, he is to get $20,000; also, the number of officers of the United States Army, farriers, and other attendants detailed to his service; what the nature of their duties is and the amount paid them per month; also, the number of buildings that have been rented for the use of Mr. Dunbar, and at what cost.

Mr. WOOD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELECTIONS IN THE TERRITORIES.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has commenced, and the House resumes the consideration of the bill pending at the expiration of the morning hour of Thursday last, (H. R. No. 1624,) to preserve the purity of elections in the several organized Territories of the United States, on which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHLEY] is entitled to the floor for one hour. The pending question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MULLINS.]

Mr. PHELPS. I appeal to the courtesy of the gentleman from Ohio to allow me to propose an amendment to the bill.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I will hear the amendment read.

Mr. PHELPS. I move to insert after section sixteen, on page 12, what I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the Legislatures of the Territories hereinbefore named shall at their first session after the passage of this act provide by law for a reapportionment of the members of the several Legislatures as nearly equal as may be among council and legislative districts entitled each to elect three members of council and three representatives, and that the outlying districts, if any, to which it may be necessary that a less number than three shall be apportioned, shall be located in the least populous portions of said Territories, and that at the next legislative elections thereafter in said Territories every qualified voter shall be entitled to three votes for members of council and three votes for member of the house of representatives, with the privilege of cumulating said votes upon any one or two of the candidates for either houses respectively, it being the intent and meaning of this act to secure an equitable and just representation to minorities in said Territories in all cases where minority parties exceed in number two fifths of the electoral body.

Mr. PHELPS. I should like to have a few moments to explain the amendment.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. How many minutes does the gentleman desire?

Mr. PHELPS. Five minutes.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I will yield him five minutes.

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Speaker, the amendment which has just been read by the Clerk is submitted in good faith, with no motive of hostility to the bill, but, on the contrary, with entire approbation of its features and of its policy. And, sir, I hail with satisfaction this first movement in the history of congressional legislation to recognize and to protect by congressional sanction the organization of parties in the Territories of the United States, believing it to be a wholesome example which, if carried out, as it doubtless will be carried out under the machinery of this bill, in good faith and with practical adaptation to the wants of the community, will eventually lead to its adoption in the States of the Union and by congressional legislation, as far as applies to members of Congress. I, however, do not think that the bill goes far enough. I do not believe it to be enough simply to provide for political equilibrium among the boards of canvassers and the boards of election. In my judgment Congress ought to take this opportunity to give its sanction to the principle of the representation of minorities so far as that principle can be properly applied to the organized Territories of the Union.

It is with that view and object that this amendment is now submitted. Its effect is simply this: that the several territorial Legislatures shall redivide their territories into districts, entitled each to elect three members, giving to each qualified elector the right to cumulate his three votes on one or two of the candidates, omitting the third, in that way securing to the minority the opportunity everywhere in the Territories, and in each district, to elect one out of the three representatives provided they be strong enough in numbers to exceed two fifths of the entire electoral body.

Believing that the agitation of this question in England and in this country for the last fifteen or twenty years has not escaped the notice of any member of the House, and that each gentleman has made up his mind as to the policy of securing the right of representation to minorities, it is not my purpose to encroach upon the time of the chairman of the committee by any extended argument in its favor. I simply submit the amendment at this time with a view of getting a test vote, and taking the sense of the House on the question whether it is not time to recognize and enforce it in its application to the Territories. It goes no further at present than simply to apply the principle to the elections of members to territorial Legislatures, leaving it for the future to determine whether it should be applied in a more general way to the elections of all officers.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I am willing that the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PHELPS] should be voted upon, and therefore I will permit it to be offered. I will now ask the previous question on the bill and pending amendments, after which I will yield the floor to gentlemen who desire to submit some remarks upon this subject, reserving to myself some time to close the debate.

Mr. BURLEIGH. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I would like to ask the honorable chairman of the Committee on the Territories, [Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio,] in the first place, what the object of this bill is?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Of this bill?

Mr. BURLEIGH. Yes, sir.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. The object of this bill is to supply the place of a registry law, and to secure beyond peradventure the rights of the minority in every Territory of the United States.

Mr. BURLEIGH. One more question. Who is calling for it? Who is asking for it? Who is demanding either the bill itself or the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. PHELPS?]

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Petition after petition has been presented to Congress during the past six years for a registry law in the Territories. From personal observation I knew how difficult it was to prepare a registry law that would be enforced with justice in the sparsely populated Territories, especially in the mining Territories. And upon the instruction of the committee, of which I am chairman, I have prepared this bill with a great deal of care, so that there should be absolute security to every party in any county and in any voting precinct of a Territory; that there should be no fraud either in the acceptance of the ballot or in the return of the election officers.

Mr. BURLEIGH. One more question, if the gentleman will permit me. The chairman of the Committee on the Territories states that every Territory in the Union has memorialized or petitioned or asked for a general registry law to be passed for their protection. I would ask him when the Territory of Dakota, through its Legislature or people, ever asked for any thing of the kind.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I do not know that the Legislature of the Territory of Dakota have asked it, but citizens of the Territory have asked it.

Mr. BURLEIGH. We had a registry law of our own there for a time, but it was so obnoxious that our people repealed it. And we do not now ask to have anything of the kind forced upon us. Congress gave one Legislature authority to pass all necessary laws concerning elections; and we do not want to be tampered with in this style year after year, as we have been. We want to be left to carry on our own government in our own way, subject to the laws of Congress.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Well, Mr. Speaker, the House, on considering the bill, can dispose of it as they see fit. I now insist upon my demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, if any gentleman desires to take the floor upon this bill I will yield to him before I make the remarks which I propose to make on the amendment and the bill.

Mr. CHILCOTT. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman for a few minutes.

Mr. CHILCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that the people of Colorado have petitioned the chairman of the Committee on the Territories to propose any change in our election laws. Under the organic act of our Territory the Legislature of Colorado has made such rules and regulations for the conducting of elections as the people desired; and unless the citizens of the Territory have sent to the gentleman from Ohio some application which they have not sent to me there is no necessity and no demand for a change in our system of conducting elections. This bill proposes to place the whole control of our elections into the hands of the Governor of the Territory. Should the people of the Territories see proper to apply to Congress for the passage of registry laws they unquestionably would do so through their respective Delegates. My constituents have made no application for any such change. I hope that the members on this floor will at least allow to the Delegates of the respective Territories the privilege of making application on behalf of their people whenever the latter desire changes in the laws by which they are governed. No such application has been made in this case, and no such change as that proposed in this bill is necessary or is desired by the people. Should this new system of regulating elections be adopted three or four years must elapse before the people can become accustomed to it. I hope, therefore, that the bill will not be passed.

A MEMBER. Does any Territory ask for such a bill?

Mr. CHILCOTT. Not a single Territory.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I now yield to the gentleman from Arizona, [Mr. BASHFORD.]

Mr. BASHFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill having reference to the Territories alone; and it is, therefore, I think, one which the Delegates of those Territories have a right to criticize, and, if possible, defeat, if in their judgment it ought to be defeated. The bill is plausible on its face, but it will not bear examination. It proposes, in the first place, to give to the Governor of each Territory the appointment of three county canvassers in every county in the Territory, and these are to appoint three canvassers for each election precinct. The Governor of the Territory would thus be enabled to control, if he should see fit, the choice of all the election officers throughout the Territory. Although the bill provides that two of every three of these election officers shall be appointed from the dominant party, and one from the minority party, the Governor may, nevertheless, appoint men who are in his interest and are his friends; and with the unlimited veto power now possessed by all, or nearly all, of the territorial Governors, and with the official influence of the position, the Governor could, if he saw fit, control, and if he were a bad man doubtless would control, the elections in the whole Territory.

This will be still more manifest from an examination of the other provisions of the bill. It is provided in one section that unless all the provisions of the bill should be carried out the vote of the election precincts in which there shall be any departure from them shall be thrown out. Here is a long, abstruse bill, containing conditions which never could be entirely complied with, and under which no election could be held in any of the States, and yet any departure from the mode of proceedings thus prescribed is to be considered as vitiating the election in every precinct in which such a departure may take place. The election laws of the States do not provide that a failure to comply with all the provisions of those laws shall vitiate the election. If the election is conducted fairly, and the will of the voters is clearly ascertained, the election is not in any State declared void, though there may have been some variation from the precise method of proceedings prescribed by law. But this bill provides that if the election is not conducted in precise accordance with these voluminous provisions, which cannot be understood or carried out without great difficulty, the election is to be declared void. A notice is then to be served upon the precinct or town canvassers that the election is contested, and if the canvassers do not appear to show that the election was a fair one the return is to be thrown out. In a sparsely settled country like the Territories, with no opportunities for travel except by private conveyance, and where one county sometimes embraces hundreds of miles, the election officers would never take the trouble to follow up the proceedings, and thus the entire return would frequently be thrown out.

But it is said that two of these county canvassers are to be appointed from the dominant party and one or two from the minority party. Now, sir, it so happens that in the Territory of Arizona there is no party whatever. There has never been a political organization in that Territory, except in one county. How can this plan, therefore, be carried out in the Territory which I represent? The intent and spirit of the bill has reference to the parties organized in the Territories. Now, it seems to me, after you have given us the organic law of the Territories, which is our constitution, it is quite as well to let us alone to govern ourselves.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CAVANAUGH. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to yield to me five or ten minutes.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I yield five minutes.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I have examined this bill with a great deal of care. At the first reading I was disposed to support it; but, sir, now, here, in the name of the people of my Territory of both parties, I desire to enter my protest against its passage. I do it for the reason that under the organic act of the Territory our Legislative Assembly has for four years past governed the Territory by just and wise laws. The machinery of the territorial government is now in perfect running order, and we do not wish, so long as we come within the requirements of our organic act, that Congress should select our Territories for the purpose of experimental legislation.

I say, furthermore, that if Congress will let these Territories alone and not meddle with their legislation it would be better, not only for the people of the Territories themselves, but for Congress itself. If the Committee on the Territories or on the Judiciary had introduced a bill of another character, much more needed in the Territories than a bill of this kind—I now speak of a bill allowing the people of the Territories to elect their own Governors and judges—that would relieve them of a load that now presses upon their shoulders, as I know from a residence of five years in Colorado, and of some time in Minnesota prior to its admission as a State, besides the time I have resided in the Territory of Montana, which I have the honor to represent. Whenever Congress has taken its hand off from the people of the Territories, and left them to act under the organic law and discharge all the functions that devolve upon them, there has been no trouble. I trust, therefore, that all this tinkering with the Territories on the part of Congress will cease from this time.

Why, sir, let me ask the gentleman from Ohio, how are you going to carry out this plan? Take the county of Deer Lodge. It is some two or two hundred and fifty miles in length by one hundred in breadth. There are seventy-five or eighty mining camps in that county alone. In that Territory, consisting of one hundred and forty-three thousand square miles, every county has its little mining camps and a town. Some of the counties have large and thriving towns and cities, but how in those extreme marginal localities can the provisions of this bill be carried into effect?

Again, our people are much more competent, in my judgment, to govern themselves than are gentlemen on this floor, who know but little about the Territories. You are here attempting to legislate for people who have taken their lives in their hands—the young blood of New England and the middle States, the energetic, intelligent men of the eastern-west, to coin a word, who have gone into the Territories and laid broad and deep the foundations of great States, planting there the principles that have been inculcated in their minds in their native States. They go out the avant-couriers of civilization to pluck these barren wastes and make them magnificent, powerful, and sovereign States in this grand national Union of ours. We who have lived on the frontiers for fifteen years or more pretend at least to know more about the wants of the people there than any member from New England or Ohio or New York, no matter how intelligent he may be, or how well fitted to discharge the duties that may devolve upon him in regard to the interests of his constituency. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. There is nothing mysterious or hard to understand in this bill. The principle of it could with all propriety be enacted into law in any country where it is desired to preserve the purity of the ballot. The purpose I had in view, and the purpose of the committee whom I represent, was to secure beyond peradventure a fair and honest election in every Territory of the United States. The objection urged by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. BASFORD] shows that he has not read the bill with care. He supposes that the Governor is empowered to appoint three commissioners in each county, two of whom shall be members of the dominant party, whereas the Governor is required to appoint four, two of the dominant party and two of the minority party or parties, if there are any minority parties, and if not, then from any citizens of whatever party; and the bill requires an affirmative vote of three members of the board to make an order, and three members of the board to constitute a quorum. This board is charged with the appointment of election boards in every township and voting precinct. There again, however, the diverse political sentiment of the locality is to be represented; the dominant party at the last election, if there are organized parties in the Territory, are to have two members of the board, and the party having the next largest vote at the last election is to have one member of the board. So that the minority have absolute security that the majority shall not improperly admit or exclude voters from the ballot-box, nor can they make up, when they count the ballots, a statement which does not have the sanction of the minority of the board.

Mr. WELKER. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Yes, sir.

Mr. WELKER. I find on pages 2 and 3 of the bill a provision that if it turns out at any election, or at the first election, that neither candidate was elected to the office of Delegate to Congress by a majority of the votes, thereupon the Governor of the Territory shall issue a proclamation to that effect, and another election shall be held at which the electors shall be compelled to vote for the gentlemen who were candidates at the first election. I want to know what is the necessity of requiring the electors at the second election to vote for the same candidates that ran at the first election?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman might as well ask why the men who made the Constitution of the United States thought it necessary to provide that when an election for President comes into the House of Representatives they shall select one of the three highest candidates. But that bill is not before the House at all.

Mr. WELKER. Allow me one word.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. The bill to which my colleague refers is not before the House at all. This is a bill to preserve the purity of elections in the Territories, and the bill to which the gentleman refers is a bill to provide for the election of Delegates from the several Territories of the United States.

Mr. WELKER. That was the bill I read from.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Yes; but it is not before the House. I thought, however, that I would answer the gentleman.

Mr. WELKER. I want to say that members all around me have no other bill, and I supposed we were voting upon that proposition.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Well, sir, the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WELKER,] with his usual alertness, ought to have known that the bill was printed on the 11th of this month, and placed on his file. Now, sir, the people of Washington Territory, of Idaho Territory, and especially of Montana Territory, have for the last five years imperturbed the committee of which I am a member for a registry law. Of course I can understand that the dominant party in any Territory would cry out against congressional interference. I can understand that some particular clique that may have succeeded in obtaining control of the power in a Territory would oppose this legislation. But what I want, and what the honest people of the country want, is absolute security against either the governing officials of a Territory or organized cliques or the despotism of party majorities.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. I would ask the gentleman what Territory, either through its Legislature or through any public assembly of its citizens, has ever asked Congress to pass any such law as this?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. The territorial Legislature of Montana never has and never will.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. That is not answering my question.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Nor has the territorial Legislature of Idaho ever asked for it. But the citizens resident in the Territories of Washington, Idaho, and Montana, who are in the minority, and who under the present manner of conducting elections there will probably remain in the minority, have asked for it.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. Will the gentleman answer my question or will I be compelled to answer it for him? I will take the four Republican Territories of Dakota, Washington, New Mexico, and Colorado. Has any petition to this House of Representatives asking for any such legislation as this ever come from those four Republican Territories?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Yes, sir.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. Pardon me; a moment longer.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Do not make the question too long.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. First, pardon me if I take a moment longer on this, for I like to hit things right on the head. When the gentleman insinuates that the people of Montana or Idaho are not just as loyal to the Constitution and the Union, just as true in support of the laws of the country and the institutions under which we live, as are any people, he asserts that which will not bear investigation. There is not a man in Montana but what is as loyal as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHLEY] dare be. Thousands of men living there have given proof of their royalty by meeting the leaden hail of the rebels upon many a bloody field of battle.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I think I can answer the question of the gentleman.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. As the gentleman did not answer it, I thought I would answer it for him.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I have not intimated, nor do I think that any gentleman on this floor would say that I have intimated, that any man in Montana or Idaho was disloyal. No such words escaped my lips, nor did any such thought occur to me. I said that the dominant party there, like the dominant party in any State undoubtedly, would probably control matters, and hence the minority have petitioned this House for a registry law; and the Delegate from Washington Territory, [Mr. FLANDERS,] ever since he has been on this floor, has insisted upon the Committee on the Territories reporting a registry law for his Territory. Having traveled over a considerable portion of these Territories in 1865, and having passed five months and a half in the great Territories of the West, and having seen the citizens there in their homes, I think I understand something of their wants as well as gentlemen who are sent here to represent them. There is nothing so different in the wants of the people of the Territories from what there is in the wants of the people of the States. No gentleman can read this bill and not say that it secures beyond all peradventure a fair and honest election, and that is all that we want.

Mr. BURLEIGH. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Very well.

Mr. BURLEIGH. The gentleman says that a few years ago he traveled through those Territories. I want to know how many men he saw out there and how many elections he attended there? I have lived in those Territories since 1861, and I have never seen any of those frauds. Perhaps the gentleman has seen them; if so, I want to know when and where.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Well, sir, I was not there at any election; and it is not necessary for a man to be present at an election to know how frauds are committed and how they can be committed. My colleague, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] who has been over to the Democratic city of New York investigating the election frauds there, can tell the gentleman something about them, although he was not on the ground when they were committed.

Mr. BURLEIGH. Let the bill, then, apply to New York, and not to the Territories.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. The people of the Territories are no better and no worse than the people of the great cities or the people of the States; and a law which will secure justice to the minority in a Territory will secure it in a State.

Now, sir, I want to say a word upon the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. PHELPS.] I am in favor of the principle embodied in his amendment. I believe that the next great step which the people of this country will make will be in the direction indicated in that amendment—will be toward the recognition of the rights of minorities to representation. Indeed, one of the objects which I had in view in the preparation of this bill was to inaugurate in the Territories of the United States a system which, after due consideration by the statesmen of the country, should be applied in the States in the election of Representatives to Congress and in elections generally. I do not say, however, that I can vote for the amendment in its present shape. I believe—and this belief is the result of reflection upon the subject—that with the views at present entertained by our people on the question of the rights of minorities to representation, it will be better, in the first instance, to have a mixed system. The great mass of our citizens fear that the complete adoption of the abstract principle which the amendment embodies will sacrifice those local interests of which at this time each constituency has a representative in its special candidate, that candidate being compelled to reside in the district. Hence, I have prepared a proposition, although I have not attached it to this bill, providing that when the number of members and senators in the territorial Legislature shall be increased in consequence of the growth of population, the additional senators and members shall be elected by general ticket and by a vote of the whole Territory; and that if, for instance, four persons are to be elected, every citizen may, if he chooses, record his vote four times for a single candidate.

Mr. CHANLER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question in regard to this matter.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I will yield to the gentleman in a few minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I believe in the principle which I have just illustrated. By the method I have stated the minority could have a representation, and it would afford a security which, under our present system, cannot be had, for at present it frequently happens that the majority in legislative assemblies represent a minority of the people. Indeed, since I have been a member of Congress it has sometimes happened that a majority here represented a minority of the people. This could not happen under a just system of apportionment. Local interests would be secured by the election of Representatives for the respective districts, and additional members would be chosen by the vote of the electors of the State at large. If there were ten members to be chosen at large any citizen, instead of voting for ten different candidates, might cast ten votes for one candidate. Thus if the minority concentrated their vote they would be insured a voice in the Legislative Assembly, though they might number but a few thousand men. Favoring the general principle embodied in the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, I have allowed him to submit the proposition in order that he and I might express our respective views, and that the House, if it should so desire, might ingraft the amendment upon the bill. I am very certain, however, that the operation of the gentleman's amendment would not in the Territories be exactly what he desires, but that a mixed system would be better for a section of country so sparsely populated.

I will now yield to my friend from New York, [Mr. CHANLER.]

Mr. CHANLER. My object in seeking the attention of the chairman of the Committee on the Territories at this time was rather to give to gentlemen who have been investigating the election frauds in New York an opportunity to state the pivot on which those frauds revolve. I wish to say that the present system of frauds was inaugurated by the registration law passed, I believe, in 1858, by a Republican Legislature, that law giving to the canvassers vast power of corruption, which power has been abused. They have the control of the voting, and the individual rights of the citizen are utterly lost by the system of registration which gives to the canvassers who make out the returns the power over the whole vote. That is the experience, I believe, of the committee sent by this House to investigate the frauds in New York. I think it is a practical question, having a direct bearing on the institution of a similar system in the Territories, and in that view, in good faith, I ask the gentleman from Ohio to allow me to ask his colleague [Mr. LAWRENCE] to state what his experience has been on that subject in the recent investigation in New York.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I cannot do that just now. I will say to the gentleman that I have no doubt that under this law there are ample opportunities for fraud, but I can tell him that if this principle were adopted, with two men representing the party in the majority in each ward and two representing the party in the minority upon the board of canvassers and of judges of election, an affirmative vote of three being required in each case, either to admit or exclude a voter, either to record his name or to reject it, and to make up a poll-list and transmit it to the authorities; if that were the case, there would be no opportunity for repeating, no opportunity for frauds such as, in my judgment, now occur.

Mr. CHANLER. All I can say to the gentleman, then, is that exactly that line of argument was used in the New York State Legislature for the purpose of establishing the present system. It was intended to reform, but it has failed completely to effect the object. The gentleman is now seeking to establish a similar system with further checks in the Territories. But I believe it will be futile, because his remedy does not reach the disease. I have asked him to listen to those whose experience in that matter might help him, but he refuses to do it. I think he makes a mistake if he wishes to secure votes for the passage of his measure.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the bill does not provide for any registration. The board itself is a registration law. When a voter comes from his gulch or his diggings, ten or twenty miles distant it may be, and presents himself to the board, they will make up their judgment; if he is an elector they will receive his ballot; if not, they will reject it. The very fact that the board is composed of an equal number of men of opposite politics, and that it requires the affirmative vote of one of the opposite party to admit or reject a vote, is a check against fraudulent voting, is a check against raids into counties and towns, and gives all the security which I have been able to devise in framing this law. But the gentleman will note that it is provided in the seventeenth section that the Legislatures of the Territories are authorized and empowered to enforce the provisions of this act by additional and appropriate legislation. And now, sir, I ask for a vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. ROSS. I suggest to the gentleman that his system is very similar to that practiced in New York he had better have the bill referred to the select Committee on the New York Election Frauds, for the purpose of being examined by them.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I cannot yield for any such purpose.

Mr. PHELPS. Will the gentleman yield to me one moment?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Yes, sir.

Mr. PHELPS. I only want to say, in addition to the few remarks I have already made, that the principle embodied in my amendment is nothing new. It has already been introduced by act of the British Parliament in the reform bill passed in August, 1867, under which the recent elections for members of Parliament have been held. The difference, however, in the machinery between the provisions embodied in the English bill and those incorporated in the pending amendment is this: that in the former case the representation of a local minority is secured by limiting the franchise; in the present case by extending the franchise. I beg to call attention to the following section of the English law:

"At a contested election of any county or borough represented by three members, no person shall vote for more than two candidates."

That is the whole of it. Under that section thus limited in districts where three members are to be elected, the right of each voter to vote for two candidates out of the three secures in that way to the minority the right of electing one of the candidates. The system provided in this amendment is equivalent to the English system; but instead of curtailing and abridging the vote it increases it by giving the voter the right to vote as many ballots as there are candidates.

The question was taken on Mr. MULLINS's amendment; and it was agreed to.

The question then recurred on Mr. PHELPS's amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. PHELPS demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The only way to get rid of this matter is to move that the bill and amendments be laid upon the table, and I make that motion.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 70.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, and Mr. HOLMAN, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 73.

So the motion to lay on the table was disagreed to.

The question was taken on Mr. PHELPS's amendment; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 49, nays 116, not voting 57; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Archer, Axtell, Baker, Barnes, Barnum, Beck, Benjamin, Boyden, Boyer, Roderick R. Butler, Chanler, Cook, Dewesse, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Gove, Grover, Hawkins, Heaton, Holman, Hotchkiss, Humphrey, Jenckes, Alexander H. Jones, Thomas L. Jones, Kerr, Knott, Lash, George V. Lawrence, Mallory, Marshall, McCormick, McCullough, Mungen, Newsham, Nicholson, Phelps, Ross, Spalding, Stone, Taber, Taffe, Van Trump, Elihu B. Washburne, Stephen F. Wilson, Woodward, and Young—49.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, James M. Ashley, Bailey, Baldwin, Banks, Beaman, Beatty, Benton, Blaine, Blair, Boutwell, Bowen, Broomall, Buckland, Buckley, Callis, Cary, Reader W. Clark, Sidney Clarke, Clift, Cobb, Coburn, Corley, Cornell, Covode, Cullom, Dawes, Dickey, Dodge, Eggleston, Ela, Thomas D. Eliot, James T. Elliott, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Fields, French, Goss, Gravelly, Harding, Haughey, Higby, Hill, Hopkins, Hunter, Ingersoll, Johnson, Judd, Julian, Kellogg, Kelsey, Kitchen, Kootz, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Loughridge, Marvin, Maynard, McCarthy, McKee, Mercer, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Mullins, Myers, Newcomb, Niblack, Norris, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pettis, Pierce, Pike, Pile, Plants, Poland, Polisy, Price, Prince, Randall, Raum, Robinson, Roots, Sawyer, Schenck, Seefeld, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sturgeaves, Smith, Starkweather, Stevens, Stokes, Stover, Thomas, Tift, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Upson, Van Aernam, Van Aukon, Burt Van Horn, Vidal, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Whittemore, Thomas Williams, William Williams, James F. Wilson, John T. Wilson, and Windom—116.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Ames, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Bingham, Blackburn, Boles, Brownell, Brooks, Burr, Benjamin F. Butler, Calk, Churchill, Delano, Dixon, Dockery, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Edwards, Eldridge, Ferry, Fox, Garfield, Griswold, Haight, Halsey, Hamilton, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Kelley, Ketchum, Ladin, Loan, Logan, Lynch, Morrell, Morrissey, Nunn, Peters, Pomeroy, Prunty, Robertson, Solye, Stewart, Sypher, Taylor, Trowbridge, Twichell, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Wood, and Woodbridge—57.

So the amendment was rejected.

The substitute was adopted.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. CAVANAUGH demanded the yeas and nays, and tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered; and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 61, noes 56.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. No. 1698) to relieve from disabilities

R. W. Best and Samuel F. Phillips, of North Carolina; when the Speaker signed the same.

KANSAS INDIANS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs relative to the destitute condition of the Kansas Indians and the diversion of the school fund from educational purposes to the purchase of supplies; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

HOUSE EMPLOYÉS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the annual report of the Clerk of the House of the list of employés, and stating that they have all been usefully employed, in compliance with the act of May 26, 1842; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF HOUSE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the report of the Clerk of the House of Representatives upon the contingent expenses of the House; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

INSPECTOR GENERAL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the inspector general for an appropriation for one fourth-class clerk in the pending appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ORDNANCE BUREAU.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the chief of ordnance on the insufficiency of the clerical force in that bureau, as provided for in the pending appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BATTALION OF ENGINEERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the chief of engineers, recommending certain legislation to increase the efficiency of the battalion of engineers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

NEW WAR DEPARTMENT BUILDING.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of a board of officers on a new building for the War Department; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHEYENNE AND ARAPAHOE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with an estimate of appropriations required to carry out a treaty with the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

TONNAGE DUTIES IN WEST INDIES.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting correspondence on the subject of tonnage duties on vessels and merchandise in the Spanish West India Islands; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 1261) amendatory of an act entitled "An act relating to habeas corpus, and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases;" when the Speaker signed the same.

RESUMPTION OF SPECIE PAYMENTS.

The SPEAKER stated that the next business in order was the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 240; to provide for the resumption of specie payments, on which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LYNCH] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I wish to call up a motion to reconsider the vote on House bill No. 1041, granting the right of way to the Walla-Walla and Columbia River Railroad Company, and for other purposes; and I ask the gentleman to yield to me for that purpose. The bill not being engrossed, it went upon the table.

Mr. LYNCH. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is that the regular order of business?

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider is privileged when no other business is pending.

SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that the House proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I wish to have the bill to which I have referred passed and sent to the Senate. It was only laid over for engrossment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has the right to take any gentleman off the floor for the purpose of moving to go to the business upon the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly proceeded to the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table.

PAY OF OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER stated the first business upon the Speaker's table to be the following concurrent resolution from the Senate:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
December 15, 1868.

Resolved, That the joint committee appointed at the first session of the present Congress, and continued at the last session, to revise and fix the pay of the officers of the two Houses, be, and they are hereby, reappointed.

Ordered, That Mr. FESSENDEN, Mr. SHERMAN, and Mr. BUCKALEW be the committee on the part of the Senate.

Attest: GEORGE C. GORHAM,
Secretary.

The resolution was concurred in.

The SPEAKER announced that he had appointed as the committee on the part of the House Mr. WOODBRIDGE, Mr. ECKLEY, and Mr. McCULLOUGH.

SUITS IN THE REBEL STATES.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was the amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 1261, amendatory of an act entitled "An act relating to habeas corpus, and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases."

The Senate amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the provisions of an act entitled "An act relating to habeas corpus, and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases," approved March 3, 1863, so far as the same relate to the removal of causes from the State to the Federal courts, be, and the same is hereby, declared to extend to any suit or action at law or prosecution, civil or criminal, which has been or shall be commenced in any State court against the owner or owners of any ship or vessel, or of any railway, or of any line of transportation, firm, or corporation engaged in business as common carriers of goods, wares, or merchandise, for any loss or damage which may have happened to any goods, wares, or merchandise whatever, which shall have been delivered to any such owner or owners of any ship or vessel, or any railway, or of any line of transportation, firm, or corporation engaged in business as common carriers, where such loss or damage shall have been occasioned by the acts of those engaged in hostility to the Government of the United States during the late rebellion, or where such loss or damage shall have been occasioned by any of the forces of the United States, or by any officer in command of such forces: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to affect any contract of insurance for war risks which may have been made with reference to any goods, wares, or merchandise which shall have been so destroyed.

Mr. THOMAS. I move concurrence with the Senate in the amendment which has just been read. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that it will be within the recollection of the House that we passed, by a very large majority, a bill of this character which was much more comprehensive than the proposition of the Senate.

The Senate propose to strike out the whole of the House bill, and to substitute a bill which will have the effect of transferring suits from the State courts to the courts of the United States in cases where goods in charge of a common carrier have been destroyed by the troops of the United States or by troops engaged recently in the rebellion against the Government. It will also be within the recollection of the House that I had read at the Clerk's desk, when this subject was up formerly, more than one letter coming from well-informed and highly intelligent gentlemen of the South to the effect that fair trials could not be had in the State courts where these cases were pending; that jurors, in defiance of the instructions of the judges, in more than one case found damages against these common carriers for the loss of goods which had been destroyed by the common enemy of the country or by the United States forces. The law was clear as laid down in these cases. I do not suppose there is a gentleman who will dispute that declaration on my part, but the prejudice was so great on the part of local claimants against those who were non-residents of the community that there was an entire failure of justice. The amendment of the Senate proposes to transfer the trial of these causes before jurors summoned by an officer of the United States, in whose fidelity we can all have confidence. I do not expect there can be much objection to the proposition from the Senate, and I ask for a vote.

Mr. NIBLACK. I understand the difficulty to be in finding jurors. I ask the gentleman whether the same objection would not apply to the same class of men summoned in the United States courts?

Mr. THOMAS. I supposed the gentleman would see the full force of the remarks I made. When the marshal of the United States, an officer of the whole people of the United States, is to summon jurors to try these cases, we take it for granted that he will select that class who will do justice to all parties, whether resident or non-resident. This is to transfer the selecting power from the local sheriff to an officer of the Government of the United States.

Mr. NIBLACK. I think this but obviates part of the objection, if it is to be referred to the mass of the people.

Mr. THOMAS. I object more particularly to the jurors being selected by the local sheriff, who is himself dependent upon the class from whom the jurors are taken for his position. But sir, this bill is justified upon higher ground. Non-residents under the Constitution of the United States have a right to a trial in courts of the United States in cases where they are concerned.

I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who moved this bill originally and had it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WOODWARD. I rose to ask the gentleman a question, and not to engage in this discussion at all. I wish to know whether the bill from the Senate includes the substance of the provisions of the bill passed by the House?

Mr. THOMAS. I have explained that already, but I see that I will have to occupy more time than I intended. There were three bills before the Judiciary Committee of the House; one offered by myself, one by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and one by the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Roads and Canals. Each one of those bills had its origin in special complaints of the unjust action of jurors in the South; and the Judiciary Committee reported a bill covering the whole ground of those three propositions. The Senate have thought proper to strike out the House bill, to strike out the provisions introduced by myself and the gentleman from Illinois, and to present in lieu of them the bill presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Such I understand to be the state of the case.

Mr. WOODWARD. Mr. Speaker, I wish merely to say that I offered the bill to which the gentleman from Maryland has alluded at the instance of the business agent of the largest express company in this country, who represented to me that they labor under the greatest possible embarrassment for the reason that they cannot get justice done them in the local courts, arising out of the fact that the parties in interest belong to that class from which the jurors are selected. The remedy here provided is to give the marshal of the United States the selection of jurors, and to enlarge the circle from which they are drawn by the whole State or the whole judicial district. That is the philosophy of the amendment. It affords these carrying companies a better opportunity to get justice than they now have under local organizations.

Mr. NIBLACK. The objection I have to this sort of legislation is that it is a practical denial of justice to poor claimants. There is a large class of cases which, under existing laws can now be transferred to the United States courts. When these cases are taken from the State courts to the Federal courts a large majority of the plaintiffs, so far as my observation has gone, are unable to follow their cases to the Federal courts, and it amounts to their being compelled practically to abandon their suits. In most cases where Federal courts are held they are remote from the residences of those who are parties in these suits. It is so in my State, where we have but one district, and where the court is held at the capital. Therefore to compel these parties to follow their cases from the State courts to the Federal courts is, in effect, a practical denial of justice.

Mr. WOODWARD. There is a real evil here which ought to be remedied. These express companies have had their property destroyed, sometimes by rebels and sometimes by our own Army, and where they are sued for the recovery of this property they ought certainly to have the opportunity of having a fair trial. It is proposed to secure this result by enlarging the circle of those from whom the jurors are to be drawn, and by having the jurors drawn by a marshal of the United States instead of by a local sheriff.

Mr. BECK. I now ask the gentleman from Maryland to yield to me.

Mr. THOMAS. How long does the gentleman desire?

Mr. BECK. Five or ten minutes.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky for that length of time.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, I objected to the consideration of this bill when it was first offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. THOMAS] because I thought then and think now that it is an unnecessary and improper interference with the jurisdiction of the courts of the several States, and, whether designedly or not, the tendency of all this class of legislation is to undermine the proper respect and influence which is not only due to but ought to be encouraged toward the State courts. The judicial power of the United States is by the Constitution limited to a very few classes of cases, a controversy between the citizen of a State and a corporation created by the Legislature of that State not being one of them. This power was so limited because the framers of that instrument intended that the courts of the States should be the dispensers of justice in all cases between their own citizens and the corporations of their own creation. The fact that this and kindred powers were reserved to the States was urged by Mr. Hamilton and the other advocates of a strong Federal Government as the surest bulwark against Federal encroachment on the rights and powers of the States. In the sixteenth number of the Federalist Mr. Hamilton says:

"There is one transcendent advantage belonging to the province of State governments which alone suffices to place the matter in a clear and satisfactory light. I mean the ordinary administration of criminal and civil justice. This, of all others, is the most powerful, most universal, and most attractive source of popular obedience and attachment. It is this which, being the immediate and visible guardian of life and property, having its benefits and its terrors in constant activity before the public eye, regulating all those personal interests and familiar concerns to which the sensibility of individuals is more immediately awake, contributes more than any other circumstance to impress upon the minds of the people affection, esteem, and reverence toward the Government. This great current of society, which will diffuse itself almost wholly through the channels of the particular governments, independent of all other causes of influence, would insure them so decided an empire over their respective citizens as to render them at all times a complete counterpoise and not unfrequent dangerous rivals to the power of the Union."

I know, Mr. Speaker, that it has become fashionable here to scoff and deride all attempts to maintain or uphold State rights or State authority, and we are constantly legislating as though it was not only our right but our duty to break down not only the political but the judicial power of the States, reducing them to the same relation toward the Federal Government that the several counties in the States bear to the States themselves. This bill is of that class. The bill introduced in the Senate the other day to establish and maintain, against the will of the States, railroad corporations starting at Washington and ramifying the country in all directions is another, and perhaps the most dangerous yet suggested. The Niagara canal—which I favored till I found it was to be opened and maintained through the State of New York against the will and in spite of the protest of the State—is another; all palpably designed to convert this Union of States, this Republic of coequal sovereignties, into a great, consolidated, centralized despotism, for it can be nothing else when the local power and authority of the several States are overthrown, as we are now endeavoring to do.

And, sir, I confess the strangest thing to me in all this strange transformation of the Government is, that the statesmen of New England should assist in bringing it about; for it seems to me that it must be obvious to the most common comprehension—to any school-boy who can look ten years ahead with the map of the country before him—that population, commerce, and all the great channels of Asiatic trade are marching, moving, and opening up to the westward with a rapidity that astonishes while it convinces the most casual observer that the seat and center of empire will be in the valley of the Mississippi before those of us now in the prime of life are old men. What will protect and preserve the six New England States in their now almost omnipotent position but their rights as States under the Constitution? New York has to-day over a million more population than all six of them. Why should the three and a half millions of New England have twelve Senators in these Halls when the four and a half millions of New York have only two? Is that equality, is that impartial and equal representation? It will be asked, and will New England, when the question is pressed, shield herself under the now contemned claim of State rights and constitutional guarantees? I would say of course not, if I did not know that it makes a great difference whose ox is gored. But it is urged this is no new experiment, no dangerous precedent—it is a mere extension of the principles of former laws on this subject. I do not mean either to discuss or complain of the former legislation in this class of cases; it was, to say the least of it, of doubtful constitutionality. The disturbed condition of the country, the danger of the persecution of individuals while the passions of men were excited by the events of the war, might be pleaded in extenuation, if not in justification, of what would otherwise be unwise legislation; but to take advantage of it now and seek to extend it to mere local corporations—soulless things, the creatures and machinery of the States themselves, whose directors usually change once a year, so as to enable them when sued for negligence or willful misconduct in their own State courts to transfer all proceedings to the Federal courts, situated perhaps hundreds of miles from the venue of the offense charged, is a simple denial of justice except to those who are rich enough to enter into a contest and measure purses with, perhaps, a mammoth corporation. I know and every man in this House knows that the weak, poor, and ignorant are but too often denied justice by their inability to pursue their rights through all the vexations and delays of ordinary legal proceeding against a rich and powerful adversary, even under the most favorable circumstances, and it is unjust legislation that fosters and encourages expensive and protracted litigation, as this bill evidently proposes. This is an age of corporations and monopolies. They are even now controlling courts, Legislatures and Congresses, and their power and influence is increasing every day. I need not instance the influence of such corporations as the New York and Pennsylvania Central roads, the Union Pacific, and others, on the politics as well as the legislation of the country. It is enough to say that they are able to protect themselves in any court, and that we ought not further to deprive the poor and the humble from asserting just claims against them by increasing the delay and cost of litigation.

Mr. THOMAS. I have formed opinions upon the topics which the gentleman from Kentucky seems disposed to bring up for review before the House. I do not think the present the proper occasion for the enunciation of those opinions. I shall, therefore, forbear to make the slightest response whatever. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WOODWARD] desires to say a few words in relation to this bill, and I yield the floor to him for five minutes. I will then call the previous question.

Mr. WOODWARD. Mr. Speaker, if this question was to be decided upon the principles alluded to by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] I sympathize so strongly with him in those political doctrines that I would vote against the bill as heartily as he would; but, sir, I think he has mistaken the occasion to which to apply the principles he has indicated. These transportation companies are made up of citizens of all the States; in point of fact, they carry goods all over the United States, and are common carriers for the whole country. Those composing them reside in different States. Now, under the Constitution of the United States, wherever litigation arises between citizens of different States the Federal courts have jurisdiction. This bill is in exact accordance with the theory of the Constitution, in so far as the common carriers and the parties suing them are citizens of different States, as practically in almost all instances they are. There is, then, no violation of State rights in passing this bill, nor is there any slight upon the State courts.

The complaint is not that the State courts do not administer the law; the difficulty is that jurors in State courts do not administer the facts, and this is a proposition to select jurors upon a somewhat more conservative and safe principle than that which prevails in the States, and that is the whole of the bill. There may be good reasons why it should not pass. I do not know how it would be with Indiana. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. NIBLACK] said, if I understood him correctly, that the State of Indiana is one district, and the Federal courts remote from most suitors. The State of Pennsylvania is divided into two districts, and the Federal courts are accessible to all our people. They ought to be so everywhere. I do not think we should deny justice to men who have lost goods by compelling them to go to the Federal courts. We have compelled citizens to go to the Federal courts to redress their personal wrongs. We have a large number of statutes on our statute-book which authorize the removal of cases from the State to the Federal courts, and no great inconvenience has resulted from such legislation. I do not think the reasons for those statutes are stronger or better than the reasons for passing this bill. I do not think the removal of this class of cases from the State to the Federal courts is any more inconsistent with sound principles and the Constitution than the removal of those other cases. I am sure, from the testimony that I have had, that public convenience and public justice would be greatly promoted by the passage of the bill which the Senate has sent to us; and as at present informed, and without controverting for a moment the principles advanced by the gentleman from Kentucky, I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I will change my purpose and reiterate what I have said, as gentlemen intimate to me that a portion of the House have not heard how very limited and peculiar the provisions of this bill are. The bill is by no means comprehensive. It merely transfers from the State courts to the Federal courts a class of cases growing out of the late war and occurring during the war. As was remarked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WOODWARD,] the stock in these railroad companies engaged as common carriers in the South is owned by citizens all over the Union, principally in the northern and western States, and when the cases come up for trial the local juries in the South are aware of this fact and they lean, perhaps unconsciously to themselves, to the side of their neighbors, and in defiance of well-established principles of law hold these companies responsible for losses which have occurred by the robbing of the express companies by the officers and soldiers of the Army of the United States or by reason of the seizure of articles in transitu by the armed enemies of the Government. Now, I put it to the fairness of the House if it is right to leave our citizens, non-residents of the South, at the mercy of local jurors? I ask the House if it is fair and right that stockholders who have expended large amounts of money for the convenience of the public in the South, by the organization of express companies and railroad companies, shall be held to trial in all cases before local and prejudiced juries? We do not propose to transfer these cases to a foreign jurisdiction. We propose simply to transfer them to a jurisdiction in which we ought all to have confidence. We propose to transfer them to the courts of the United States, where all will meet on common ground, and where, as has been justly remarked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WOODWARD,] the juries are drawn from a larger area and are not supposed to be influenced by those local prejudices and predilections to which I have referred. Under the circumstances, this bill having been fairly presented to the House by gentlemen on both sides, I think I am justified in now calling the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was upon concurring in the amendment of the Senate; and being taken, it was concurred in, upon a division—ayes 108, noes 22.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONTESTED ELECTIONS.

The next business on the Speaker's table were the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 1558, to amend an act entitled "An act to prescribe the mode of obtaining evidences in cases of contested elections," approved February 19, 1851.

The amendments of the Senate were to strike out "register in bankruptcy" and to insert in lieu thereof "notary public" in line one; also in line two, to strike out "any" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "a."

Mr. DAWES. I move that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in, and that a committee of conference be asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER subsequently appointed Mr. DAWES, Mr. McKEE, and Mr. CHANLER the conferees on the part of the House.

DENVER PACIFIC RAILWAY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 570, for a grant of land granting the right of way over the public lands to the Denver Pacific Railway and Telegraph Company, and for other purposes; which was taken up, and read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be read the third time.

Mr. PRICE. The Committee on the Pacific Railroad have had this bill informally under consideration, and have instructed me to have the bill put upon its passage and to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That no subsidy in bonds shall be issued under this act for a greater length of road than fifty-four miles from the present completed terminus of the road. And nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to authorize the said Eastern Division Company to operate or fix the rates of tariff for the said Denver Pacific Railway and Telegraph Company.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would inquire of the Chair if this bill can properly be considered after the resolution passed yesterday on motion of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HORTON?] Does not that resolution preclude the consideration of this bill?

The SPEAKER. That is argument to be addressed to the consideration of the House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. With the consent of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE,] I would like to have some understanding in regard to this bill. There are several gentlemen who desire to speak upon it, and I am of that number. I have given this matter a little attention, and would like to know how long the debate upon it will be permitted to run. I understand the gentleman does not propose to call the previous question now, but will allow the bill to be debated at some length. During the debate I desire to have some time—a half or three quarters of an hour, or perhaps an hour.

Mr. PRICE. If the House is perfectly willing that this debate shall run on for, say, four hours, I shall have no objection. This being the first bill under consideration involving the question of subsidies to railways, either of land or bonds, we may as well have the contest on this bill as upon any other. I presume there will be no objection on the part of the House to let this discussion run for hours, a great many hours probably, until this subject has been fully and fairly discussed by every gentleman on this floor who wishes to be heard upon it. If it be in order to have such an understanding at this time, this is probably the best time to come to an understanding. I will then ask that four hours be given for the discussion of this bill, at such time as may best suit the convenience of the House.

The SPEAKER. Should this bill be now debated until the adjournment of to-day, and the House adjourn upon it, it will come up to-morrow as unfinished business immediately after the reading of the Journal, and there will be no morning hour.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I hope no arrangement will be made by which the morning hour will be interfered with.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Let there be unanimous consent, that if the bill goes over, it shall come up again after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent, that if the House should adjourn upon the pending bill it shall not come up to-morrow till after the morning hour.

Mr. LYNCH. I object.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope my friend from Maine [Mr. LYNCH] will withdraw his objection. His bill is in such a position that we can certainly reach it.

Mr. BARNES. If the gentleman from Maine withdraws his objection I shall be compelled to renew it.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, it will be in the power of the House to-morrow to postpone this bill till after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has ruled heretofore that the gentleman who may be in the possession of the floor when the House meets may, if he chooses, yield for a motion to postpone the pending bill till after the morning hour.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If I should have the floor I will yield for such a motion.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. So will I. Several MEMBERS. So will I. [Laughter.]

Mr. LYNCH. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. WELKER. I renew the objection.

Mr. BARNES. I am unwilling that any bill should have preference over that of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. LYNCH.]

The SPEAKER. If the House should adjourn upon the bill now pending, it will remain the unfinished business, and will in the morning have priority of all other business, including the business of the morning hour.

Mr. BARNES. Upon the suggestion of gentlemen around me, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. WELKER. I will withdraw my objection also if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] will allow me to offer an amendment, that it may be considered and discussed along with the bill.

Mr. PRICE. I have no objection in the world.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that it is ordered by unanimous consent that if this bill be pending at the adjournment it shall not come up to-morrow till after the morning hour.

Mr. WELKER. I offer the following amendment, and ask that it be printed with the bill:

Strike out in section two, line six, after the word "miles" the words, "which point shall be held and construed under existing laws to be at or near Cheyenne Wells in Colorado, and not further west than the meridian of said Wells."

The SPEAKER. This not being an amendment to the pending amendment, it is not in order under the rules; but if there is no objection it will be entertained, and will be ordered to be printed.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to know whether it is in order for me to make a motion that this bill be printed by to-morrow morning. It is a very important bill.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the bill with the amendments which may be pending at the adjournment will be ordered to be printed.

There was no objection.

Mr. PRICE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] that he may offer an amendment.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to amend by adding the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That all lands which may be granted or conveyed under or by virtue of this act or the acts relating to said railroad company, shall be sold only to actual settlers in quantities not exceeding one quarter section to any one person, and at a price not exceeding $2 50 an acre; and the Secretary of the Interior shall have power to prescribe rules and regulations for carrying this section into effect.

The SPEAKER. This amendment, if there be no objection, will be regarded as pending as an amendment to the amendment, and will be ordered to be printed.

There was no objection.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I propose that, by unanimous consent, all gentlemen who desire to offer amendments may send them to the Clerk's desk and have them printed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object.

Mr. PRICE. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. JULIAN,] that he may offer an amendment.

Mr. JULIAN. I move to amend by adding to the first section the following:

Provided, That the lands granted and hereby applied to the Union Pacific railway, eastern division, and to the Denver Pacific railway from Cheyenne to the point of intersection with the Union Pacific railway shall be sold to actual settlers only, in quantities not greater than one hundred and sixty acres to one purchaser, and for a price not exceeding $2 50 per acre.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to allowing this amendment to be offered?

Mr. BOYDEN. I object.

Mr. LOGAN. I have two amendments which I desire to offer to this bill, and which I ask, by unanimous consent, may be considered as pending. I ask the Clerk to read them.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line six, after the word "Cheyenne," section one, the following:

That all lands heretofore granted to aid in the construction of said road, along that portion now unfinished, shall be subject to entry at the Government Land Office at $2 50 per acre, the money to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as a sinking fund for the redemption or purchase of the bonds of said company, so far as the same will pay for or purchase said bonds.

The second amendment is to add as follows:

That instead of an issue of the bonds of the United States the United States shall guaranty the interest on the bond of the said railroad company to the amount of — dollars per mile, and that in the event of said company failing to pay said interest at any time when due, the Government of the United States shall have the right to take possession of the said road, and shall use the same or dispose of it for the protection of the Government and those holding bonds of the same.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. PRICE. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. DELANO. I ask unanimous consent of the House to be permitted to offer an amendment to the last section of this bill in the nature of a proviso so that it may be pending with the other amendments which have been offered.

The Clerk read the proviso, as follows:

Provided, That no subsidy in bonds under this act shall be issued to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, until said company shall furnish evidence to the President of the United States which satisfies him that said company will, within — years from the passage of this act, complete their road by way of Denver, forming a connection with the Union Pacific railroad near Cheyenne by the shortest and most practicable route from the point to which said road is already finished.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I should like to know whether the bill is anywhere in sight after all those amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes it is at the Clerk's desk, and therefore in sight.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, as I have already stated, I have reported this bill from the committee with certain amendments, and I shall ask for the action of the House upon it at the earliest practicable moment. I do not propose myself to consume more than a few moments in its discussion. Now, two years ago, when this Union Pacific railroad, eastern division, asked to diverge from the line it was required to follow by the original charter, I attempted in this House to interpose objection; but the previous question was called and seconded, and I was unable to say one word in opposition to it. The House, to my utter astonishment, suspended the rules by a two-thirds vote, and allowed this road to go where it goes to-day. I am opposed to this bill to-day, and hope that it will not pass; but I am instructed by the committee to which it was referred to report it back to this House, and to move that it be put on its passage. Still, while I report it to the House, and move it be put on its passage, I want it to be distinctly understood that I am opposed to it. I must say, however, in justice to the bill, that there is at least one good feature in it. The men of Denver who are building a connection with the Union Pacific railroad, and doing it with their own money, ask for the grant of lands to the Union Pacific railroad, eastern division, for that purpose, but they do not ask for any subsidy. The item of subsidy in the bill was placed there in the Senate, as I am informed, and not at the suggestion of those interested in the Denver road. It comes in as a sort of "double-ender." A friend near me suggests that we ought to take off one end. If we strike off the subsidy this bill will then secure the construction of one hundred and ten miles of road without a subsidy; but as this bill does grant a subsidy, it is in that respect exceedingly objectionable, and I am, therefore, of the opinion that it ought not to pass.

In compliance with my promise I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, one of my colleagues on the committee.

Mr. COVODE. As the gentleman from Illinois wishes to be heard, I propose to yield to him for that purpose; but before doing so there is a question which I would like to have settled as to who shall control this bill hereafter, whether it shall be its friends or its enemies. The chairman of the committee who has reported the bill has given us full notice that he intends to vote against it. I want to know whether he yields the floor to me unconditionally or whether he still expects to control the bill and to try to defeat it? Is he to carry out the instructions of the committee and endeavor to have the bill passed, or is he to hold on to its control for the purpose of defeating it? That is a question which ought to be settled at once.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will answer the gentleman. By the parliamentary rule a bill should be taken charge of by one of its friends. The Chair was informed that the Committee on the Pacific Railroad had instructed its chairman to take charge of this, and therefore he recognized the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE.] The Chair will add that the bill not having been reported from a committee, when the hour of the gentleman from Iowa expires he surrenders the floor and is not entitled to an additional hour to close debate. The debate, therefore, will go on in alternation as long as the House sees fit to extend it; that is, one speech for and one against the bill alternately. Any gentleman in favor of the bill obtaining the floor can demand the previous question, and any gentleman opposed to it can move to lay it on the table while speaking during his hour.

Mr. PRICE. It is proper and just to myself that I should say that I was aware, as I presume every gentleman on the floor is aware, that a bill is expected to be reported by its friends, and taken charge of and advocated by them. Now, my colleagues on the committee will bear me testimony that I told them they had better place the bill in charge of some other member of the committee, but at two several times on different days the committee said they preferred I should take charge of it, just as I have done, and make my statement just as I have done. There is no member of the committee who will not corroborate my statement.

Mr. COVODE. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] having surrendered the floor, I now take it, and yield to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN.]

Mr. VAN TRUMP. Before the gentleman from Illinois commences, I would like to know how the matter stands. Has the House fixed four hours for debate on this bill?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. VAN TRUMP. Will not the chairman of the committee be entitled to one hour?

The SPEAKER. He will not; he has surrendered the floor entirely.

Mr. VAN TRUMP. Surrendered it to gentlemen outside of the committee?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. VAN TRUMP. As a member of the committee I wish to be heard.

Mr. COVODE. I think the time mentioned was four hours.

The SPEAKER. No time was fixed by the House. This bill is entitled to precedence to the exclusion of all other business, except the morning hour, until disposed of.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I would be very thankful, Mr. Speaker, if I could obtain the attention of members of the House to a few remarks which I wish to submit upon this subject. I know I trespass too often and too long upon its attention, but I do it reluctantly, and I never address the House unless I feel impelled to do it under a sense of public duty.

The consideration of the bill before the House, Mr. Speaker, opens up the whole discussion of the question of land grants and subsidies to build railroads. In the observations I propose to submit it will be impossible for me to analyze the legislation of Congress upon this subject for the past fifteen or eighteen years. I must therefore content myself by simply calling the attention of the House to the fact that nearly one third of the entire public domain has been made over to the control of railroad corporations. The number of acres granted for railroad purposes is estimated at one hundred and eighty-five millions. At the minimum price for the public land, $1 25 an acre, this amounts to more than two hundred and thirty-one million dollars. But this is by no means the real value of the lands granted away. While a very considerable portion of this land may not be really worth the minimum price of the Government, taking it altogether it is worth a great deal more. A great deal of it is worth $2 50 an acre. A less quantity, though a very large quantity, is worth five dollars an acre. Tens of millions are worth ten dollars an acre, and millions are worth from ten to twenty dollars an acre. It is therefore not an overestimate to say that the value of public land voted away by Congress in the last eighteen years has not been less than $500,000,000. And as to the quantity of lands conveyed by these grants I ask the attention of the House to one of the reports of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. He says it "is of empire extent, exceeding in the aggregate by more than five million acres the entire areas of the six New England States added to the surface of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia." He says the grants to the Pacific railway lines alone "are within about a fourth of being twice the united area of England, Scotland, Wales, Ireland, Guernsey, Jersey, the Isle of Man, and the islands of the British seas, and within less than a tenth of being equal to the French empire proper."

This extraordinary statement must startle the American people, if it do not arouse their intensest indignation. And this is in addition to the untold millions of subsidies, to which I shall hereafter refer. When it is contemplated that this empire of the public land goes into the hands of gigantic corporations controlled by men thousands of miles away, who have neither interest nor sympathy with the people in the States and Territories where the land lies, and when you contemplate the vast power of these non-resident landholders, the overshadowing land monopoly created, the evils and oppressions always connected therewith, we must all be filled with amazement at the reckless and shameless legislation of Congress on this subject. I do not myself claim full exemption from blame in this regard, for I voted for some of the earlier bills. But when I saw the use that was being made of these grants, the brazen greed of speculators who obtained possession of them to use for their own interests, regardless of the public interests; when I looked beyond the present and saw looming up in the future the evils, the abuses, the corruptions, and the oppressions which would come out of these grants, my views in regard to the whole policy of land grants were very materially modified. And only a small band of members of this House resisted the passage of the act of July, 1864, amending the original Pacific railroad law—an act which swept away all the rights the Government had reserved to itself in the original bill, which subordinated its prior lien on the road to a railroad company; an act which I have heretofore denounced in this House, and one which will stand out in history as being more infamous than any act ever passed by any legislative body in the annals of the world. I say this deliberately. For under and by virtue of the provisions of that act the report of Jesse L. Williams, esq., the Government director of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, shows the following state of facts: that the entire length of the road will be eleven hundred and ten miles, and that the Government subsidy in bonds for that distance at par amounts to $29,504,000, an average per mile of $26,580. The company's first mortgage bonds are estimated at ninety-two per cent., and would yield $27,148,680. The fund realized by the company from these two sources amounts to $56,647,680, being an average per mile of $51,034, exceeding by $16,056 68 the actual cost of constructing and fully equipping the road, and yielding a profit of more than $17,500,000. And thus it will be seen that this Union Pacific Railroad Company will have, in addition to its vast empire of public land, a railroad eleven hundred and ten miles long, fully equipped, free of cost, and a surplus of $17,750,000 put into the pockets of its directors. With the amount of the people's land voted to this company, with the amount of the people's money voted to this company sufficient to build the road, with the amount of $17,750,000 in addition, generously voted into the already well-gorged pockets of its directors, the rates of fare and freight charged to the people over this road, built by their money, and $17,750,000 thrown in, are oppressive and extortionate. A joint resolution passed this House at the last session, after a severe contest, limiting these rates of fare and freight, but that resolution now, I believe, "sleeps the sleep that knows no waking" in the Senate; and it further may be said that this company has not made a road, as required by law, "equal in all respects to a fully completed first-class railroad;" but, on the other hand, the commissioners appointed by the Interior Department last September to examine into the location, construction, and equipment of the road have reported that it will take $6,489,550 to make it a first-class road.

As to subsidies in bonds which Congress has granted to railroads, the report of the Secretary of the Interior, made on the 30th of November, 1868, shows that bonds to the amount of $44,337,000 had been issued to various railroad companies:

Union Pacific, 820 miles.....	$20,238,000
Central Pacific of California, 380 miles.....	14,764,000
Union Pacific, eastern division, 393 3/4-1000 miles.....	6,303,000
Sioux City and Pacific, 691 miles.....	1,112,000
Western Pacific, 20 miles.....	320,000
Atchison and Pike's Peak, { 100.....	640,000
Central Branch, Union Pacific, { miles.....	960,000
1,798 1/2 miles, nearly.....	$44,337,000

What additional amount is yet to be issued I have no means at hand to determine.

With these remarks on the general subject I now proceed to consider the bill before us. It is a bill with an innocent and harmless title, "for a grant of land, granting the right of way over the public lands to the Denver Pacific Railway and Telegraph Company, and for other purposes." In looking at the face of the bill with this title we are confused and bewildered as to what it really means; and it is only by traveling somewhat out of the record we arrive at its true scope and purpose. The Denver Pacific Railway and Telegraph Company, which is a company incorporated by the territorial Legislature of Colorado, is authorized to connect its road with the Union Pacific railroad at Cheyenne, and the Union Pacific railway, eastern division, at Denver," &c. And here is where the gazelle comes in: "and shall have a uniform gauge, rate of freight and fare, and charge for hauling of cars, and the privileges and immunities, except subsidy in bonds, and be subject to the obligations of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and its branches, and to aid in its construction shall have like grants of land, right of way, with like conditions, limitations, and privileges." Here is the absolute grant of land, right of way, &c., and who can tell the length of the road and the amount of land that the grant will cover? From the wording of this bill no man except an expert can tell. I had the bill submitted to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and he reported that, "assuming the length of road at one hundred and ten miles, it is estimated that the grant will cover not less than one million acres." This estimate excludes lands disposed of and allows for fractional townships." There is therefore a million acres of land granted away by the first section of the bill.

And we now come to the second section, which is disingenuous, dishonest, and intended to deceive. It provides, "that the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, may mortgage that part of its road between the point where its subsidy in bonds shall terminate and Denver City, together with its rolling-stock, to an amount not exceeding $32,000 per mile." We may try to understand that. We understand where that "point" is where the subsidy in bonds terminates; and then the bill goes on to declare, not where the point now is, but where it "shall be held and construed under existing laws to be," to wit, "at or near Cheyenne Wells, in Colorado, and not further west than the meridian of said Wells." Now, what is intended to be accomplished, and what will be accomplished by this indirect and extraordinary wording of this section? By fixing the "point" where the subsidy in bonds shall terminate, at a point not further west than the meridian of Cheyenne Wells, gives an additional subsidy; and how many miles, and how much subsidy per mile, $16,000 or $32,000, who can tell? Even at the lowest rate, $16,000 per mile, and the distance at fifty-two miles, it will be $832,000, and if it should be construed that they will be entitled to $32,000 per mile it will amount to $1,664,000. This is assuming that it is to go in a direct line to Cheyenne Wells. But it will be seen that it is not confined to such direct line, for the section provides that the point shall not be "further west than the meridian of said Wells." This language makes the bill dishonest, for the road may diverge from a straight line, and go North or South, and increase the distance very much without going beyond that meridian, and thus enable the company to get a subsidy for a much greater distance than the straight line would give. If it were a perfectly honest and fair transaction why was it not stated specifically in the bill for how many miles the subsidy should be given and the rate per mile? What is the object of all this indirectness and circumlocution if not intended to deceive Congress?

But laying aside this whole question of the policy of granting lands and subsidies to railroads, let us consider what claim the company now before us seeking legislation has upon Congress. It is the Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, which is the successor of the Leavenworth, Pawnee, and Western Railroad Company, which was chartered by the Border-Ruffian Legislature of Kansas Territory in 1855. Among leading corporators are William H. Russell, of the Floyd-Thompson trust fund defalcation notoriety of $870,000, and Judge Lecompt, of the infamous "Lecompton constitution" notoriety. The company had the power to receive and hold donations of bonds or lands to be given them by any State or the United States. Knowing the immense value of the trust lands of the Delaware tribe of Indians, through which the railroad was to pass, the company procured the making and ratification of an extraordinary treaty in 1860, by which it was provided that the said company should have the exclusive authority to purchase such of their lands as were not reserved and set apart for special objects at a valuation not below the sum of $1 25 per acre. This land was mostly rich timber bottoms, and worth from ten to fifty dollars per acre. Being thus chartered, and having obtained the extraordinary privilege of purchasing the land under the treaty, when in 1862 Congress acted upon the subject of a Pacific railroad this Leavenworth and Pawnee company had influence enough to thrust the following section in the bill to aid the construction of a railroad, approved July 1, 1862. The ninth section of that law provided:

"That the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company of Kansas are hereby authorized to construct a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river, at the mouth of the Kansas river, on the south side thereof, so as to connect with the Pacific railroad of Missouri, to the aforesaid point, on the one hundredth meridian of longitude west from Greenwich, as herein provided, upon the same terms and conditions in all respects as are provided in this act for the construction of the railroad and telegraph line first mentioned, and to meet and connect with the same at the meridian of longitude aforesaid."

Thus it will be observed what was done by one short section of the law for a private railroad corporation, chartered by a border-ruffian Legislature. Granting to the said border-ruffian company the same privileges, lands, and bonds for a certain distance as were granted to the company chartered by Congress, reserving no rights to the United States, not even the privilege of appointing commissioners or directors to look after the interests of the United States, and no such right was had until the passage of the law July 8, 1864. Having become tired of the old border-ruffian name of the corporation—the Leavenworth, Pawnee, and Western Railroad Company—in 1864 Congress changed the name to "Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division." I have no time to go into the extraordinary and disreputable operations of this border-ruffian railroad; the litigation, the wranglings and fights of different rings and companies who were all endeavoring to enrich themselves out of these stupendous grants of the people's lands and money to this railroad corporation; the use of the United States troops to drive off one set of claimants for the benefit of another, and the killing of Hallet, the man at whose instance the troops had been called out. Indeed the question is now pending in the courts, as I understand, as to which is the real company entitled to the congressional subsidy. And it may be well to inquire before we act whether the company that is now lobbying the bill through is not in reality a bogus concern. This House has official knowledge of this dispute through a memorial of a citizen of the United States duly sworn to, and which has been considered by the Committee on the Judiciary of the House. As the committee have determined that the quarrel does not affect the interests of the United States, the whole matter is left to be adjudicated by the courts. It may be added, however, that this memorial charges that the company which this bill is to benefit is a spurious organization, representing possession only, and that forcibly and unlawfully obtained, while the other company represents the real stockholding interest.

But setting aside all question in dispute between the two companies, let us see in what condition the company is which now claims the additional subsidy, and with what face it can come in and demand anything further from Congress. What is the claim of justice or right in the premises? what has this railroad company, which now comes here and asks us for this additional subsidy, already received from the Government? It is a startling exhibit, and I demand that it shall be well considered before this bill passes. In the first place it subordinated the Government mortgage for $6,303,000 to its own mortgage, and in the second place it has received as an actual subsidy in United States bonds the same amount of $6,303,000. Now, how much subsidy has it received in land? It has received in land subsidy twenty miles on each side of the road, alternate sections, making seven million six hundred and eighty thousand acres. Here are the number of acres of land. Now, as to its quality and value I propose to let the company speak through its own advertisement, a copy of which I hold in my hand, and which I beg leave to have read at the Clerk's table, and to which I wish to call particular attention of members of the House:

"The Union Pacific Railway Company, eastern division, are now offering for sale two million acres of land in the most fertile and productive portion of the State of Kansas, comprising some two hundred and fifty thousand acres situated in the valley of the Kaw or Kansas river, known as the Delaware Indian reserve, together with some three hundred thousand acres of congressional lands. The above lands lie east of Fort Riley. The company have also more than a million and a half acres of land for sale west of Fort Riley, in the rich valleys of the Smoky Hill, the Solomon, and Saline rivers. These lands are unsurpassed for fertility. The soil is black loam from two to three feet in depth, and are all convenient to railroad communication, lying for twenty miles on each side of the great highway of travel to the Pacific ocean. In the list of grain and stock-growing States Kansas stands preëminently first. The mildness and evenness of its climate renders stock-raising both easy and remunerative. Cattle graze for eight months of the year, and the extensive prairies afford an unlimited supply of winter provender without the labor of cultivation. Corn-planting may be commenced during the months of April, May, and June. Winter wheat, owing to the absence of frosts, matures in June, and the average yield is thirty bushels per acre. Corn yields from fifty to one hundred bushels per acre, dependent on the manner in which it is worked. Small fruits are grown to great advantage. Peaches, pears, apples, plums, and grapes very rarely fail to produce abundantly. The culture of the grape is easy, and winemaking will in the future be one of the most lucrative pursuits. There is an abundance of pure water for farm and other purposes. The eastern part of the State is particularly well watered, with constant streams. Springs are numerous, and where they are wanting good water can be obtained by digging from fifteen to thirty feet. The valley of the Saline river is rich in salt springs, and several companies are already manufacturing salt for eastern markets.

Timber.—There is an abundant supply of timber in the eastern part of the State, consisting of oak, walnut, hackberry, elm, and hickory, and groves of cottonwood and some hard wood are found along all the streams west of Fort Riley. All native timber grows readily on the prairie wherever the annual fires are prevented. Hedges of Osage orange are easily and successfully cultivated.

Building Materials.—The finest quality of limestone for building purposes is found throughout the State of Kansas, and crops out in the bluffs along the valleys of all the rivers. Sandstone is also found in many places. Timber is supplied by numerous saw-mills in successful operation along the line of the road.

Coal.—A stratum of coal underlies the entire eastern portion of the State, cropping out along the various streams in seams of from eighteen to twenty inches. A vein some six feet thick has been reached by borings at Fort Leavenworth. Veins of greater thickness occur near Fort Scott, and in the Sac and Fox lands. New deposits are constantly being discovered.

This is the description and value of the land which Congress has granted away to this company, given by the company. The character of the climate, its adaptation to grazing, the adaptation of the soil for winter wheat, where the average yield is thirty bushels per acre, and the average yield of corn is from fifty to one hundred bushels per acre, and where the small fruits are grown to advantage, and where the culture of the grape is easy, and where the making of wine, in contempt of the Maine law, is in the future to be "one of the most lucrative pursuits;" and then there is the "abundance of pure water," to say nothing of the rich salt springs, where salt is already being "manufactured for the eastern markets;" and then there is the timber and the building materials and the coal, with the declaration touching the climate of Kansas as being remarkably healthful; where there are no prevailing diseases, and consumption is almost unknown; and where the common schools are endowed with large tracts of land, and the educational facilities are good. The price fixed by the company for these lands is from one to five dollars per acre. Under this statement what should these lands be fairly and justly estimated at? It certainly cannot be deemed extravagant to average them at three dollars per acre, which is the average of the price fixed by the company. At that price, therefore, the value of the land granted to the company would be $23,240,000.

Recapitulation.

United States bonds subsidy.....	$6,303,000
Land subsidy, worth.....	23,240,000
Privilege of subordinating first mortgage bonds.....	6,303,000
Total aid.....	$35,846,000

This amount of $35,846,000 is what this company has received for building a railroad four hundred miles in length, which is represented as being one of the easiest and cheapest ever constructed in America, and which is equal to $89,615 per mile. Putting the cost of the road at the highest possible estimate, $30,000 per mile, it would leave a net profit to the company of $59,615 per mile, which for four hundred miles would give to the company $23,846,000; or, in other words, the company will have its road built by the Government, and the land subsidy, worth between twenty-three and twenty-four million dollars, thrown in.

And now for the further inquiry, what kind of a road did Congress require should be built in return for this magnificent grant? It was to be a road "equal in all respects to a fully completed first-class railroad." Has such a road been built, and if not, has the Government been honest enough and vigilant enough to keep back a sufficient amount of the subsidy to make such a road as the law requires? We have some official information on this subject in a report made in December last to the Secretary of the Interior by General Warren, of the United States Army, and Mr. Blickensderfer, special commissioners appointed by the Secretary of the Interior to examine this road. I have the report of these commissioners in my hand. These commissioners seem to have performed their duties faithfully and fearlessly, and their report is a very interesting one. After some general observations on the location of the road, the commissioners proceed to say:

"In the details of the location there is too much curvature; the grade is generally laid too near the ground, and follows too closely the undulations of the natural surface. A little cutting at the high points and filling at the low ones, slight changes in the location and a little more work, would have easily kept down the grades along the Kaw river to thirty feet per mile, which grade should not have been exceeded on this part of the road. Cheapness of first construction seems to have been the ruling idea, although it seems as if in some places a better road could have been secured without increased expense. What is best to be done to the road depends very much, west of Salina, upon what is to be the future western terminus and destination. If the road is to be extended to form a line reaching to the settlements at the base of the mountains or to be part of a through line to the Pacific, much of its location requires a thorough overhauling, and parts of it probably must be abandoned. To reduce the grades west of Salina to thirty feet per mile in the present location would require a very considerable outlay; but in case the road should ever have a first-class business this reduction is so desirable that it might be well worth examining whether to obtain it the location should not be changed so as to keep in the valley of the Smoky Hill, even at the disadvantage of increasing the distance, or in some other way avoiding the objection to the present line. Had the route been designed originally to reach the valley of the Arkansas, the course of the lower portion of the bend in the Smoky Hill fork appears favorable for so doing, and the attainment of low grades might have not been at any material sacrifice of distance. To determine intelligently all the questions involved in the location west of Salina, on the supposition that the road is to be extended, requires extended surveys and much information not within our reach, and we have, therefore, confined ourselves to a consideration of the road located as it is in making our estimates for completing it. If, however, the western terminus of the road is to remain where it is it might be questionable propriety to expend much upon it, unless it be to reduce the higher grades to sixty feet per mile, and thus make that the ruling grade on this part of the line, and, by slight changes in the location at some points, to reduce the curvature.

"East of Salina, however, no question of western terminus will in any wise affect the location, and changes with a view of improving the grades and alignment may be made with entire confidence that whatever be the ultimate termination of the road the full commercial value of the outlay will be realized. Some very objectionable grades, as high as seventy-two feet per mile, and some unnecessary curves occur on this part of the line, and changes should be made so as to diminish the curvature and secure the easy ruling grade of thirty feet per mile. The line can be shortened two and a half miles opposite Lawrence, and three-fourths of a mile opposite Topeka, by continuing the road direct along the bottom lands and cutting off the detours made to reach the stations opposite these places.

"Road-bed.—The road-bed was designed to be thirteen feet wide on embankments and fifteen feet wide in the cuts, but it often falls short of these dimensions. The embankments are generally too narrow, and will require widening before ballast can be properly supplied, and having mostly been built without leaving any berm this widening will require more labor than would otherwise have been necessary, as the existing ditches will have to be filled up and new ones made. The banks should be increased in width to a minimum of fourteen feet on top, and the cuts to sixteen feet at the bottom. There are on the whole line about seventy-five miles of cuts of different depths.

"Track-laying and ballast.—The track has been laid on the bare road-bed, without having the latter previously prepared by a covering of ballast to receive it. The fastenings are the old style wrought-iron chair, now almost universally discarded for either the fish-joint or for an improved chair of greater strength and bearing surface. On curves the rails were not bent to conform with the curve. With these exceptions the track appears to have been well laid, but from want of ballasting material its surface has not been well maintained. With a few slight exceptions there is no ballast on the road, and from the nature of the material constituting the road-bed full ballast will be required on the whole line, and the material for it is exceedingly scarce, and must in most cases be transported a considerable distance. This will make it expensive to ballast this line, more so than roads in general."

The commissioners then proceed to an estimate of the probable expenditure which will be required to render the four hundred and five miles already built "equal to a fully completed first-class railroad." It is made on the supposition that the road is to be extended and opened for through traffic to the Pacific coast, and exhibits the expenditures required for labor on the four hundred and five miles they examined and for the equipment required to work this part of the line. I omit the details, but give the total amount which the said commissioners find is necessary to make the road "equal to a fully completed first-class railroad," and that amount is $3,652,500, and, as I understand it, there has been no subsidy reserved and the Government has now no means whatever to compel the said company to conform to the requirements of the law touching the construction of its road. And yet we have it proposed here by the provisions of this bill to give a subsidy of nearly one million dollars, if not more than one million six hundred thousand dollars, in addition to the enormous subsidies already granted by Congress and to which I have so fully referred. Can it be possible that anything more is wanted than the facts which have been shown to secure the unanimous rejection of this bill?

I have not gone into the scandals connected with the management of this road; I have not brought to the attention of the House its extortions upon the public through its oppressive rates of fare and freight, its contempt of the rights of the people of Kansas, and the mixing up of its directors with contracts for building the road. I will read to the House a statement which I hold in my hand, made by two well-known and responsible citizens of Lawrence, Kansas, who sign their names to the statement:

"An examination of the contract for the building of the Northern Pacific railway of Kansas shows that the interests of the company have been disregarded. The contractors are required to build a road that will be accepted by the United States commissioners. This road is constructed along the bank of the Kansas river. There is scarcely any excavation or embankment, and but little bridging. The contractors were allowed to select the route subject to the approval of the company's engineer, who was himself interested in the contract. The result is that a circuitous route has been selected, and obstacles have been avoided rather than surmounted.

"The cash cost to the contractors of the two hundred miles next west of Lawrence has been $18,000 per mile, for which the contractors have received as follows, per mile:

First mortgage bonds (gold interest).....	$16,000
Government bonds.....	10,000
Land bonds or income.....	10,000
Stock of the company.....	8,000

"If one asks, why did the directors of the company make such a contract? the answer is this: All the directors have a share in the contract. Three of them belong to the firm of contractors by name, while the others had sufficient sense of shame to be represented by an alias. One of the two 'managing directors' of the corporation is the largest owner in the firm of contractors.

"Of course the interests of the Government have suffered. The contractors have amused fortunes at the expense of the corporation and of the corporation creditors. The road is now bankrupt. Its first mortgage bonds were offered to us last September at eighty-one cents. They have since been bought at seventy cents. The road has been operated in such a way by the contractors or directors that its income has not been sufficient to pay the interest on its first mortgage bonds. These contractors or directors have advanced the money necessary to meet the accruing interest in order to prevent an exposure of their management until they shall have obtained the new subsidies. When these subsidies shall have been secured the first mortgage bondholders will take the road, and the Government security will be gone.

"Every dollar loaned by the United States is in reality given—for the security is worthless—and given to these contractors. Shall the Government loan millions to a company that has no property, no credit, and whose first mortgage is at a discount of one fourth?"

"H. M. SIMPSON,
"S. H. SIMPSON,
"Lawrence, Kansas."

I will detain the House no longer. I should not have taken up as much time as I have upon this bill had it not been for the fact that it is the pioneer bill of the session, and that the House is to determine by its vote on the bill what is to be its policy on the subject of other land grants and subsidies to railroads. If we pass this bill with all its enormities we ignore the demands of the country upon us and give an emphatic sanction to other projects which are lying in wait, involving some two hundred million dollars, to aid in the construction of some ten thousand miles of railroad. Lest this might be considered an exaggerated statement, I beg leave to refer to a resolution of what has been called the "Middle-Men's National Convention," which was recently held in Cincinnati:

"Resolved, That this national convention earnestly urges upon Congress the patriotic duty of granting immediate and adequate aid to perfect our system of Pacific railroads. First, by the extension of the southwestern line of the Kansas branch of the Pacific railroad from its present terminus, on the great plains, nearly seven hundred miles from St. Louis, to a point in New Mexico, on or near the thirty-fifth parallel; the construction of the Atlantic and Pacific railroad from Fort Smith westward through the Indian territory and northern Texas to the said point in New Mexico, at the base of the Rocky mountains; the construction of a line by the Southern Pacific railway of Texas, from Marshall, Texas, by way of the Red river, to a proper point on the Canadian river, to connect with the above road; the construction of a trunk line of railroad through New Mexico, Arizona and southern California, in the general route of the thirty-fifth parallel, to the Pacific; that these roads are demanded in view of the climate, the fertility, and mineral wealth of the country traversed, the protection of settlements in the new Territories, and in view of the commercial necessity of those parts of the United States, the South thereby being put into the best communication with our mineral territories and the Pacific ocean by the proposed extension of their railroad system westward from Memphis, Arkansas, Mississippi, and Louisiana, and the middle and western States being afforded a short connection, through a mild climate, with the Pacific and the mines of southern Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, the northern waters of old Mexico and southern California, by the extension of the lines from Kansas, the construction from Lake Superior to Puget's sound of the Northern Pacific railroad, already chartered by the Government, which will give a short line of connection between the East and the northern Pacific coast. These lines, in connection with the Union Pacific and Central Pacific railroads, will form a complete system of Pacific railroads, all entitled to national aid."

In quoting this resolution I "hold the mirror up to nature" that we may be instructed in our "patriotic duty" of taking advantage of our position as Representatives of the people to vote away their patrimony for the benefit of monster corporations. And I beg leave to advert to an incident in the convention of those patriotic gentlemen in Cincinnati who were graciously pleased to instruct Congress touching its duties. The Associated Press told us that the Western Union Telegraph Company had placed their lines at the disposal of the members of the convention to telegraph to their families during its session. And when a resolution favoring the principle of uniting the telegraph with the postal system, and looking to the greatest reform of the century, and one in which the masses of the people were intensely interested, and which would reduce to them the price of telegraphing at least seventy-five per cent. and still give a revenue to the Government, was introduced, that resolution was voted down by the convention. Two hundred millions for the benefit of corporations, speculators, lobbyists, and adventurers, and a pestiferous monopoly to be perpetuated which is robbing the public of $10,000,000 a year. Was there ever a more cruel sarcasm?

Mr. COVODE obtained the floor, but yielded it to

Mr. CULLOM, who moved that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. ALLISON: A memorial on the improvement of the navigation of Wisconsin and Fox rivers, submitted by the canal convention held at Prairie Du Chien, in the State of Wisconsin, November 10, 1868, and the proceedings of the convention.

By Mr. ARNELL: The petition of J. M. Hickey, of Columbia, Tennessee, for relief from political disabilities.

By Mr. BURLIGH: A memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Dakota Territory, praying for grant of land to the Minnesota and Missouri River Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from the State of Minnesota to the Missouri river at Yankton.

Also, a memorial from the Legislative Assembly of the same Territory, praying for the extension of the Sioux City and Pacific railroad to Yankton, Dakota Territory.

By Mr. CABY: The petition of Samuel Cray, for relief for services as wagon-master during the late war.

By Mr. CLEVER: A memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, asking for Government aid in the construction of the Union Pacific railroad, eastern division.

By Mr. GARFIELD: A petition of citizens of Jefferson, Ohio, for the extension of the piers at Ashtabula harbor.

Also, a petition of citizens of Ashtabula county, Ohio, for a change in the naturalization laws.

By Mr. GRAVELY: The petition of James F. Johnson, of Bedford county, Virginia, for relief from disabilities.

By Mr. JUDD: The memorial of Mrs. Laura Marshall, asking compensation for the services of her grandfather, Thomas Hoyt, in the war of the Revolution.

By Mr. HUMPHREY: The petition of George Parr and others, manufacturers of Buffalo, New York, for a reduction of the duties on foreign steel.

By Mr. JONES, of Kentucky: Memorial and petition of the copper distillers in the sixth district of Kentucky, for the repeal or modification of certain sections of the internal revenue law.

By Mr. MOORE: The petition of masters and owners of Bridgeton, New Jersey, praying for the intervention of Congress to protect all engaged in navigation from illegal exactions by States and municipal corporations.

Also, a petition of senators and members of Assembly of the New Jersey Legislature, representing that by reason of the encroachment of the sea the valuable harbor at Absecon inlet is in great danger of being destroyed, together with valuable property, including the light-house and other Government property.

By Mr. NIBLACK: The petition of Jane Willis, mother of Maxwell Willis, late a private of company F, eleventh regiment of Indiana cavalry volunteers, praying for a pension.

By Mr. O'NEILL: A memorial of Clarissa Huhn, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, for a pension.

By Mr. PAINE: The petition of J. I. Case and others, of Racine, Wisconsin, for certain legislation therein indicated.

By Mr. PHELPS: The petition of Charles D. De Ford & Co. and others, tobacco manufacturers of Baltimore, for such modifications of the tax law as will protect manufactured tobacco from double taxation.

Also, the petition of Gail & Ax and others, to the same effect.

Also, the petition of C. L. Keyworth and others, to the same effect.

Also, the petition of J. Rudolph and others, to the same effect.

By Mr. ROSS: The petition of F. H. Hill, of Virginia, asking a removal of disabilities.

By Mr. SAWYER: The petition of Elijah Durfee, asking for pension for services in the war of 1812.

By Mr. TAFTE: The petition of Smith, Sheldon & Forbes, asking indemnity for property seized and appropriated by the military authorities of Arizona.

By Mr. VAN WYCK: The petition of citizens of Schoharie county, New York, asking that the pension laws be so amended that all pensions shall be allowed from the date the right accrued when application shall be made for the same within seven years from the time said right accrued.

By Mr. WHITTEMORE: The petition of J. E. Hagood, of Pickens Court House, South Carolina, praying for remuneration for services as assistant assessor of internal revenue, of twenty-fourth division, third district of South Carolina.

Also, the petition of Mrs. Nancy Weeks, of Georgia, widow of Francis Weeks, ensign in the revolutionary war, for arrears of pension.

By Mr. WOOD: The remonstrance of merchants and others of Albany, New York, against additional duty on steel.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 20, 1869.

Prayer by Rev. W. C. VAN METER, superintendent of the Howard Mission and Home for Little Wanderers, New York.

The Journal of yesterday was partly read; and, on the motion of Mr. CONKLING, its further reading was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the memorial of the Williston and Arms Manufacturing Company, of Northampton, Massachusetts, praying a specific duty on all tapes, webbings, and bindings made of cotton or linen; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, against any extension of the section of the bankrupt law known as the fifty per cent. provision; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions of the constitutional convention of Texas, in favor of making a treaty with the Indians on the southwestern frontiers of that State; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CONKLING presented a petition of merchants and dealers in distilled spirits in the city of New York, praying certain amendments or modifications of the present internal revenue act relating to distilled spirits; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of merchants of New York, praying for a reduction of the tax on sales of liquors, and for making all taxes on sales of merchandise uniform; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. POMEROY presented a petition of citizens of Iowa, praying that the right of suffrage may be granted to women in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Ohio, praying that in any change or amendment of the Constitution which Congress may propose to extend or regulate suffrage there shall be no distinction between men and women; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Doniphan county, Kansas, praying that in any change or amendment of the Constitution which Congress may propose to extend or regulate suffrage there shall be no distinction between men and women; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying that in any change or amendment of the Constitution which Congress may propose to extend or regulate suffrage there shall be no distinction between men and women; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Rochester, New York, praying that wherever Congress have the right to prescribe the qualifications of electors, especially in the District of Columbia, they will extend to women the right of suffrage equally with men; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented petitions of citizens of Maine, New Jersey, and Massachusetts, praying that in any change or amendment of the Constitution which Congress may propose to extend or regulate suffrage there shall be no distinction between men and women; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SAWYER presented the petition of Cecil C. Neil, surveyor of the port of Charleston, South Carolina, praying that he may be allowed a stated salary instead of fees; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ANTHONY presented resolutions of the Providence Board of Trade, in favor of the bill introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. JENCKES providing for competitive examinations and for appointments to office of only those found qualified for the duties thereof; which was referred to the joint select Committee on Retrenchment.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Kansas, praying that women be granted the right of suffrage; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MORGAN presented a memorial of sugar refiners of Philadelphia, with reasons for a new classification of sugars for tariff purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sugar refiners of Philadelphia asking for a new classification of sugars for tariff purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of citizens of New York, Maine, and Massachusetts, remonstrating against any further increase of the duty on imported steel; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORGAN. I also present the petition of L. G. Tillaston & Co., in which they state that they are manufacturers and deal extensively in telegraphic materials, having one branch of their business in the city of New York and another in the city of Chicago, and are largely interested in the prosperity and success of American manufacturers and mechanics engaged in preparing these materials for the market. They remonstrate against the passage of the bill now pending to give the privilege to import these telegraphic materials free of duty. They ask that that portion of the bill may be stricken out. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE presented resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, against the further extension of the section of the bankrupt law known as the fifty per cent. provision; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, asking the appointment of commissioners to locate a canal around the Falls of Niagara; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Fisk Mills, asking the examination and adoption of his group of statutory representing the "Emancipation of Slavery," for the pediment of the south wing of the Capitol; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. SUMNER presented a remonstrance of citizens of Boston against the Senate resolution directing the Postmaster General to contract with the Commercial Navigation Company for the conveyance of all the United States mails to Europe, and authorizing the company to sub-let the service; which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VICKERS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported a bill (S. No. 808) to arch Tiber creek north of Pennsylvania avenue; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. HARLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 746) relating to judicial proceedings in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Charles Hunter, a captain in the United States Navy, praying pay from the 22d of June, 1863, to 21st of June, 1866, being the time intervening between his dismissal from the service by a court-martial and his being restored to command by act of Congress, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs; which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. THAYER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 809) granting land to aid in the construction of a railroad from Sioux City, Iowa, to Columbus, Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 810) to regulate elections in Washington and Idaho Territories; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 811) to provide for the reduction of the military forces, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 812) to reorganize the grades of general officers of the Army; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROBERTSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 813) to extend the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. THAYER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 814) to incorporate the Cosmopolitan Fire and Marine Insurance Company of Washington, District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF AN AMENDMENT.

Mr. FERRY. I ask leave to present an amendment which I propose to offer to the bill (S. No. 677) to punish the crime of holding office in violation of the fourteenth article of the Constitution, which I move be printed and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Tennessee. I ask to be excused from further service as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia. The motion was agreed to.

CENTRAL BRANCH PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. POMEROY. If the morning business is over, I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 256, the bill which we undertook to take up last night, but the Senate adjourned while the question was pending about taking it up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the title of the bill read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is a bill (S. No. 256) relating to the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President—

Mr. SHERMAN. Do you wish to speak on that question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir; I want to test the question as to whether this bill shall be taken up, or the resolution I referred to last night; and I renew the motion that I made last night to amend this motion by substituting "Senate joint resolution No. 66" for the title of the bill named, in order that the Senate may determine whether they will proceed with the bill referred to by the Senator from Kansas or the joint resolution referred to by me as the only method I have to get the sense of the Senate as to whether they are willing to consider that resolution or not.

Mr. SHERMAN. The question of the order of business has now become a question of primary importance. We have about thirty-five working days of this session left, during which we must go through the ceremonies of counting the votes given in the presidential election. No very important bill of a general character has been acted upon at this session. All the appropriation bills are yet to be disposed of. A constitutional amendment has been submitted to us which, I believe it will be the sense of the Senate, must be disposed of. There are at least two bills from the Committee on Finance to which we think we can reasonably ask the attention of the Senate on account of their importance. There is also a bill from the select committee in regard to railroads on which there ought to be a vote. Now, it does seem to me that for the Senate of the United States to take up this bill which was discussed at the last session at such great length without any conclusion, and to spend a portion of the time of this session on such a measure to promote private interests, not for any grave consideration of public policy or affecting the general interests of the country, is to waste our time, especially in the face of the resolution now made public by the House of Representatives, that no subsidies will be granted by the House. It seems to me that under these circumstances to take up this bill, even if Senators should be in favor of it, would be to waste important time.

I have already given notice, and I intend to present the question to the Senate, that on next Monday I shall move to take up the bill reported by the Committee on Finance in regard to the public debt and the currency; and in the mean time there are quite a number of bills that I know ought to be pressed. The question of the constitutional amendment, it seems to me, ought to be considered and urged at this session. If we intend to pass it it ought to be passed as soon as possible; and I think it is due to the country and due to the Senate that we should for once in the history of the Senate have a vote on the question of whether we shall allow any more railroad facilities to and from the city of Washington. I have been watching from day to day for some time past for any moment of time when it would be in order to move to take up that bill with a view of getting the vote of the Senate on that important question. I do not think it is exactly right that that question, which excites so much interest here in the city of Washington, and so much interest in different parts of the country, should never have reached a vote in the Senate.

I make these general observations to explain the reasons why I shall not vote to take up the bill now referred to, which is a mere bill granting a subsidy to a railroad in the State of Kansas; nor shall I vote to take up at present the resolution proposed by the Senator from Vermont, because it does not present a question of practical legislation which is immediately of pressing importance. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Certainly this private bill ought not to be taken up now.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator is very kind; he will vote for his own bill, but he will not vote for anybody else's!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the question. The first motion made was that of the Senator from Kansas, to take up Senate bill No. 256. The Senator from Vermont moves to amend that motion by substituting for the bill proposed to be taken up another bill.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not think that can be done. As a question of order I think the Senator from Vermont will not press that.

Mr. HOWARD. I make the point of order on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to amend the motion of the Senator from Kansas. It cannot be in order. The two subjects, it seems to me, are not germane.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the opinion of the Chair that a motion to take up a bill is not amendable by moving to take up another bill. The two propositions seem to me to be entirely independent of each other, and really the subject of two independent motions. The case is like that of a motion to refer a bill to a committee. You cannot amend that motion by moving to refer to another committee, but you may make another motion for reference, and then the rule is that the motion first made should be first put. It strikes me that this is in the same nature. The matter is entirely under the control of the Senate. If they refuse to take up this bill they can then pass upon the next named, and so on.

Mr. EDMUNDS. For the purpose of submitting my views upon this subject, and having it settled—I do not care which way it is settled—I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The decision of the Chair being appealed from, the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to repeat what I said a moment ago, that it is entirely immaterial to me personally which way the Senate decide this question, except that it is desirable that we should decide it in conformity to the principles of parliamentary law. We have no rule which declares that amendments to propositions in this body shall be germane, as they have in the House of Representatives. We have never had such a rule. We are, therefore, remitted to the general principles of parliamentary law in order to understand this question, and upon that subject I read from Jefferson's Manual for the information of the Senate:

"If an amendment be proposed inconsistent with one already agreed to it is a fit ground for its rejection by the House, but not within the competence of the Speaker to suppress as if it were against order; for were he permitted to draw questions of consistency within the vortex of order, he might usurp a negative on important modifications, and suppress instead of subserving the legislative will."

"Amendments may be made so as totally to alter the nature of the proposition; and it is a way of getting rid of a proposition, by making it bear a sense different from what it was intended by the movers, so that they vote against it themselves."

It is plain, therefore, upon parliamentary precedent and parliamentary rule, that the amendment which I have submitted is perfectly in order, because not only upon the authority that I have read, but upon the nature and principle of the thing, every proposition prima facie is the subject of amendment, because it is a proposal for the action of the legislative will; and if it is the will of the Legislature to change that proposition into something else before they finally determine it they have the right to do it. The only reason why a motion simply to adjourn is not amendable is the fact that the rules declare that when a motion to adjourn is made no other motion shall be received. When you turn to the express rules of this body—I think I went a little too far in saying a moment ago, if I did, that the express rules were silent on the subject—you find the question of amendment one of the propositions that it is in order to submit:

"When a question is under debate no motion shall be received, but"—

Then it enumerates a list of motions that may be made when a proposition is under debate, and one of those is a motion to amend. Now, the Senator from Kansas submits a question. That question is under debate. It is a question that the rules of the Senate permit to be debated. Therefore the proposition of the Senator from Kansas is within the express letter of the rule, as one of those questions under debate which is susceptible of amendment and change, and it is not a question of order for the Chair to determine what class of amendments shall be received. It is a question, as Jefferson's Manual declares with the utmost propriety, of expediency for the good sense of the body. Therefore, Mr. President, I sincerely believe—and I remember one or two instances when it has been done here, but I do not say it was done on a contest as to whether it was in order or not—I sincerely believe that the motion I have made is strictly within parliamentary law.

Mr. POMEROY. I think the error of the Senator from Vermont lies in this: the principles that he has laid down apply to business before the Senate. This is a question of proceeding to business; and you cannot substitute, for a motion to take up a question or to proceed to business, a motion to proceed to other business. If the amendment of the Senator from Vermont is in order then the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] can amend the amendment, because under our rules we can amend every amendment, if the amendment is in order, and the first vote might be this morning on the question moved by the Senator from Ohio, to proceed with his railroad bill. Yesterday, when this question was up, the Senator from Vermont moved to amend it, and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] moved to amend the amendment. Then the question would not have been on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, but on the amendment moved by the Senator from Nevada.

Let me state the case a little further. If the Chair had entertained the motion of the Senator from Nevada, or should now entertain a motion from the Senator from Ohio to amend the amendment, and that should carry, and then the Senate should adjourn, the next morning the question in order would be the unfinished business; and the unfinished business would be a motion and not business, which is inconsistent with our precedents and our rules. The fact is that this Senate is a law unto itself, and there never has been to my knowledge, during the years I have been here, an instance where, on a motion to take up and proceed to business, you could substitute another by way of amendment. I have never known that done. Some Senators have been here longer than I have, and they can state their experience.

Mr. CONKLING. I inquire of the Senator, if the Senate should adjourn on a simple motion to take up a bill would not the unfinished business, on his argument, be a motion and not business, just the same?

Mr. POMEROY. No, sir; if that was so, the motion would have been in order this morning without my moving it, because we adjourned yesterday on the motion to take up the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Why would it not be unfinished business? Because it would fall? Is that the reason?

Mr. POMEROY. If it falls it is not unfinished business.

Mr. CONKLING. Exactly; and that is the reason.

Mr. POMEROY. If it did not fall it would still be the unfinished business.

Mr. CONKLING. The reason why the motion would not be unfinished business is, that it falls; and why does not the amendment fall with it?

Mr. POMEROY. The reason why it falls is, that it is not business in which the Senate are engaged; it is only a question to proceed to business; and a practical question to proceed to business is not amendable, and if it is not acted upon it falls when the Senate adjourns.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This is not a new question. I recollect its having been raised in the Senate before, and my recollection of it is that it has uniformly been decided as the Chair has now decided it, and for the reason that you cannot pile one motion upon another. There is no business before the Senate. A Senator rises and moves to proceed to particular business. The question must be taken upon that before another Senator can move to substitute a motion that you proceed to other business. The first question decides it. If the Senate refuses to sustain the motion of the Senator from Kansas, then the other motion can be made by the Senator from Vermont; but the Senator from Kansas is entitled to have a vote upon his motion; and these motions, it has been decided always by the practice of the Senate, are not amendable. I do not know about the rules, for really our rules are pretty much the custom of the Senate. The President is aware that we very seldom enforce the rules of this body, such as we have. The principles of courtesy and propriety have usually governed the members of the body, so that there has been no occasion to enforce any of the strict rules which have been adopted and might be enforced in this body. But in regard to this question of precedence in business we have often had controversies, and I think it has uniformly been decided that a motion of this kind was not amendable. I know there have been some such decisions, and I think it is the proper decision.

Mr. SUMNER. It seems to me that the analysis made by the Senator from Kansas is very clear and satisfactory. Indeed, I have never known the case so well stated before. He has brought to it his experience in this body and his peculiar study of the rules, having had occasion to apply them so long in the chair. I cannot add anything to what he has said in the way of reason; but I may contribute my testimony as to the usage of the Senate, and I would say that from the first time I came into this Chamber I have never known such a motion as that of the Senator from Vermont to prevail. I have known it to be made more than once and brought under consideration, but it always fell. I may say, therefore, that the unbroken usage of the Senate is precisely as has been stated and explained so well by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What do you mean by saying that it always fell? That it was disagreed to?

Mr. SUMNER. Either withdrawn or overruled.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What do you mean by "overruled?"

Mr. SUMNER. Overruled by the Chair; withdrawn or overruled. It never prevailed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, this perhaps is as important business as we could be engaged in this morning, and we may as well consider it a little further. The substance of the proposition of the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Massachusetts, two of whose opinions I cannot help thinking are a little colored, unconsciously to themselves, by the deep interest they take in the patriotic duty of giving money to this railroad company, is that a motion to do something cannot be amended because it is a motion. I challenge Senators to produce any parliamentary law or any parliamentary practice which holds any such doctrine, except it be a motion to adjourn, as I have said, when by the express letter of the Senate's rule it is declared that no other motion shall be received to amend or to do anything else.

Now the rules require that when any Senator submits a proposition of any kind any other Senator or the Chair may require that that proposition shall be put in writing. Suppose I had risen when the Senator from Kansas made his motion and said that I desired it to be put in writing, and it had been, and had been read from the Clerk's desk: "Resolved, that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Senate bill of such a number," will Senators rise in their places and say that it is not in order for another Senator to rise and move to strike out certain words in that resolution and insert others? It would be a very extraordinary proposition if it were so—one that was never heard of, I think, in any parliamentary body before; and the whole error in which the honorable Senator from Kansas has fallen, if he has fallen into one, in his own mind is that he supposes because a motion of this kind, being the proposition before the Senate at an adjournment, falls with the adjournment, therefore it is a proposition that cannot be amended. I fail to see the logic of that. If the proposition falls all amendments fall with it, of course. If the proposition stands or is revived, then the amendments stand or are revived with it. But, as I have said, it is of no consequence practically as to this particular question which way the point shall be decided, except that it be decided rightly according to law, and be entered in the Journal as an ultimate decision which shall settle the practice, not only for this question, but for all subsequent questions of the kind. Whichever the Senate choose to do I shall be entirely satisfied with, because I shall suppose that their wisdom will have determined it for good.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will say a word on the question before the Senate. Assuming that there is no rule by which this question can be determined, that it is altogether to be regarded as a matter of practice, then I am clear in the opinion that the proposition made by the Senator from Vermont ought to be rejected. I think it ought to be rejected for the reason that if an amendment such as he has proposed can be entertained it will lead to a great consumption of time, and invariably one proposition will be antagonized with another and the merits of the respective propositions will more or less be discussed upon a mere question to proceed to the consideration of business. I think the better practice would be to allow a proposition to stand or fall on its own merits. If the Senate is disposed to take up a bill, when a motion is made to proceed to its consideration let the Senate determine whether it will or will not adopt the motion; but to allow another proposition to be made as a substitute, and then to allow another to be made, and so pile up one proposition upon another, it seems to me would lead to inextricable confusion and to great consumption of time. In nine cases out of ten, when a proposition like that made by the Senator from Kansas is before the Senate it can be disposed of, and perhaps disposed of upon its merits, before the question can be settled as to whether that or another proposition antagonized against it shall be taken up and considered; and for that reason I shall vote to sustain the decision of the Chair, because I want to see that practice established, if it is not already the settled usage of the Senate.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I think the Chair ought to be sustained in this ruling, for a reason which, I think, has not been stated exactly. The question of every motion to proceed to business is priority, precedence; but if the rule is adopted that such a motion can be amended, then the Senator who keeps his seat instead of the one who gets the floor is most likely to get the precedence, the one who is most sedentary, he who offers the second amendment, will really have the priority, which certainly cannot be the course of business. There is some advantage in having the floor; it has always been considered so; and that advantage is to have the priority of motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

The question being put, was decided in the affirmative.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on taking up the bill mentioned by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, is that question open to discussion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to say, in three minutes or less, what perhaps it is not necessary to remind the Senate of, that the reason why I am opposed to taking up this proposition is that I think we ought in preference to proceed to the consideration of the subject to which I have referred. It is a subject that has been here as long as the Central Branch subject has been. It is one that the people of the country have taken quite as much interest in. It is one that I believe they take an interest in still; one that ought to be acted upon; one that we cannot escape action upon in some form, in my judgment, before we attempt to improve in any large degree the public credit; and therefore I have called the attention of the Senate to this subject in order that I may understand from their action whether they are disposed to consider it or not. If the motion of the Senator from Kansas is not adopted, if I can get the floor I shall move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution to which I have referred.

Mr. FERRY. Mr. President, the resolution of the Senator from Vermont being antagonized to the motion made by the Senator from Kansas, I feel bound by considerations of public duty to vote against taking up the bill proposed by the Senator from Kansas at this time, in order that the grave public necessities which demand the consideration of the Senate upon the resolution of the Senator from Vermont may be properly attended to by this body.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. HOWARD called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. SUMNER. As the question has to be decided by yeas and nays, I desire to say briefly that I am very much in favor of the proposition of the Senator from Vermont. I long for an opportunity to vote for it. I am also in favor of the proposition which was alluded to a moment ago by the Senator from Ohio; but I do not know why, because I am in favor of these propositions, I should vote to displace practically an important measure of equity, much debated in this Chamber, on which most of the Senators, if not all, have already arrived at an opinion; indeed, most have already expressed themselves upon it. I do not see why I should vote practically to displace that when the Senator from Kansas has a motion pending before us to proceed to its consideration. I cannot vote against proceeding with its consideration, much as I desire to proceed to the consideration of the other measure.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think that Senators do not remember the precise circumstances under which the Senator from Vermont, for himself and for the Senator from Kentucky, appeals to the Senate. Some time ago, when we had under consideration a bill to which the Senator from Kentucky desired to offer an amendment, because he wished to express his views on that point, the Senator from Vermont appealed to him to postpone his amendment, and stated that he might move it on the resolution which the Senator from Vermont now desires to take up; and there was a general understanding all over the Senate that if the Senator from Kentucky would yield and allow us to go on with the business we were then anxious to dispose of he should have an opportunity to express himself on that question. It is to give him and to give the Senator from Vermont an opportunity to make their remarks that the Senator from Vermont now appeals to the Senate. I think that the courtesies and the customs of the Senate point directly to the resolution of the Senator from Vermont, and that he and the Senator from Kentucky ought to be allowed to express their views upon it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. A remark fell from the honorable Senator from Connecticut which arrested my attention when he said that this motion is antagonized against some other motion. I do not understand that at all; and the very reason of the rule which has been so well explained by the honorable Senator from Illinois and the honorable Senator from Oregon is that when a motion is made to take up business it is to come up on its own merits, not antagonized with or against any other measure; and that is the reason why you cannot move to amend a motion to take up a bill by proposing to take up some other business and thus produce an antagonism, for to antagonize two measures one against another would prevent a vote on the merits of one.

A remark which fell from the honorable Senator from Rhode Island also arrested my attention somewhat. When he spoke of allowing the Senator from Kentucky to speak upon the important matter to which he referred the question arose in my mind which Senator from Kentucky. If he refers to my honorable friend who now sits in his seat on the left [Mr. DAVIS] I think that Senator from Kentucky is so used to the discussion of parliamentary questions that it is not a matter of importance to him whether he shall obtain the floor to-day or to-morrow or the next day to speak, for he is always at home on the floor whenever he undertakes to speak. Had it been the other Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. McCREERY,] who took his seat in the body but a short time ago, if he had, as a special favor, requested the floor for this occasion, I might, perhaps, as a matter of courtesy to a new Senator coming into the Senate, feel somewhat constrained by the remark of my honorable friend from Rhode Island. But I think on the whole we had better just vote on this question, Will the Senate take up this bill or not? If we desire to do it let us do it; if not, take up something else and proceed with business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to correct a misapprehension that possibly the Senate may have received from what my friend from Rhode Island said. I do not ask the Senate to take up the resolution to which I have referred as a matter of mere courtesy to me, or to refuse to take up the Central Branch bill for that reason. I do not expect to make a dissertation upon the subject of the resolution which has agitated the public. It is not my object. I shall expect, if the Senate is inclined to take it up and consider it at all, to submit a few observations, which, so far as I am capable, will be in the nature of argument rather than in the nature of a set speech. What my friend from Rhode Island has said as to the Senator from Kentucky is correct; that did happen which he has stated.

Now, I wish to say one word in reply to the Senator from Massachusetts. He says that to vote against taking up this railroad proposition is displacing a proposition that is already up, in order to consider another measure that the Senator professes, sincerely I have no doubt, to be in favor of. Have we, then, by the construction of the rules reached the point that the business of the Senate is to be regulated by the accidental circumstance of who catches the eye of the Chair first, and that a motion to take up a bill is as good as a vote to take it up? That is the effect of his proposition. He says it is displacing the business proposed by the Senator from Kansas for us to refuse to take it up as if he had acquired any right to have it taken up or to have it acted upon because he was more fortunate than myself in catching the eye of the Chair. I think that is a proposition which we cannot agree to.

Mr. DAVIS. I am very much obliged to the kindness of honorable Senators for the desire expressed by them that the courtesies of the Senate should be extended to me. I, however, will say that I will not regard it as at all discourteous in the Senate toward me if they take up any business whatever. I am willing to accommodate myself to the disposition and pleasure of the Senate in relation to the public business before the body.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 22, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Cole, Cragin, Doolittle, Drake, Harlan, Howard, Nye, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Pool, Rice, Robertson, Ross, Sawyer, Sumner, Thayer, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, and Wilson—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Anthony, Cattell, Conkling, Davis, Dixon, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Howe, Kellogg, McDonald, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Norton, Sherman, Stewart, Vickers, Warner, Whyte, and Williams—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Buckalew, Cameron,

Gonness, Corbett, Fessenden, Fowler, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, McCreery, Morrill of Maine, Osborn, Patterson of New Hampshire, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Spencer, Sprague, Tipton, Welch, and Yates—22.

So the motion of Mr. POMEROY was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1558) to amend an act entitled "An act to prescribe the mode of obtaining evidence in cases of contested elections," approved February 19, 1851, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and has appointed Mr. H. L. DAWES of Massachusetts, Mr. SAMUEL McKEE of Kentucky, and Mr. J. W. CHANLER of New York, managers at the same on its part.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1624) to preserve the purity of elections in the several Territories of the United States; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

EVIDENCE IN CONTESTED ELECTIONS.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1558) to amend an act entitled "An act to prescribe the mode of obtaining evidence in cases of contested elections," approved February 19, 1851, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and

On motion by Mr. CONKLING, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. CONKLING, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, and Mr. VICKERS.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1624) to preserve the purity of elections in the several Territories of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to the outstanding indebtedness that has been accruing for several years on account of Indian service in California; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, communicating an estimate of an appropriation required to pay the expenses of a special agent to take the census of the North Carolina Cherokees, in accordance with the act of July 27, 1868; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of December 19, 1868, information in reference to the alleged payment of rent for the use of the building known as Libby prison in Richmond, Virginia; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, recommending a repeal of so much of the sixty-first article of war as provides that officers having brevets may take place in courts-martial and on detachments when composed of different corps, according to the rank given them in brevets; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1549) to restrict and regulate the franking privilege; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CHARTERING OF RAILROAD COMPANIES.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the railroad bill, the bill (S. No. 554) to promote commerce among the States, and to cheapen the transportation of the mails and of military and naval stores.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With a view to understand what the Senate desire to do, not that I am unwilling to consider the Senator's bill, which is a new one and has been reported only a little while, I oppose this motion, and venture to express the hope that the Senate will not take up this bill. If they fail to take it up I shall then, if I can get the floor, move to proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 66.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am very willing to give the Senator from Vermont an opportunity to address the Senate upon his proposition; but notice has been given that next week these financial questions will be taken up for consideration, and the honorable Senator then will have an ample opportunity to discuss the merits of his proposition. He can do it upon the bill of the Committee on Finance, or he can do it in the shape of an amendment; and every other gentleman who desires to make a speech upon the finances of the country can then, with great propriety, discuss that question. It seems to me that as we are to take up the whole subject at that time, we had better now proceed with some other business, and let the consideration of all these financial matters go over until next Monday, when probably the bill reported from the Finance Committee will be taken up for consideration by the Senate; and for that reason, without wishing to be understood as expressing any opinion upon the merits of the Senator's proposition, I shall vote against taking up his resolution at this time, and I shall vote in favor of the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand, from his speech, that my friend from Oregon is opposed to the consideration of the question which I have brought to the notice of the Senate as to what public honor and public faith require us to say to our creditors. There would be some force in what he says as to the propriety of considering the measure now, or acting upon it, if we felt sure that the funding bill—if it can be called such—reported from the Committee on Finance, would pass this body and would pass the other House. But from our experience with funding bills reported here we have no such assurance; and therefore if the proposition which I have submitted, and which I supposed had been settled; so far as the will of the people was concerned, in the last election, is one that ought to be adopted; one that public faith and public policy require to be adopted as the very foundation upon which prosperity is to go on—if the funding bill to which it should be added as an amendment should fail, where should we be left? We should be left just where we are now, with the question open for agitation at the next election two years hence, with all the evils which flow from uncertainty as to what the public faith is pledged to do.

But, sir, I do not wish to enter into the merits of the question, and, of course, I ought not to do so in this discussion. I only allude to it so far as to show that if the Senate is disposed to say that the public debt shall be paid in coin, if we are to say it with any certainty of its becoming the action of Congress, we must do it in a separate proposition.

To be sure, if worse comes to worse, it might be offered as an amendment to some other bill; but gentlemen then would say, the Senator himself I have no doubt would say, that that would embarrass the bill; that it was not necessarily connected with the bill; and Senators would be urged to vote against the proposition upon the specious ground that although it might be right in itself it ought not to be entangled with other subjects. I should expect to hear that from the Senator from Ohio, the chairman of the committee. The view might or might not be sound. All I wish to do now is to get the opinion of the Senate whether they are willing to consider a proposition that has been before this body for a twelvemonth, and the substance of which, although considerably short of the point to which it ought to have come, has been reported favorably by the Committee on Finance. That is what I wish to know; and I repeat again, in reply to the Senator from Oregon, that I do not ask the Senate to take up this matter to accommodate me. I ask them to take it up as a duty to their States and to the people, as a matter of preservation to the public faith, as a wise step of public policy which shall precede any new appeal to the creditors of the United States to lend to us again. That is the ground on which I ask action.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Mr. President, I am of opinion that the bill named yesterday by the honorable Senator from Michigan [Mr. HOWARD] ought to be taken up and considered, because it has been very much debated in this body, and I think it is but just to the persons interested that we should settle the question one way or the other. I did not vote, however, to take it up; I did not vote at all, and for the reason that it happened to be antagonized with the resolution of the honorable Senator from Vermont, and I was unwilling to give any vote that by implication might lead to the idea that I was opposed to considering that resolution, which I deem to be of the greatest importance. Had that bill been antagonistic with almost any other question before the Senate I should have voted to take it up for the purpose of having it considered out of a sense of justice to those interested.

Sir, we had an address this morning from the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance, telling us what we had to do at this session, how much was left undone, and how little time we had in which to perfect bills that must be passed before the adjournment of Congress. I concur with the views that he expressed in reference to that matter. I think we ought, as far and as fast as possible, to take up and consider these bills which are essential to carrying on the Government during the next year. But what is the commentary that my honorable friend from Ohio makes upon that statement? It is a motion to take up a wholly new bill, a child of his own, which has at least been brought before the Senate through the agency of a special committee appointed for that purpose, which has never been considered in this body, which involves at least one very important and intricate question of law, and must necessarily lead to prolonged debate in this body and prolonged debate in the other House if it is to pass at all under any circumstances. It is a bill that evidently antagonizes so many people and so many interests that it must of course take up a good deal of time, and then fail of becoming a law at this Congress; for I take it a bill of that kind, new as it is, involving a new principle and antagonizing so many great interests of this country cannot pass except after a prolonged discussion, after much heat and much debate. Under such circumstances to move to take up that bill is, in my mind, exceedingly at war with that which we were told by the honorable Senator himself this morning in reference to the business of this body and the short time left for us to do it.

Under these circumstances, therefore, I cannot vote to take up that bill, and I deem it important, exceedingly important, that the resolution, or the substance of the resolution, submitted by the honorable Senator from Vermont a year ago should be considered by this body. It becomes important because it has been submitted to the body. The question is before the country, and the question is one in which the country is deeply interested; and if we refuse to consider it an inference will be drawn which must necessarily, in my judgment, work great injury in the public mind with reference to the intentions of Congress in relation to our public debt. I believe, then, that the sooner we proceed to act upon it the better. I know that there may be some difference of opinion about it; but it is better that the question should be settled once for all than that it may be known what is our opinion upon that subject.

I have no hesitation in saying that I am in favor of that resolution. I always have been in favor of the resolution. I yield to none of those side schemes which have been brought before Congress in relation to that matter. Let us take up the question and let us know at once and for all time, or at least so far as this Congress is concerned, many of those composing which are members of the next succeeding Congress, what we think and what we design to do, what our opinion is on the subject.

The Committee on Finance have brought in a bill here. I have read it with very much interest and pleasure. As a beginning, it is exceedingly well. It has made a selection from many bills, and made a most judicious selection for the most part. I do not consider that if it becomes a law it will be a panacea for all our currency or financial ills. There are some things in it that I should not agree to. There are some amendments proposed to it and which have been printed that I should have very great doubt about, one especially coming from my honorable friend from New Jersey, [Mr. CATTELL;] but still there is much good in it, and I am willing to aid the honorable Senator from Ohio to take up that bill at the earliest possible day and consider it, because it is a measure that addresses itself to the interests of the country at the present time. But, sir, to take up a bill proposing to build a railroad from here to New York, and from here to Cincinnati, and in other directions, by the General Government, or by a charter given by the General Government, interfering with so many vested interests in this country, seems to me to be wasting time. It may be all right; I do not mean to say a word against it; I do not know but that I shall vote for it when the time comes; but this is no time to consider it; for judging from my own experience in such matters, it is absolutely impossible that it can pass the two branches of Congress and become a law at the present session. I hope, therefore, that we shall not take up that bill, but will take up the resolution of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. SHERMAN. I regret very much that any particular measure is antagonized to this bill, especially after what has been very properly said by the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from New Jersey, that a motion to take up a question ought to be decided on the merits of the bill itself rather than upon the order of business.

Now, let me say with regard to this railroad bill that there is nothing in it that has not passed the House of Representatives at least three times. I am mistaken; there are some amendments made by the committee, but rather of a restrictive character than otherwise. The bill as it now stands upon your table has received the sanction of the House of Representatives at two or three different times. It was reported at the last session by a unanimous vote of the committee of the House. It has been sent to the Senate in one form or another at least three times, and the Senate have never yet approached a vote on the question so important to the local interests of this city and to the people of the United States. I will say to the Senator from Maine that I could have undoubtedly obtained the vote of the Senate at an earlier period of the session on this particular bill but for the absence of his colleague, which I regretted very much. At his request I did not call it up. It seems to me that to postpone it any longer would be simply to defeat the bill. The bill contains no new principle. I know it is an important measure; but if it is passed in the Senate I have no doubt whatever of its passage in the House of Representatives, because the same bill has passed there repeatedly. There is scarcely a doubt but that the bill as it passes here, substantially, will pass the House; so that its passage depends upon the Senate, or upon its being taken up now. We shall be crowded at a later period of the session with public measures.

Now, let me say a word as to the importance of this bill. Surely no man wishes to submit to the legal restriction which compels us to come to this city only by one way; and the more Senators think about the restrictions by which this District is curbed and restricted the more impatient they will become. If there is to be no relief by Congress and we must submit to this, we generally endure what cannot be avoided. But it seems to me that the case is so pressing, so manifest, that Senators will not waste much time in providing the remedy. Instead of voting for the bill lying on the table I would a great deal rather vote for two or three general declaratory resolutions, or a bill in the nature of a general railroad law, authorizing anybody to build a railroad to Washington who desires to do it and will risk the necessary capital. Now, there is a struggle here between bills that propose to take from the Treasury of the United States sums of money in the way of subsidies and public lands and the like to aid in the construction of railroads. Why? Because railroads develop the country. And yet we refuse to consider the proposition to allow people, without cost to the Government, to build railroads from the capital of our country. That is the position in which we are placed.

I trust the Senate will take this bill up and give it such consideration as it deems necessary, and make such amendments as Senators shall agree upon. This is not the child of my fancy, as my friend from Maine seems to say. It is true I introduced the bill; but I claim nothing as original in it. I took the House bill, with some slight modifications, to make it, as I thought, more acceptable to the Senate and more acceptable to my own views, and introduced it. It was not by my desire that a special committee was organized; but it was upon the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CHANDLER;] who said the Committee on Commerce had already considered the subject, and would rather not consider it again on account of their division upon it. Therefore a special committee was organized, and the bill was referred to that committee. We, however, did not press it at the last session, because it was introduced at the close of the session, but we carefully considered the bill. The committee went over its details carefully and made some modifications in it, and reported it back to the Senate. There is nothing new in it; nothing difficult, except the question whether or not the Congress of the United States can authorize the construction of railroads to and from the city of Washington. I trust, therefore, it will be taken up and not be antagonized with any other measure.

One word in regard to the measure proposed to be taken up by the Senator from Vermont. I do not think it is wise at this session of Congress to pass that resolution, or any resolution on that subject. The Committee on Finance instructed me to report a resolution in regard to what we considered our primary duty, to prepare for the resumption of specie payments. I did not propose to call up that resolution simply because if adopted it would have settled nothing definitely; and if the resolution of the Senator from Vermont should be adopted it will settle nothing definitely. I therefore say it is not wise to take up that question. But even that question ought not to embarrass this. If Senators will vote against taking up this proposition because there is some other resolution on the Calendar that they would rather have considered, the result will be that no business will ever be done. When a proposition is made to take up a bill which meets the sense of the majority of the Senate, in my judgment it ought to be taken up, unless there is a present overriding bill of great importance pressing; and I do not think that is the case with the bill of the Senator from Kansas or the resolution of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, I think

since the close of the war and the settlement of the questions necessarily involved in it no measure of such great importance has ever been proposed in this body as the bill of the honorable Senator from Ohio. It involves graver questions, going to the foundations of this Government, than any other—the rights of the States over their own railroad improvements; the powers of this Government over the improvements through the States; whether this Government shall have the power to break down the railroad companies which are organized under the authority of the States; whether if we incorporate companies to build railroads through the States we shall allow them to be taxed by the States. If they are to be taxed, the States can tax them out of existence; and if we are to deny to the States the power to tax them we can break down every railroad company now existing within the States under State authority. I shall not go into a discussion of the merits of these questions, but simply state them. I think the bill involves the question whether we are not about to wipe out of existence the States of this Union, and whether we are not about to establish in this Government absolute and despotic power.

These questions are involved, and this bill certainly cannot come up before the Senate and be brought to a determination without a long and protracted discussion of these great questions. For myself, sir, I view the proposition with alarm, and am not willing to vote even to take it up for consideration, much less shall I be prepared to vote for the principles which are involved in the bill. I grant that under the Constitution of the United States Congress has the power to regulate commerce; but that is to regulate commerce upon the railroads and upon the lines that are already created, not that we have the power to go into the States, opening new railroads and new communications against and without the consent of the States themselves.

But, sir, I shall not go into a discussion of the merits of the bill on the motion to take it up. I simply call attention to these questions to show that it is impossible that the bill can be brought before the Senate without giving rise to a long and protracted discussion, and there is no probability that the Senate will arrive at any determination upon it during the present Congress.

In relation to the other measure which the honorable Senator from Vermont is pressing before the Senate, I do not regard measures as being antagonized against each other on a motion simply to take up; but I do not think it is proper to decide the question whether you shall take up a measure or not by the fact whether a man feels more interest in one measure than in another; for if he allows himself to be governed entirely by that consideration he can never be called upon to vote upon the merits of the proposition. But, sir, that is immaterial. It is a question for the Senate to determine. I am decidedly opposed to the taking up of the bill mentioned by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not like to throw anything in the way of proceeding to a direct vote on this proposition; but if I am to vote against this motion with a view to take up the measure moved by the Senator from Vermont, I should feel embarrassed in proceeding to the consideration of that measure. It seems to be an effort to commit this Government; for what is implied by the very fact that we are called upon to have a new law upon the subject, is that the existing law is not clear and safe. I admired what the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRIMES] said the other day when he declared that he could not vote on a certain proposition because he had a few shares of stock worth fifteen cents on the dollar. Now, what will a Senator do who happens to have a United States bond or a multitude of them? If this is an effort to increase their value, if it is an effort and a determination to put it beyond question that every one of those bonds is to be paid in gold, principal and interest, then I think the Senator who happens to have one of them cannot vote or take any part in it; because if there is any doubt about that subject—I do not say there is—I am satisfied myself a Senator has no right to relieve that doubt in his own behalf. Not only that, the Senator from Ohio proposes now to fund the five-twenties by long bonds, and reduce the interest. Suppose you commit the Government to the payment in gold of the principal and interest.

Mr. MORTON. That is not a part of the bill.

Mr. POMEROY. It is a part of the Senator from Vermont's bill to settle the question so that there shall be no doubt that these bonds are to be paid in gold, principal and interest. Do you suppose a man who has got a six per cent. bond, when you have reenacted over again that it is to be paid in gold, is going to exchange it for a four per cent. one? I do not know much about finance, but I know the difference between four and six per cent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will my friend from Kansas permit me to ask a question?

Mr. POMEROY. I will in a moment. I shall be through in a moment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It related to his going on. I wished to ask him if he considered it in order to discuss the merits of a proposition not yet taken up.

Mr. POMEROY. I am only replying to what the Senator from Vermont said, and the proposition, the merits of which I am discussing, nobody proposes to take up at this time. All I desire to say in closing is, that I do not see how we are called upon now, not having passed any bill to fund our debt at low rates of interest, to commit this Government again, as if there was a doubt about the present law to pay six per cent. unqualifiedly in gold. It is as bad as a measure of finance as would have been a defeat during the rebellion on the battle-field. It will put every bond we have got in such a condition that there will be no question about it, and if there is no question about it you cannot fund them. Keep the question whether they are to be paid in currency or gold open and you can perhaps fund them. But settle that question and I would not give a cent for a funding bill.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I shall feel it my duty to vote against any measure which is in fact antagonized against the resolution of the Senator from Vermont. I remember a year ago, when listening to his very able speech on the subject of this resolution, remarking to a Senator who sits by me that it was a very good speech, but saying at the same time I thought it was a very unnecessary speech, for I did not suppose there was anybody in the Senate who would not vote at once for that resolution. Since that time the substance of that resolution has been discussed before the American people and has been voted upon, and it is now presented to the Senate and we are to determine whether we will consider it or not. We all want to return to specie payments. How are we to do it? By bringing our bonds and our securities up to par. How is that to be done? By making the world believe that we, in good faith, intend to pay them, and that we have the ability to pay them. This resolution does address itself to the point of good faith, and is a most important declaration for this Government to make. These other questions can be considered at another time. One great importance of this measure is that the Senate should act promptly and should give precedence to this resolution above all other business, showing the world what their purpose is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on taking up the bill for consideration.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the title of the bill be read, so that Senators may understand it.

The Chief Clerk read the title, as follows:

A bill (S. No. 554) to promote commerce among the States, and to cheapen transportation of the mails and of military and naval stores.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Cameron, Chandler, Cole, Davis, Drake, Harlan, Howard, Howe, McDonald, Morton, Nye, Osborn, Pool, Rice, Robertson, Ross, Sawyer, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, Warner, Wiley, Williams, and Wilson—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Conkling, Conness, Corbett, Cragin, Dixon, Doolittle, Edwards, Ferry, Fessenden, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, McCreery, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Norton, Pomeroy, Thayer, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Vickers—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Buckalew, Harris, Hendricks, Kellogg, Patterson of New Hampshire, Patterson of Tennessee, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Spencer, Sprague, Tipton, Welch, Whyte, and Yates—15.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, while my personal inclination would impel me to silence, yet a sense of public duty demands that I should discuss, though I trust with laudable brevity, the provisions of the bill now before the Senate. It strikes me as one of the most alarming encroachments of Federal power in these days of rapid consolidation.

The Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] who opened the debate upon the bill, will pardon me if I follow somewhat the line of his argument, transposing the points however so as to examine:

1. The power of Congress to grant such charters.
2. If it has the power, the objections to its exercise.

At the outset may I be permitted to call the attention of the Senate to the extraordinary framework of the bill itself.

Its first section creates a corporation to be known as the "New York and Washington Railway Company," with the usual corporate powers.

Its second section is a letter of attorney from the United States to the said corporation to survey and locate, equip and manage a railway from Washington to New York, over the States of Maryland, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and New Jersey to the Hudson, and in the city of New York to erect a pier and its appurtenances, all of which acts are to be done by the company in the name and behalf of the United States, the constituent of the company.

The third section fixes the capital stock at $10,000,000, designates the mode of taking subscriptions, and authorizes the organization of the company whenever $3,000,000 have been subscribed.

The fourth section prescribes the mode of electing the officers of the company and for forfeiture of stock where installments of the amount subscribed shall not be paid in accordance with the calls of the directors.

The fifth section prevents a consolidation of the proposed road with any now constructed unless by special permission of Congress.

The sixth section regulates the gauge of the road, its construction and outfit, its schedule of time, and the tariff of prices and other matters of minor detail.

The seventh section relates to the crossing of the Susquehanna above tide-water.

The eighth section authorizes it to acquire by lease or purchase such property as may be necessary to accomplish the object of the bill. Its officers and agents are authorized to "enter upon, take possession of, and use all such real estate and property as may be necessary for the construction, maintenance, and operation of said railway and the accommodations requisite and appertaining thereto."

In case of disagreement as to price of such real estate or property the corporation or the owners of the real estate or property so taken must apply by petition to the justice or justices of the supreme court having jurisdiction in the State or locality in which the said real estate or other property may be situated. This justice, or these justices, are authorized to direct the manner of ascertaining the value of the real estate or property and the damages of the owner. The justice is directed to appoint commissioners, freeholders in the State or district, who shall, under his direction, view the premises or property, "take such testimony as they may deem proper," make appraisal, and determine the damages; which they shall report under oath to the justice. This justice has the power to increase or diminish the damages. When he makes his order or decree thereupon the corporation is forthwith declared to be rightfully possessed "in behalf of the United States" of the real estate or property so passed upon, upon the deposit, to the credit of its owner, of the sum so awarded, in such "incorporated moneyed institution as the said justice shall direct." In case the owner of such real estate or other property shall be a married woman, infant, idiot, insane person, or non-resident, the justice is to appoint some competent disinterested person to appear for them.

I trust the Senator from Kansas next me [Mr. POMEROY] will not tamely submit to this slur upon his female suffrage friends, by classing them with idiots and insane persons. This power of condemnation of real estate and property is not to extend to the taking possession of the property of any railway company chartered by any State, except for the purpose of crossing the line of such road.

The ninth section, to which I ask the attention of the Senate and to which I shall presently advert, provides that any person willfully injuring the property of the company shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction "by any court of competent jurisdiction" shall be liable to certain penalties.

The tenth section authorizes roads now constructed under State laws to make connections with the new road, and in the event of such connection compels them to sell through tickets, check through baggage, and give through receipts upon the terms therein set forth. The bill further provides that if any suit at law or in equity, or criminal prosecution, shall be commenced in any State court against the new corporation, or against any person authorized or employed by them for any act done, or omitted to be done, in reference to the construction and use of the railway authorized by the bill, and in which the validity of any franchise conferred by this act is denied, the defendant may remove the said suit into the circuit court of the United States; and it is made the duty of the State court to proceed no further in the cause or prosecution.

The circuit court of the United States, on the other hand, to which said cause shall be removed, is authorized to proceed with it, whatever may be the amount in dispute, the damage claimed, or whatever may be the citizenship of the party or parties, and from the final judgment a writ of error shall lie to the Supreme Court of the United States—another new feature in legislation in regard to the jurisdiction of the United States courts.

The twelfth section declares the road and its bridges, ferries, &c., a national highway and post road, prohibits any tax or transit duty by any State, and requires the tax which may be levied on its property to be the same pro rata as that levied on other roads in the same State.

The thirteenth section provides for reports to the Secretary of the Interior.

The fourteenth section provides for its completion and equipment in two years after the election of the first board of directors.

The fifteenth section makes it a public act, and reserves the right to Congress to repeal or alter the provisions of the law.

The sixteenth section incorporates a similar company, to build a road and telegraph from Washington to Pittsburg, with the title of "The Washington and Northwestern Railroad and Telegraph Company."

The seventeenth section incorporates a like company, to build a road and telegraph from Washington to Cincinnati, under the name of "The Washington and Cincinnati Railroad and Telegraph Company."

The first named corporation is to have a capital stock of $10,000,000, but the two last named seem to have no capital stock at all, at least I find in the bill no apt words to express it. This bill seems to be an omnium-gatherum of all the "air-lines" and "elbow" roads which have been of late years proposed in Congress.

To my mind the passage of such a bill is wholly unwarranted by any clause in the Constitution.

The question here is not as to the power of Congress to make appropriations in favor of internal improvements sanctioned by or constructed under State authority, but whether Congress has the power to construct railroads, canals, or other like works without the consent of the States through which they pass, thus invading the jurisdiction of those States over their own soil. Can such a power be found in the Constitution? If it be there in express words, of course the matter is decided, and no argument ought to be made upon this floor. Is such a power expressed in plain words on the face of that instrument? I maintain that it is not. If not, why was it not so expressed? Because the Convention which framed the Constitution did not intend to give any such power to Congress. So far from it, such power was absolutely refused. In the debates to be found in the Madison Papers, (vol. 3, p. 1576,) we find an account of the efforts then made to incorporate such a power in that instrument:

"Dr. FRANKLIN moved to add after the words 'post roads,' article one, section eight, a power 'to provide for cutting canals where deemed necessary.'

"Mr. WILSON seconded the motion.

"Mr. SHERMAN objected. The expense in such cases will fall on the United States and the benefit accrue to the places where the canals may be cut.

"Mr. WILSON. Instead of being an expense to the United States, they may be made a source of revenue.

"Mr. MADISON suggested an enlargement of the motion into a power to grant charters of incorporation where the interests of the United States might require and the legislative provisions of individual States may be incompetent. His primary object was, however, to secure an easy communication between the States, which the free intercourse now to be opened seemed to call for. The political obstacles being removed, a removal of the natural ones, as far as possible, ought to follow.

"Mr. RANDOLPH seconded the proposition.

"Mr. KING thought the power unnecessary.

"Mr. WILSON. It is necessary to prevent a State from obstructing the general welfare.

"Mr. KING. The States will be prejudiced and divided into parties by it. In Philadelphia and New York it will be referred to the establishment of a bank, which has been a subject of contention in those cities. In other places it will be referred to mercantile monopolies.

"Mr. WILSON mentioned the importance of facilitating by canals the communication with the western settlements.

"The motion being so modified as to admit a distinct question, specified and limited to the case of canals, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and Georgia voted for the proposition; New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, North Carolina, and South Carolina voted 'no.'

"The other part fell, of course, as including the power rejected."

The proposition made by Mr. Madison to give to Congress the power to grant charters of incorporation for the very purposes proposed by this bill failed in the Convention which framed the Constitution, and therefore it was not inserted as a grant from the States to the Federal Government.

Upon this point I will not stop here to refer to the subsequently expressed opinions of Madison or Monroe, but I stand upon the opinion of one whose views I have been ever taught to respect and whose judgment is clear enough light for my guidance. General Jackson, in his Maysville road veto of May 27, 1830, speaking of this power of Congress to invade the sovereignty of the States—and I confine my remarks to that particular branch of this question—said:

"Although frequently and erroneously attempted, the power to this extent has never been exercised by the Government in a single instance. It does not, in my opinion, possess it; and no bill, therefore, which admits it can receive my official sanction."

And, following the clear light of this exposition of the Constitution, President Polk, in his message of December 15, 1847, said:

"This power to make a road or canal, or to dig up the bottom of a river or harbor, implies a right in the soil of the State and a jurisdiction over it for which it would be impossible to find any warrant.

The States were particularly jealous of conceding to the General Government any right of jurisdiction over their soil, and in the Constitution restricted the exclusive legislation of Congress to such places as might be purchased with the consent of the States in which the same shall be for the erection of forts, magazines, dock-yards, and other needful buildings."

"That the United States should be prohibited from purchasing lands within the States without their consent, even for the most essential purposes of national defense, while left at liberty to purchase or seize them for roads, canals, and other improvements of immeasurably less importance, is not to be conceived."

And yet, by the eighth section of this bill, a corporation is authorized to do so in the name of the United States.

But we are not left to the executive department for the interpretation of the powers of Congress, for in the case of the United States vs. Cornell, (2 Mason, 60,) Mr. Justice Story said:

"The purchase of lands by the United States for public purposes within the territorial limits of a State does not of itself oust the jurisdiction or sovereignty of such State over the lands so purchased. It remains until the State has relinquished its authority over the land, either expressly or by necessary implication."

I might amplify the argument by the citation of analogous cases, such as Smith vs. Maryland, 18 Howard, 21; Pollard's Lessee vs. Kagan, 3 Howard, 212; Martin vs. Waddell, 16 Peters, 367; but I will not tax the patience of the Senate by a cumulation of authorities. Suffice it to say that no case can be found decided by a respectable court which is in antagonism to the principle which I have thus broadly laid down.

Now, then, let me turn the attention of the Senate from the principle which I have enunciated to the bill itself. As an illustration, may I ask the attention of Senators to the ninth section, by which certain offenses are declared to be misdemeanors, and the offender is to be tried, and if convicted by a court of competent jurisdiction shall be punished by fine, &c. If such an offense was committed in Maryland will the Senator who prepared the bill—the distinguished Senator from Ohio, I think, disclaimed its paternity—state what court could try such an offender? Could a State court or a court of the United States? I pause for a reply.

The title to the property over which the railway is laid, after it shall have been purchased or condemned, is declared by the eighth section to belong to the corporation chartered by the act, and, as much as the real estate of any other corporation, it remains in the State of Maryland and subject to its jurisdiction. Can this be doubted, or will it be contended that a corporation within the State of Maryland is greater than the State itself? If, then, the jurisdiction over the soil is in the State of Maryland must not the punishment for the offense be prescribed by the laws of Maryland? Had a murder or any other crime been committed within the walls of a banking house of the old United States Bank in Maryland will any lawyer say that any other authority than the State could punish the offender? Can a court of the United States try a man for an offense committed within the body of a county, except in places where the jurisdiction is ceded by the State? Can a State court try a party for an offense made so by special statute of the United States? It were idle to pursue the inquiry further. No lawyer can successfully maintain such a proposition.

I hardly think, therefore, it can be seriously contended that any power in Congress to build roads is to be found expressed in any of the grants of the Constitution; and if there is no such power in the creator, surely none can be claimed for the creature. The power, therefore, not being expressed, but in fact denied by the framers of the Constitution, the advocates of this bill claim that it is incident to an expressed power. Such a proposition is not new. As early as the time of Mr. Monroe the same claim was set up. In his veto of the bill to extend the Cumberland road, just before retiring from the Presidency, he said:

"That the power over the subject of roads and canals was claimed to be incidental, and derived: first, from the right to establish post offices and post roads; second, from the right to declare war; third, to regulate commerce; fourth, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and welfare; fifth, from the power to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution all the powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof; sixth and lastly, from the power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property of the United States. According to my judgment it cannot be derived from either of these powers, nor from all of them united, and in consequence it does not exist."

This bill, as its title declares, is to "promote commerce" among the States; and the authority of Congress to pass such a measure is asserted to be incidental to the power "to regulate commerce."

"A power to be incidental must be exercised for ends which make it a principal or substantive power, independent of the principal power to which it is an incident."

It is not enough that it is regarded by Congress as convenient, or that its exercise would advance the public weal. It must be necessary and proper to the execution of the principal expressed power to which it is an incident, and without which such principal power cannot be carried into effect. "To regulate commerce among the States" gives no warrant to take from a State its right of eminent domain over the soil within its territorial jurisdiction. "To regulate commerce" is not to carry it on. In Gibbons vs. Ogden, (9 Wheaton, 196,) the Supreme Court said "to regulate is to prescribe the rule by which commerce is to be governed." It never meant to make bridges, construct roads, canals, or streets, but it could prescribe the rule by which commerce was to be conducted over them "among the States." The distinction is too clear to need further argument. In the Wheeling bridge case, to which my friend, the Senator from Ohio, casually referred, in which the majority of the court only decided that the power to regulate commerce included the power to determine what shall and what shall not be deemed an obstruction of navigation, Mr. Justice McLean, in his opinion, dissenting from some of the rulings of the court, said:

"If under the commercial power Congress may make bridges over navigable waters it would be difficult to find any limitation of such a power. Turnpike roads, railroads, and canals might on the same principle be built by Congress. And if this be a constitutional power it cannot be restricted or interfered with by any State regulation.

"So extravagant and absorbing a Federal power as this has rarely, if ever, been claimed by any one. It would in a great degree supersede the State governments by the tremendous authority and patronage it would exercise. But if the power be found in the Constitution no principle is perceived by which it can be practically restricted.

"This dilemma leads us to the conclusion that it is not a constitutional power."

But again let me call the attention of the Senate to a like authority on this point. Mr. Justice McLean, in the sixth volume of McLean's Reports, page 524, in the Rock Island bridge case, says:

"Under the commercial power Congress may declare what shall constitute an obstruction or nuisance by a general regulation, and provide for its abatement by indictment or information through the Attorney General; but neither under this power to establish post roads can Congress construct a bridge over navigable water. This belongs to the local or State authority within which the work is to be done. But this authority must be so exercised as not materially to conflict with the paramount power to regulate commerce. If Congress can construct a bridge over a navigable water, under the power to regulate commerce, or to establish post roads, on the same principle it may make turnpike or railroads throughout the country. The latter power has generally been considered as exhausted in the designation of roads on which the mails are to be transported, and the former by the regulation of commerce upon the high seas and upon our rivers and lakes. If these limitations are to be departed from there can be no others except the discretion of Congress."

He should have said "the want of discretion" in Congress.

Congress has power to regulate all bridges over navigable streams, remove offending bridges, and punish those who shall erect them thereafter; and should a State, or a corporation created by the State, obstruct the passage of citizens of one State over the soil of another State, or the transportation of his goods, in like manner Congress might have power, by general regulation, to prevent such obstruction.

"Whatever subjects of this power [to regulate com-mere] are in their nature national, or admit of one uniform system or plan of regulation, may justly be said to be of such a nature as to require exclusive power by Congress."—12 Howard, p. 239.

Whatever doubts I may have entertained anterior to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Crandall vs. The State of Nevada, reported in 6 Wallace, entertaining the highest respect for the legal tribunals of the country, and considering that that is this power to determine all constitutional questions, I should bow, even if I held contrary opinions, with the utmost respect to it.

I say, further, if two great railways, meeting each other at the lines of the respective States by which they are chartered, and which connect, should be established as post roads, and refuse to make reasonable and proper connections, and thus furnish an obstruction to commerce among the States, I am not prepared to say that there is not a power lodged in Congress to remedy such an evil. But that would be a power incidental to the principal power to regulate commerce, and is like the power to regulate the transportation of goods over bridges, which are connecting parts of turnpikes, streets, and railways, and are means of commercial intercourse, as well as navigable rivers, and as such under the control of Congress. I turn from these authorities and these executive expositions of this power in Congress to find some case, or some dictum even, from those high judicial officers who have thrown light upon the jurisprudence of our country, laying down a doctrine in opposition to this, but I look in vain. Not a single case can be found maintaining the power of Congress to construct a railroad in a State without its concurrence, either expressed or implied. If the Senator from Ohio could have laid his hand upon one he would not have allowed the opportunity to have passed. Without the multiplication of words, for I do not wish to trespass unnecessarily upon the time of the Senate, I affirm that no such power exists in Congress under the Constitution.

But, passing to the next proposition which I proposed in the argument I have tried to make, should such power exist in Congress as claimed in this bill I should protest against its passage upon the ground of its injurious effect upon the country. Every man knows the corrupting influences which surround legislative bodies in the interest of corporations and charter seekers, the former striving for ampler powers and privileges and greater immunities from their common law liabilities, and the latter seeking to obtain charters, to be bought up by rival and existing companies. Once establish Congress as a corporation manufacturer and you will transfer to the Rotunda of the Capitol the lobbies of thirty-four States, (I believe that is the number now;) no, thirty-three and a half, for only half of Georgia is in. The third house will outnumber both Houses of Congress put together. Thousands of miles of railways, intersecting the country at all points, and woven over it like a spider's web, costing millions of money, have been built by private enterprise under State charters and fostered by State legislation. The vast capital so expended has, in a great measure, come from foreign lands, and after lying idle for years is now beginning to yield revenues to the holders of these investments. Let it be understood that after a private company, incorporated by a State, has raised capital from Europe and opened up new territory, and brought to the farmer a market for his grain, and is about to realize the profit of its enterprise, Congress shall intervene and grant charters for parallel roads, without responsibility to the States, and you paralyze the whole railroad energy of this country. No more foreign capital will seek investment in railroad securities here. Under the present system, wherever railroads have been needed, charters for them have always been granted by the States, as far as my experience goes, with a single exception. I concur with the Senator from Ohio in his advocacy of competing lines. Competition in railways, as in everything else, ought to be encouraged. Wherever capital and enterprise are willing to open the country every legislative facility ought to be granted. No monopolies ought to be permitted, whether in railways or copper mines or any other branch of industry. They are odious to republicans, and are calculated to build up the meanest of all aristocracies—the aristocracy of money.

But, Mr. President, I contend that there is no necessity for any such new roads as proposed by this bill. The State of Maryland has been foremost in the promotion of works of improvement. It brought its treasury to the verge of bankruptcy in advancing and pushing forward such works, and without selfishness or disposition to deprive the adjacent States and territory of their benefit. Of all, the people of Washington have the least cause to complain. The Chesapeake and Ohio canal, on which Maryland has sunk in principal and interest more than fifteen millions of money, bears upon its waters from the coal and mineral regions of that State their richest treasures into the distant cities. It has expended more than twenty million dollars on which it does not receive one per cent. interest.

It has been charged by the Senator from Ohio with fostering the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to the exclusion of all rival interests. It is denounced as guarding a monopoly, and refusing to open its territory to rival competition. The accusation is unjust, and made, I am sure, from want of information, and not intentionally. Maryland has been generous to such improvements on all sides. She has spent at least $3,000,000 of her money on the Northern Central railway, and upon the Tide-Water canal at least half as much. She has granted railway charters without number, both on the eastern and western shores. She has done it, on the one hand, while she saw the southern travel by way of Norfolk and Annapolis diverted from her great city; and, on the other, through Hagerstown to the Northwest. The branch road to Washington enables western travelers to pass to the capital without even seeing Baltimore.

At the session of her Legislature last winter, out of four hundred and seventy laws passed nearly fifty were acts of incorporation for new railways, amendments to old charters, or appropriations in aid of railroad construction. The same Legislature appropriated $500,000 for the building of railroads in Prince George's, St. Mary's, and Charles counties, adjoining this District. It provided for a commission, now at work, to survey a route for a railroad from some point in Prince George's county to the waters of the Chesapeake, at Point Lookout. At the previous session its Legislature refused to make any change in the charter of the Baltimore and Potomac railroad, to which I shall refer directly, which should prevent a direct connection over its line between Baltimore and Washington. That she may have erred in some of her legislation I do not pretend to deny; but her good far outweighs her evil.

The capitation tax on the Washington branch of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad is, in my judgment, whether constitutional or not, unfounded in justice or in policy. It exacts as well from her own citizens as from strangers an unnecessary and burdensome toll. Its fruits are but a gain to the coffers of the State of some seventy-five to ninety thousand dollars per annum on an average, and it is no compensation for the grievance it inflicts upon citizens of other States in transit over her territory. It ought to be, and I trust it will be, repealed by the Legislature at its next session, for I do not think it has now the popular sanction; and this is manifest by the grant of the charters of the Metropolitan road and the Baltimore and Potomac road without the imposition of any such tax.

Another cause of complaint stated by the Senator who reported this bill is the failure in close connections between the Baltimore and Ohio railroad and the road running northward to Harrisburg. It is a serious inconvenience, and ought to have a remedy, and if any constitutional mode can be suggested for the benefit of the traveler I shall be most ready to support it. I am no apologist for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, nor of any other corporation. I am for holding them to the strictest accountability and keeping them to letter of their charters; but I have an innate sense of justice, and believe in the maxim, "Audi alteram partem," and before I condemn I like to hear both sides. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company deny that the fault of this non-checking of baggage and of quick transit through Baltimore city can be laid at its door. I find that the president of that company, nearly two years ago, addressed to my predecessor in the Senate the following letter:

BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAILROAD,
PRESIDENT'S OFFICE,
BALTIMORE, March 29, 1867.

MY DEAR SIR: I am obliged for your esteemed favor of 27th instant.

Baggage is checked at our Washington station for Philadelphia, New York, &c., and for all points in the West by our main stem.

The complaints to which you refer are doubtless in reference to travel via Harrisburg and the Pennsylvania road, as by all other lines the arrangements are as perfect as practicable.

You are aware that the Pennsylvania company is not merely a rival but a hostile interest. The Baltimore and Ohio Company can furnish no through checks for baggage by the Northern Central road, which is controlled by the Pennsylvania road, except arrangements be made with the officers of the latter company. This company has for years been entirely willing to make the requisite arrangements to check baggage through from Washington to all points desired by the Northern Central and Pennsylvania roads, making but one proviso, which is usual under similar circumstances, namely, that if tickets are sold and baggage is checked at our Washington station the Pennsylvania road shall cease to maintain separate and antagonistic offices in Washington. This reasonable and proper arrangement has not been accepted, although I have repeatedly called the attention of the leading directors of the Northern Central road to its necessity and propriety.

I fully accord that the public should be accommodated upon this subject, and I am equally satisfied that the Northern Central Company would cordially cooperate, if not adversely controlled by the Pennsylvania company. It would, of course, be useless to cause this company to maintain additional rival offices to meet the needless expensiveness of the present system in Washington, if tickets for all points, by either road, at the option of the passenger, could be obtained at our Washington station.

As the fault of the failure to effect the proper arrangements lies entirely with the Pennsylvania road, I will be obliged if you will make the requisite explanations to such parties as are interested.

I am, with very great regard, very truly, yours,
J. W. GARRETT, President.

To Hon. REVERDY JOHNSON.

The Senate can judge whether this company is justly subject to animadversion or not. That the Washington branch should earn $30,000 per mile during 1865, at the close of the war, when large armies and supplies were to be moved, seemed to the Senator from Ohio to be enormous; but when I look at the report of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, which I hold in my hand, I find its revenue for the same period was equal to $48,768 62 per mile; and I believe that for the same period almost all the important lines of the country exceeded the sum, which has been pronounced extravagant. I think if the report of 1866 had been examined the Washington branch would have showed earnings equal to only $15,000 per mile. At all events, I know that the stockholders have not received on an average from this road since its origin more than nine per cent. in annual dividends.

But I will not detain the Senate by these minor points of the discussion.

If greater facilities are needed for travel northward and northwesterly from this city Maryland has already provided the means for its accomplishment. As far back as 1826 Maryland chartered a company to build the Metropolitan branch road, which but for the war would have long since been completed. It has been delayed since its close by litigations arising out of the condemnation of the land, but it is now in progress and under assurance of its speedy completion. By it the distance from the Point of Rocks will be reduced some fifty miles, and in connection with the Pittsburg and Connellsville road, now being rapidly constructed, the distance to Pittsburg will be less.

ened by seventy-four miles and to Cincinnati by one hundred and twenty-eight miles, as compared with the shortest lines to Washington by the Northern Central road.

Again, in speaking of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company the Senator from Ohio says:

"Its rivals are not allowed by the State of Maryland to compete here. Washington is excluded from the benefit of this healthy competition."
* * "It is a monopoly in that it prevents all rival lines, and indeed every means of railroad transit from the residence of three fourths of the people of the United States to Washington, except over their road. Capitalists and rival interests would have built other railroads to Washington long since, and the only obstruction is this railroad, which has thus far defeated all competition and has monopolized on its own terms the railroad transit to Washington."

Now, the honorable Senator entirely ignores the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, of which I have spoken.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. WHYTE. With great pleasure.

Mr. SHERMAN. My friend must be aware that the Baltimore and Potomac Company was not believed to have the power to come to Washington; and it was by the energy and persistence and continued labor of my colleague, [Mr. WADE,] for days and days here in the Senate, that authority was finally given to make a connection with that road in order to get to Baltimore; and that was opposed with great violence, to my surprise, by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company. My colleague availed himself of an old charter of Maryland for a road from Baltimore down to Point Lookout or some other place in the lower part of Maryland to authorize a connection with that road, and also availed himself of an authority in that charter to run a branch twenty miles to get this competition of which the Senator speaks.

Mr. WHYTE. I grant it and I accept it. I am speaking of to-day; I am answering a proposition of to-day, not of the past; and I honor the distinguished President of this body that he saw there was the proper mode of making a rival line to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad line. It showed his wisdom, and I would have voted with him and supported him if I had had the honor to hold a seat on this floor at that time. I am speaking of to-day, not of yesterday. I say you ignore the fact that you have given power to this Baltimore and Potomac road to enter the District of Columbia, and Maryland has given it power to move from the District of Columbia across its own territory to Baltimore, and to connect with the Northern Central railway or any other railroad, thus making a rival road to the Baltimore and Ohio road. I am defending my State from the imputation that she has guarded and protected a monopoly. I do not belong to the fossils of the past; I am speaking of the men of to-day. I reiterate that when my distinguished friend from Ohio spoke in the Senate Chamber, a few days ago, he entirely ignored the Baltimore and Potomac road, a rival interest incorporated by the State of Maryland, without the imposition of any capitation tax, ably presided over by the newly-elected Governor of the State, and whose road is now being rapidly constructed. That road is guided and governed by the men of 1869 and not of 1832. It is no myth, but a living thing. Its advantages have been well known, and the subscription books to its capital stock have been long wide open for the rich capitalists of Washington to embark their fortunes in this much-needed and long-sighed-for artery to the heart of the nation. To show how they have responded to the munificent offer of that company I beg the patience of the Senate while I read a letter from its worthy president:

FAIR VIEW, COLLINGTON POST OFFICE,
PRINCE GEORGE COUNTY, MARYLAND,
December 31, 1868.

MY DEAR SIR: I desire to repeat to you in writing what I said orally a few days ago in Baltimore, that the "Baltimore and Potomac railroad," of which I am the president, will, I think, beyond doubt be completed from Baltimore to Washington by January, 1870.

Nearly every mile of this part of the road is being now rapidly graded, some of the sections have been completed, and the grading of those not yet under way will be immediately commenced.

Our contracts have just been made for cross-ties. We are about to commence the bridging, which for the present will be only of a temporary character, to enable us to get our trains immediately to running, and thus enable us also to transport by rail the heavy material for constructing the bridges of a permanent nature.

The road will be, as you are aware, in all respects a first quality one, with its northern and western connections made by steam, and without change of cars at Baltimore. The route will be rather around than through Baltimore to our depot on the northern side of that city. The time between the cities of Baltimore and Washington will not be over one hour, and every facility and comfort will be offered both to through and local travel.

It may not be generally known to members of Congress that this new road is exempt from the "capitation tax" which is imposed upon the present Baltimore and Washington road, and that the connection which the SHERMAN bill proposes to make with the Pennsylvania Central is already made with it by the Baltimore and Potomac through the Northern Central.

The writer refers to this bill by its popular name as "the SHERMAN bill."

The Baltimore and Potomac road completed, as it surely will be in a year, we have two first class and competing roads between Washington and Baltimore, each one connecting with rival roads in the latter city to the West, and also giving the same choice of routes to New York and Philadelphia via Harrisburg which the SHERMAN bill proposes.

What, then, can possibly be the necessity or the motive for the incorporation of this National Road North? If it is to allow the investment of Washington capital it has an opportunity already offered it in the Baltimore and Potomac, in which, notwithstanding Washington is so greatly interested, yet not one dollar has been invested by her citizens, or one share of the stock owned by them.

Recognizing that the facilities or accommodations of trade and travel do not require a third road from Washington and Baltimore, (the granting of the charter for which might have only the effect to embarrass the new road, which is being built against the opposition of already powerful interests)—

Governor Bowie has reference to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, with which his road is in antagonism—

I have written you thus fully in the confident belief that you will be able to successfully impress those views upon Congress.

Only by reading the views themselves, as presented by the Governor to Congress:

You are at liberty to make any use you think proper of this letter, even to publishing it if necessary. I am, with high regard, your friend, truly and respectfully,
ODEN BOWIE.

HON. WILLIAM PINKNEY WHYTE,
United States Senate.

I have here a map of this road, showing its courses, and giving, with the other roads, a view of the routes, which will all be shortly opened northward from Washington; and if Senators will examine it I do not think any candid mind will favor the exercise of at least doubtful constitutional powers in the granting of the charters proposed by this bill.

It is said that necessity knows no law; but in this case there is neither law nor necessity for the passage of this bill.

I am sure the honorable Senator from Ohio will confess that these two enterprises now undertaken and being rapidly carried through—the Metropolitan branch road and the Baltimore and Potomac road—will be sufficient for the wants of the District, and ought to be satisfactory to all parties concerned.

In May, 1866, as I see by the Congressional Globe of that date, page 2375, that Senator then said:

"If the State of Maryland will go one step further, and authorize the construction of a railroad from Washington directly toward New York, and also authorize the construction of a railroad from Harper's Ferry or from Martinsburg across the State of Maryland in that region of country, I think it will do all that any State could reasonably demand of it."

"Mr. CRESWELL. To what point does the gentleman desire a road?"

"Mr. SHERMAN. From here to the Point of Rocks."

These reasonable expectations are being now fulfilled. Then why shall you invade the soil of Maryland, and grant charters to corporations to break down the interests of her citizens and of men in England who are largely interested, having given their money to make the pioneer road across the Alleghanies. The Metropolitan road is making its way to the Point of Rocks, and the Baltimore and Potomac road will be finished by January 1, 1870, with its connections, either around the western side of Baltimore city with the track of the Northern Central railroad, or, crossing the river at Locust Point, will pass to the east of Baltimore, and make its junction with the Baltimore, Wilmington, and Philadelphia railroad.

Here, then, will be "the consummation devoutly to be wished;" and I appeal to Senators if any more can be reasonably demanded? Without wearying or fatiguing the Senate by a further discussion, I appeal to Senators, to their candor and to their justice—Maryland having broken all the bonds of the past, if there were bonds in the past; Maryland having opened wide its doors for capital and for enterprise to build these roads—whether now the power of Congress shall be extended over that State to destroy all the capital and all the interests created there of which I have spoken, and to build up a monopoly in railroads between this capital and the city of New York and the other points named in the bill?

Mr. POMEROY. We have been unable for some time past to do any business in executive session, because our executive sessions have been at such a late period in the day. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope we shall go on with this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us go on with this bill. Nothing in executive session is more pressing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

COMMITTEE ON RETRENCHMENT.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With the permission of the Chair and of the Senator from Kansas and of the Senate, I wish to ask leave, in behalf of the Committee on Retrenchment, to sit during the sessions of the Senate. Some work in the way of detail that we are obliged to do in order to complete our Treasury investigations requires more attention than can be given in the morning, and I should like the privilege of continuing our sessions during the sittings of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the motion of the Senator from Vermont will be entertained. The question is on granting to the Committee on Retrenchment leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HOWARD. If it be in order I move to take up a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a motion pending that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. POMEROY called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the Senate will go on with the discussion of the railroad bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CAMERON. I trust we shall go into executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is not debatable.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 29, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Buckalew, Cameron, Cat-tell, Corbett, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fowler, Gimms, Henderson, Howe, McCreery, McDonald, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norton, Nye, Osborn, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Rice, Ross, Sawyer, Spencer, Van Winkle, Vickers, Whyte, and Willey—29.
NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Chandler, Conkling, Drake, Ferry, Harris, Howard, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson of New Hampshire, Pool, Robertson, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, Warner, and Williams—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Cole, Conness, Cragin, Edmunds, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Harlan, Hendricks, Kellogg, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Sprague, Thayer, Tipton, Trumbull, Welch, Wilson, and Yates—19.

So the motion was agreed to.

After some time spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 20, 1869.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. CHARLES E. LORD, D. D., of Chester, Vermont.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

SWAMP LANDS.

Mr. CULLOM, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1739) for the relief of States entitled to swamp-land indemnity; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

HARBOR OF CHICAGO.

Mr. JUDD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1740) to enable the city of Chicago to enlarge its harbor; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the votes by which the bills were severally referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARINE HOSPITAL AT CHICAGO.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to the House all the facts, estimates, contracts, correspondence, and official papers connected with the building of the marine hospital at Chicago, Illinois, and to state whether the estimates for the building of such hospital exceed the amount provided specifically by law, and if so, by what authority the building of said hospital has been undertaken at the cost of a larger sum.

EMILY B. BIDWELL AND SARAH HACKLEMAN.

Mr. HOLMAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1741) granting an increase of pension to Emily B. Bidwell, widow of Brigadier General Daniel D. Bidwell, and Sarah Hackleman, widow of Brigadier General Pleasant A. Hackleman; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. HOLMAN. It will be remembered by the House that a bill has already passed granting a pension to these ladies, but owing to a defect it cannot be executed.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I will say to the gentleman that this matter is all provided for by a bill which will come before the House, and there is no use taking up the time of the House about it now.

Mr. HOLMAN. Perhaps the gentleman can manage my bill better than I can. But I have felt a great deal of interest in this matter, and all I desire to ask is that the House under the circumstances will allow the committee to report this bill at any time. It is only to correct a mistake.

There was no objection; and the committee was authorized to report at any time.

UNITED AID ASSOCIATION.

Mr. JULIAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1742) to incorporate the United Aid Association; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

MAIL ROUTES IN MISSOURI.

Mr. STOVER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1743) creating a mail route between Harrisonville, Missouri, and Blooming Grove, Kansas, and Versailles and Tuckerville, State of Missouri; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the votes by which the bills were severally referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC CREDIT.

Mr. SCHENCK, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1744) to strengthen the public credit, and relating to contracts for the payment of coin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, ordered to be printed, and also ordered to be printed in the Globe.

The following is the bill:

A bill to strengthen the public credit, and relating to contracts for the payment of coin.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in order to remove any doubt as to the purpose of the Government to discharge all just obligations to the public creditors, and to settle conflicting questions and interpretations of the laws by virtue of which such obligations have been contracted, it is hereby provided and declared that the faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payment in coin, or its equivalent, of all the interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of any such obligation has expressly provided that the same may be paid in lawful money, or other currency than gold and silver: Provided, however, That before any of said interest-bearing obligations, not already due, shall mature or be paid before maturity the obligations not bearing interest, known as United States notes, shall be made convertible into coin at the option of the holder.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That any contract hereafter made specifically payable in coin, and the consideration of which may be a loan of coin, or a sale of property, or the rendering of labor or service of any kind, the price of which as carried into the contract may have been adjusted on the basis of the coin value thereof at the time of such sale or of the rendering of such service or labor, shall be legal and valid, and may be enforced according to its terms; and on the trial of a suit brought for the enforcement of any such contract, proof of the real consideration may be given.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 1549) to restrict and regulate the franking privilege, with the substitute therefor reported by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, was recommended to that committee.

The question was on the motion to reconsider.

The bill was read. The first section provides that members of Congress shall only be entitled to the franking privilege during the actual sessions of the Congress of which they are members. The second section provides that from and after the 4th of July next no letter or other matter shall be transmitted through the mails free of postage unless the same shall be duly franked by some person having the franking privilege by writing his name in his own proper handwriting upon such letter or mailable matter.

The substitute reported by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads was then read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it shall not be lawful for any officer of the Government, member of Congress, or other person entitled by law to the franking privilege, to exercise said privilege otherwise than by his or her written autograph signature upon the matter franked; and all letters or other mail matter not thus franked by the written signature of a person entitled by law to exercise said privilege shall be charged with the rates of postage which are now or may be hereafter established by law.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That from and after the 1st day of April next no officer of the Government, member of Congress, or other person entitled by law to the franking privilege shall, by reason of such privilege, be entitled to receive through the mails any mail matter free of postage; but all mail matter directed to any such officer, member of Congress, or other person, shall (unless duly franked or otherwise declared by law free matter) be charged postage as in other cases.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. This bill is printed, printer's number 605, and members will find it upon their files. The bill reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, by way of substitute for the one originally introduced, is in two sections. The first section of the substitute abolishes the use of fac simile stamps, and provides that the franking privilege shall be exercised only by the person entitled to that right, and by his written autograph signature upon the matter franked. It abolishes the use of those fac simile stamps about which we have heard so much and the abuse of which has become so prevalent.

The second section of the substitute provides that mail matter sent to persons who are entitled to the franking privilege, from and after the first day of April next, shall be charged with postage as mail matter is charged in other cases. In other words, it provides that the franking privilege shall not carry with it the right of persons to receive mail matter free, but that the postage upon it shall be prepaid, as in other cases, by the persons who send the mail matter. The way in which this matter grew up of attaching to the franking privilege the right to receive matter free as well as to send it free was this: in old times, when the postage was paid upon matter at the time and place of its delivery, it was found to be exceedingly troublesome and onerous to require members of Congress to pay postage upon all the letters and other mailable matter received by them from their constituents, which they would have been obliged to do unless they had given to them the right to receive as well as to send mail matter free of postage. But now that postage is required to be prepaid it seemed to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads that there was no good reason why people who write letters to members of Congress and other persons entitled to the franking privilege should not be required to prepay the postage on the letters they send as well as other persons who send letters through the mails.

The truth of the matter is, that probably one half or two thirds of the letters sent to members of Congress are now prepaid. Those people who really are the least able to pay postage are the very persons who do prepay the postage on their letters, because they are not quite certain about their right to send letters to members of Congress without the prepayment of postage. I have myself, since I have been a member of Congress, frequently received letters from postmasters of small post offices, inquiring whether individuals had the right to send letters to members of Congress without the prepayment of postage. The fact is not generally known throughout the country, and those people who are really the least able to prepay postage do prepay it now. Members of Congress know very well how the mails are now flooded with all sorts of documents which are sent to members of Congress, especially during sessions. They are now dumped down in the post office by the car load; all kinds of circulars, pamphlets, and documents, advocating jobs and schemes of all conceivable kinds. They are sent through the post office free of postage under the franking privilege which is given to members of Congress.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I would inquire of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FARNSWORTH] if it is proposed by this bill to cause persons sending papers to the Departments—for instance, applications for pensions, bounties, and all that sort of thing—to prepay the postage on those papers? I would inquire if that is the intent of the second section of the substitute? It seems to me that such a provision as that would be too onerous, for it is frequently the case that the postage upon such matter is very considerable; and there is no class of persons less able to prepay postage than the soldiers and widows of soldiers who have occasion to make that kind of communication to the Departments of the Government.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. There did not appear to the committee any good reason for making the distinction suggested by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BENJAMIN.] So far as regards correspondence in relation to bounties and the like, the necessity for that is now pretty much past. It is difficult to provide by law what shall constitute free mail matter. If we were to say that all matter marked "official business" shall be free, then everybody might mark their mail matter "official." If you say that every letter that is sent to the Postmaster General shall be free of postage, then whatever is sent to him by anybody, however able to pay the postage upon it, will be free of postage. Every head of a Department, every official under the Government who is entitled to the franking privilege, gets all his letters free; and the mails are thus loaded down with matter which ought not to pass through the mails free. I will state to my friend from Missouri [Mr. BENJAMIN] that as to papers on official business addressed to the heads of the Departments, most of that very matter is now prepaid; and as I have already remarked, with regard to letters addressed to members of Congress, this is especially the case as to correspondence coming from the poorer classes of people. Those least able to pay do pay their postage when they write to the Department, as well as when they write to members of Congress. As a general thing only those best able to pay postage know what the law is in regard to this matter, and send their communications through the mail without paying the postage.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I presume every member of the House has noticed in the public press criticisms upon the use of the fac simile stamps. I believe that these stamps have all grown into use within the last six or eight years, and they have been so common that at this time I presume almost every member of Congress uses them, as do the different Departments and officers of the Government. Every one can readily understand how easy it is to forge these fac similes. Any man, for instance, after getting my autograph upon a piece of paper, can go to an engraver and get him to engrave a fac simile stamp. He may take that stamp to New York or Boston or New Orleans and engage in sending off circulars and other mail matter through the mails under this forged stamp. Thus members are subjected to unjust criticism and censure, as has been shown this very session in the case of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. LYNCH.] Other cases have come to the knowledge of the Department and of members of Congress where these fac similes have actually been forged, and in some cases they have been stolen from members and used in this indiscriminate way. In fact, in Washington the abuse has grown to be so great that scarcely anybody in this city pays any postage at all, except it may be strangers visiting here casually. Almost everybody in the Departments and almost all the citizens of Washington manage in some way or other, by the use of these fac simile stamps, which are obtained either from members of Congress or from officers of the different Departments, to frank all the letters which they send from this city.

Mr. Speaker, unless some gentleman desires to discuss this subject I will call the previous question.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the motion to reconsider will be regarded as agreed to, and the motion to recommit as withdrawn, so that the substitute will be pending before the House.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FARNSWORTH] allow me to offer an amendment?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I will hear the amendment.

Mr. MILLER. It is, to add at the end of the second section "except correspondence with the Commissioner of Pensions in relation to pensions." I hope the gentleman will allow this amendment to be offered.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I am not authorized to accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER. It cannot be accepted. Does the gentleman allow it to be offered?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I will allow the amendment to be offered that it may be voted upon by the House.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask my colleague [Mr. FARNSWORTH] to allow me to offer a substitute for the substitute. It is to insert in lieu thereof "that all laws and parts of laws conferring the franking privilege on any person or persons whatever are hereby repealed." I trust my colleague will permit us to test the sense of the House upon this proposition.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I am entirely satisfied that that proposition cannot become the law; that if it should be adopted by the House it cannot pass in the Senate. I desire that the abuses of the franking privilege shall be prevented as far as possible; but while I am willing myself that the franking privilege should be abolished entirely, my impression is that this substitute of my colleague cannot be passed through both Houses of Congress, and that its adoption by the House at this time would only be mischievous. Hence, though I agree with my colleague on this subject, I must decline to allow his amendment to be offered.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I will.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to say a word on this subject. The whole of this outcry against the franking privilege arises in the most foolish way imaginable. That privilege is correct and proper; the outcry arises out of the abuse of the law, and instead of trying to correct the abuses practiced under it, it is now proposed to abolish the law, which is very proper.

This bill proposes to abolish the fac simile privilege. Will the gentleman from Illinois, or any other member of the House, tell me when that privilege was given? Every man who has used one of these fac similes is as guilty—not intentionally—as any other person who is defrauding the Government. There never was any permission to use it. This whole abuse has crept in from the fact that the law is not executed. We might as well say, because some franks are forged by the pen the writing of the name should cease. There are thousands of franks sent out every day from this city written by the pen of other persons, and they do not take the trouble even to imitate the signature. In my own case, looking at the law, I saw that I had no authority to use a fac simile, and although I had a good deal of franking to do I never got a fac simile stamp. I repeat, then, that there is no necessity for enacting a law abolishing the fac simile, for the right to use it never existed. In regard to imitations with the pen, I myself have had my signature abused in New York by a firm who sent around circulars under what purported to be my frank in writing. I went to the district attorney and gave the name of the parties, and asked him to prosecute. I heard nothing more about it after that.

Now, sir, this is not the only privilege that is abused. I am in favor of reducing the expenses of the Government. I do not yield, I might almost say, even to my distinguished friend from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURNE,] who carries his ideas of retrenchment almost to the verge of paralyzing the operations of the Government, so strenuous are his efforts in that direction. But I will go as far as he can reasonably ask in retrenchment. This proposition, however, is only a clipping of very small feathers from the overshadowing wings of extravagance. Some time ago, during the recess of Congress, I went down into the lower regions of this Capitol to see what was going on there. I found there some twenty persons or more employed in doing up documents, using great quantities of Government paper and twine. That paper and twine cost more than the amount of postage involved in the frank. The documents were going off by the hundred thousand. The employes were working night and day sending off political documents for partisan purposes. I saw there a great quantity of documents. A gentleman nominated yesterday as Senator of the United States had made a little speech out West. That speech was brought on here and sent out by the hundred thousand. I had some curiosity to see whether we had any chance on our side in that distribution of campaign documents; so I took up some of them and ascertained that they were all partisan documents which were being sent off in Government envelopes. Sir, it will require a supplementary appropriation bill to pay the expenses of that operation. I must say that the part of the House to which I belong had not availed itself of its proportion in that transaction. Out of the twenty or thirty different kinds of documents being sent out the only Democratic one I saw was a little speech of my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BOYER.] His seemed to be the only document which the party had taken the privilege of circulating at that time. I presume out of the twenty boys who were folding the documents nineteen were folding Republican documents and only one Democratic.

Now, sir, as long as I have a place here I shall go for every wholesome measure of reform and retrenchment, but I tell you you are beginning blindfold in the matter. Therefore, if I were entitled to the floor to make the motion, I would move to recommit the bill for the purpose of perfecting it by stopping the use of Government envelopes and scattering political documents, one of the abuses which are bleeding the country to a frightful extent.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from New York to make the motion which he has indicated?

Mr. ROBINSON. I will not ask the floor to make the motion, but I think the bill ought to be recommitted.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I yield now to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BROOMALL.]

Mr. BROOMALL. I entirely disagree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBINSON] about the right to use a fac simile stamp for the purpose of franking letters and documents. I believe there is no law prescribing the manner in which a member of Congress or any other individual with the franking privilege shall put his name upon a letter or document. It may be done with a stamp as well as with a pen. That which the person entitled to the franking privilege recognizes as his frank is his frank, whether it is put there with a pen or with a stamp. I am satisfied that that is the state of the law. Several years ago I was under the necessity, as I then believed, of getting a stamp for the purpose of franking documents, as I was in the habit of franking a great many. The abuses to which the system of franking by a stamp is liable induced me some months ago to abandon it and destroy or lock up my stamp, and I notified the Post Office Department that I was using it no longer. From that time up to the present I have been trying to get out of existence the stamped franks which had been in some way abstracted from me, and which are still occasionally found in the mails. I have, however, I think, after about two months' effort, succeeded in stopping them. Having thus abandoned the practice myself on account of the abuses to which it is liable, and not because I believed it wrong or unlawful, I am entirely in favor of this bill, and shall vote for it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him whether he stopped the use of his frank stamp before or since the election?

Mr. BROOMALL. That is a very pertinent question. During the campaign these abuses came to my knowledge. Some of the gentleman's political friends used to play an ingenious trick upon me; they used to open my documents under my stamped frank, take out the matter which I had inserted, and put in their own and send the letters on their way to my correspondents; and in many instances the spurious Seymour dollar, about which so much was said during the late campaign, floated over the country in different parts, and especially in my district, under my frank, having been put there in place of documents which had been taken out. The envelopes showed that they had been opened. I saw enough of these abuses of my frank to induce me to discontinue the use of it immediately upon the close of the campaign. I therefore answer the gentleman's question that it was at the close of the campaign that I abandoned its use.

One word more. The gentleman has said something about the documents sent from this building throughout the country during the late campaign at the public expense, and he has told us that some of those documents were sent by his own political friends. I can tell him, for I happen to know something about it, that his political friends, as well as mine, had their headquarters here, and I rather think his party got more than their share in the way of distributing documents through the mails and having them folded here at the public expense. It is an evil which the doing away with of stamped franks will do much to cure, both in the gentleman's party and in mine, because members of Congress will not take the trouble to write their actual names upon matter of this kind to a sufficient extent to make it a very great grievance. I am, therefore, entirely in favor of this bill, and hope it will pass.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. For the purpose of making the second section of the substitute a little plainer, I will move to add the words, "except public documents printed by order of Congress." That will enable members of Congress, after they have gone to their homes on the adjournment of a session, to receive documents without the payment of postage or leaving their franks here to be put upon them.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the amendment will be regarded as incorporated in the section. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, [Mr. FERRY,] the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to move to strike out the second section of the pending substitute. I am in favor of the first section, but am opposed to the second section, because it is a discrimination against the constituencies of members of Congress. I would be in favor of abolishing the franking privilege entirely rather than make this distinction against constituents which the section proposes. I would not free members of Congress from the payment of postage upon all mail matter received by them; but I am opposed to compelling constituents to pay postage upon the matter they send to their members, and at the same time giving members of Congress the privilege of sending free of postage as much similar mail matter as they please.

There is no justice whatever in exempting members of Congress from the payment of postage upon their correspondence to their constituents, and requiring the same constituency to prepay upon their mail matter to their Representatives. The relation is an official one, involving much correspondence and the transmission of much valuable public matter in the shape of documents and other public proceedings and records. So long as the franking privilege exists let it bear equally upon people and Representatives. The relation is mutual. The benefits growing out of the privilege in great measure inure to the people who are the recipients of these valuable public documents, and so far is beneficial and just. Whenever you legislate, however, to grant privileges on correspondence emanating from members, and refuse the same right to constituents, you institute inequality of legislation and discriminate against the people, who should be benefited, if either, and not, as proposed, be burdened. I will readily vote to abolish the franking privilege entire, but cannot support a proposition to legislate money out of the pockets of the people into those of members of Congress.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I allow the motion of my colleague [Mr. FERRY] to be voted upon. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] for five minutes.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I do not propose to discuss at any length the substitute offered for the original bill, for it would be impossible to do so in the brief time allotted to me. It is perfectly manifest, however, that something must be done in relation to the franking privilege, because the revenues of the Post Office Department have so fallen off as to make it absolutely necessary, if the Department is to be self-supporting, and also because of the gross abuses that have grown up under the franking privilege in almost every department of the Government. The Postmaster General has recommended the entire abolition of the franking privilege. His predecessor made the same recommendation to Congress.

If the House shall decline to make any change in the substitute reported by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FARNSWORTH] I will still support it. But it seems to me that the substitute should be so amended as to accomplish a wider purpose, by taking away the entire congressional franking privilege. If this privilege has been misapplied by members of Congress it has, perhaps, to a still greater extent been abused by those having no right to it. Franks have been forged, or used without authority, to no inconsiderable extent. But I rest my objection to the franking privilege on the broad ground of its inexpediency, the inequality in the favors it bestows, and the general injustice of taxing the entire public for the benefit of the few who share its benefits. The mail service taxes the public, while those who send or receive free letters receive benefits without any equivalent compensation. I propose to amend the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FARNSWORTH,] by inserting as a substitute what I send to the Clerk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That after the 4th day of March, 1869, no Senator or Representative in Congress shall be entitled to receive or transmit by mail any letter or mail matter free of postage.

The SPEAKER. There is an amendment pending, and also an amendment to the amendment. No further amendment can be received at this time without unanimous consent.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I cannot consent to have that amendment offered.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Very well; I will consider it a part of my remarks. If it could be agreed to by the House I proposed to follow it up by an additional provision, which I send to the Clerk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And after July 4, 1869, no officer of the Government entitled to the franking privilege shall be entitled to receive through the mails any letter or mail matter free of postage, except the Commissioner of Pensions, the Paymaster General, and the Second Auditor of the Treasury Department.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. It will be seen that the second section of the pending substitute prohibits any officer of the Government from receiving any mail matter free of postage. The effect of such a provision, if it shall become a law, will be to prevent a person entitled to a pension from writing to the Commissioner of Pensions without prepayment of postage. A soldier having a claim upon the Government for a bounty cannot write to the Paymaster General or to the Second Auditor of the Treasury Department without prepayment of postage. The abuse of the franking privilege does not grow out of letters sent to the Departments in these classes of cases so much as out of the fact that letters are sent from the Departments, or from members of Congress, or under their frank, which are not proper to be so sent, or in cases where, by every principle of justice, the postage should be paid. I submit to the House that it would be well to retain the franking privilege so far as to enable soldiers and pensioners to write to the Commissioner of Pensions or the Paymaster General or to the Second Auditor of the Treasury Department about their claims until the bounty claims shall all be fully paid, and for pensioners as long as the Government shall continue to grant pensions.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. PAINE.]

Mr. PAINE. I ask the attention of the House for one moment to the effect which has been produced by the last amendment moved by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FARNSWORTH] to the second section of the substitute. I was quite well satisfied with the second section of the substitute; but the words incorporated into it, "except public documents printed by order of Congress," I think have entirely destroyed the effect of it for good. That section—and I call attention to the last clause of it—is as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That from and after the 1st day of April next no officer of the Government, member of Congress, or other person entitled by law to the franking privilege shall, by reason of such privilege, be entitled to receive through the mails any mail matter free of postage; but all mail matter directed to any such officer, member of Congress, or other person shall (unless duly franked or otherwise declared by law free matter) be charged postage as in other cases.

That is to say, all public documents printed by order of Congress and sent to any person shall go free through the mails.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The gentleman mistakes the phraseology of the section as it now stands. The words "except public documents printed by order of Congress" come in after the word "postage" in the fifth line.

Mr. PAINE. I read the amendment at the Clerk's desk. I presume the phraseology has been corrected since.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I corrected it at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. PAINE. Then I withdraw what I have said.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I ask the Clerk to read the section as it will read in the amended form.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That from and after the 1st day of April next no officer of the Government, member of Congress, or other person entitled by law to the franking privilege, shall, by reason of such privilege, be entitled to receive through the mails any mail matter free of postage except public documents printed by order of Congress; but all other mail matter directed to any such officer, member of Congress, or other person shall (unless duly franked or otherwise declared by law free matter) be charged postage as in other cases.

Mr. PAINE. Now, Mr. Speaker, that stands just about as it did before, because the gentleman has inserted the word "other." As the section now stands all public documents are to go free.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Public documents are to be sent free to those who are entitled to the franking privilege—members of Congress, officers of the Government, &c.

Mr. PAINE. If the gentleman understands it so, that is well enough; but that is not the necessary meaning of the language.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. That is the way it reads, as I understand it. I will read the section with my amendment:

That from and after the 1st day of April next no officer of the Government, member of Congress, or other person entitled by law to the franking privilege, shall, by reason of such privilege, be entitled to receive through the mails any mail matter free of postage, except public documents printed by order of Congress—

That enables members of Congress to receive free of postage documents printed here after the members have gone home, without leaving their franks to be put on the documents—but all other mail matter directed to any such officer, member of Congress, or other person, shall (unless duly franked or otherwise declared by law free matter) be charged postage as in other cases.

The meaning seems to me entirely plain.

Mr. PAINE. Let me ask the gentleman one question. If all matter except public documents printed by order of Congress is to be charged postage, are we not to infer that public documents when sent through the mails, whether to members of Congress or others, are, under the provisions of this section, to be free from postage? Is not that a fair inference?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Public documents printed by order of Congress may be sent to members of Congress and officers of the Government free of postage.

Mr. PAINE. And all other documents must pay postage?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Everything else sent to persons entitled to the franking privilege must pay postage, unless it is franked, as when one member sends mail matter to another member or to the head of a Department.

Mr. PAINE. The difficulty with me is that, as I understand the section, all mail matter except these public documents pays postage; and these documents, whether sent by public officers or private individuals, pass through the mails free, and may be sent back and forth a thousand times without paying any postage.

Mr. BOYER. If the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PAINE] will allow me, I desire to ask him whether that ought not to be so; whether the public documents printed by order of Congress are not intended for the benefit of the people at large, and whether the people ought not to have these documents distributed to them free of postage as heretofore?

Mr. PAINE. I am quite willing to admit that these documents should be sent from Washington to private individuals free of postage; but I am quite unwilling to admit that the private citizens of the United States should be able to send these documents to and fro through the United States mails at pleasure, without paying any postage.

Mr. BOYER. I apprehend it very seldom happens that these documents are sent to and fro by private individuals, but that as a general thing they are sent by members of Congress to their constituents, who retain them.

Mr. PAINE. It does not happen now, because it cannot be done under the present law. What would happen if we gave facilities for it we can hardly predict.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Speaker, I know that it is a very favorite idea of many people to take away the franking privilege. I think I know some individuals who entertain the idea that they will secure special favor with the people by showing themselves in favor of a restriction or a repeal of the law which confers upon members of Congress and certain officers of the Government the privilege of sending their correspondence and documents through the mail free of postage, and receiving letters and documents free.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the object of the franking privilege? It is to enable officers of the Government to transact their business, and perform the duties they owe to their constituents without charge from their own pockets for postage. Now the correspondence of a member of Congress on his own account is but little, and I ask would it be policy for this Government to pass an act calculated to interfere with the freedom of communication between a Representative and his constituents? I regard all this talk about the abolition of the franking privilege as buncombe. I know the privilege has been abused; so has many another act of Congress. It has been suggested that an exception should be made of pension papers. Probably some of the grossest frauds committed on the Government have been committed in the procurement of pensions by persons who were not entitled to them under the law. Now, if the bill could be perfected so as to guard against all frauds on the law, I for one would be very glad to see the law improved. For instance, if every member of Congress could have an allowance under the law of a certain amount of postage stamps for the purpose of circulating documents and carry on his correspondence, it seems to me that would put a final stop to the frauds complained of. It might limit the correspondence of some, and some might not be disposed to use all the law allowed them. But I think any act calculated to restrict or abridge the free intercourse between constituent and Representative, or between the people and the proper officials of the Government, would be detrimental to the service and to the interest of the people of the country. I think the bill as now amended will put a stop to some of the abuses that have been committed under the law as it has been construed; therefore I am in favor of the bill with the amendments reported by the committee.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, my brief experience with reference to the franking privilege has made me believe that members of Congress are not benefited by its extension or continuation as it now exists. Difficulties arise with reference to it which cannot be guarded against by special legislation; and I believe that the expenditures for this purpose should be sustained by legislation in the shape of increased compensation to members as the only way in which the abuse can be corrected. So long as Congress publishes documents which it becomes the privilege and the duty of members of the two Houses to circulate they should be circulated at the public expense rather than at the expense of the members themselves. In that relation I consider the bill now before the House as defective. I think that all the ends would be met, so far as the demands of the people and the wishes of members of Congress are concerned, by abolishing the law as it now stands and substituting therefor an act providing that all documents printed at the expense of the Government for distribution shall come franked from the Departments, and shall be distributed under that frank as members may elect. I know with reference to myself that within the last three months my frank has been distributed under a forged fac simile to the extent, I believe, of one hundred thousand copies from the city where I reside, and for that abuse of my privilege forced upon me I am now receiving the censure, and I may say the just censure, of the press of the country. I make no complaint, for I have always regarded the franking privilege as one which would necessarily be subject to abuse, subjecting members of Congress to this kind of criticism. Therefore, while I wish to vote for the bill now before the House, as a restrictive measure I think it is defective in the respects I have pointed out.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Speaker, I am compelled by a sense of duty to oppose both the sections of this amendment; and in the outset I will remark that I never have allowed any person to affix my stamp to a document with a pen, nor have I made use of these stamps. But I have known, during my service in this House, of members whose physical infirmities were such that they could not possibly have affixed their autograph signatures to one tenth part of the matter which a member of Congress has to send out.

It is the second section, however, to which I wish principally to direct attention. It seems to me that this is reform in the wrong direction. Men speak here of the "franking privilege;" it should rather be called the "franking duty." It is given to us by the law not for our benefit, not for our use, but for the benefit of our constituents, to enable them to correspond with their Representatives at the capital with more freedom and at less expense; and if any part is to be abridged let it be that part which relates to the representative, and require him to prepay the documents and communications which he sends to his constituents, and not require the constituent to prepay that which he sends to him. I am opposed to this whole proposition; and I trust the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] will prevail, and that the second section will be stricken out.

Now, I am as willing as any member of the House to see abuses of the franking privilege rebuked and punished, whether it be that members use it improperly and in violation of law themselves or whether the indorsement upon the document, which is intended merely to show that it is entitled to the privilege, is forged or otherwise misapplied; but I think it wrong to require that every Senator and member of Congress, no matter what physical infirmities he may labor under, shall write his own name on all the documents he sends out. I have in my mind a gentleman, who is soon to take his seat at the other end of the Capitol as Senator from my own State, whose physical infirmity is such that it would be utterly impossible for him, without the aid of an amanuensis, to use the franking privilege to frank the letters and documents which he would send out. As to the second proposition, to require our constituents when they write to us to prepay their correspondence, I am opposed to it. I do think it is a restriction of the privilege that the spirit of the law did not intend. So far as the members themselves are concerned, I but speak, I dare say, the sentiment of nine tenths of the gentlemen of the House when I say it would be an infinite relief to a member of Congress if the franking privilege were taken away. It would reduce the amount of his correspondence and the amount of documentary matter that he would be called upon to send away. It would save him an immense amount of time and a great deal of money. But, as I have said, the franking privilege, or, I should rather say, the franking obligation or duty, is given to members of Congress not for themselves, but for the benefit of the people, to enable their constituents to correspond with them more freely. I trust my friend, the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, will not deem it necessary to press either of these two propositions earnestly upon the House.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I yield now to the chairman of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. LAFLIN. So far as this bill in its intention and in its principle strikes at the franking privilege I am decidedly in its favor. There are two objections which I have to this bill. The first is, that it gives to members of Congress and officers of the Government a right and a privilege which it denies to the people. The second is, that it gives to members of Congress a right and privilege which, far more than the franking of their correspondence, leads to an extravagant expenditure on the part of the Government. I refer to the expenditure which is created by the franking privilege in the printing department.

Now, I ask every member of Congress if the franking privilege should be abolished would our people and the members of Congress themselves see, as they do now, such a pressing necessity for the publication of such immense numbers of volumes as are now issued by the Government Printing Office? When we call to mind that we are now expending from one to two million dollars annually in the publication of documents, ought we not to stop and consider if there are not some ways and some means whereby that immense expenditure can be reduced? Now, I know of no way so potent, of no plan which will be so successful, nothing tending to economy in that direction equal to the total abolition of the franking privilege. And instead of this useless effort at economy, as proposed in this bill, I trust the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads [Mr. FARNSWORTH] will see fit to introduce a bill, or to offer an amendment to this bill, to abolish the franking privilege entirely, and to substitute therefor, if the public necessity shall demand it, a certain amount of money to each member of Congress to pay the postage upon their mail matter.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FARNSWORTH. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has four minutes of his hour left.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I yield three minutes of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BALDWIN,] reserving to myself only time enough to call the previous question before my hour expires.

Mr. BALDWIN. I shall vote for the bill reported by the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, [Mr. FARNSWORTH,] although, at the same time, I would prefer to vote for a bill of a somewhat different character. In my view, the franked mail matter of members of Congress should go free only when deposited here in the post office of the House or Senate, or in the post office at the place of the member's residence. I agree with what has been said by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD,] that the right of franking exercised by members of Congress is rather a duty than a privilege; it is a burden, rather than a pleasant thing to be prized. In my opinion, there is scarcely a gentleman on this floor who would not rejoice to be entirely relieved from the duty of franking matter from Washington through the mails, for it is a very onerous duty forced upon gentlemen here from the peculiarity of their position as Representatives, rather than a benefit or a pleasure to be sought and talked of as a privilege. And I also agree with what has been said by the chairman of the Committee on Printing, that we ought in some way to abolish the whole, or nearly the whole, document business. We ought to get rid of it, for a great portion of it is utterly useless, and I would be in favor of utterly abolishing the whole matter of publishing documents by order of Congress by the hundred thousand to be distributed by members of Congress. As to the franking privilege, I think it is necessary to members of Congress while they are subjected to the necessity of so great an amount of correspondence relating wholly to public business. I am certainly in favor of the first section of the substitute now before the House. I have never found it proper for myself to do otherwise than with my own hand to write every frank I have attached to the mail matter sent by myself. I shall vote for both sections.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I now call the previous question upon the bill and pending amendments.

Mr. SCOFIELD. If we vote down the previous question, can we afterward amend this bill so as to give some vitality to it?

The SPEAKER. By voting down the previous question, and then voting down the amendments which are now pending to the bill, other amendments can then be offered.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I believe all the good amendments have been left out, and those which would make the matter worse are left in.

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary question which the Chair can answer.

Mr. WOOD. I desire to say that I shall call for a division of the question upon the second section of the substitute.

The SPEAKER. Resolutions can be divided, but bills must be voted upon as a whole.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. There is a motion pending to strike out the second section, which will answer the purpose of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD.]

The question recurred upon the demand for the previous question; and being taken, it was seconded, upon a division—ayes eighty-one, noes not counted.

The main question was then ordered.

The first question was upon the motion of Mr. MILLER, to amend the second section of the substitute by adding to it the words, "except correspondence with the Commissioner of Pensions in relation to pensions."

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next question was upon the motion of Mr. FERRY, to strike out the second section of the substitute, which had been amended to read as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That from and after the 1st day of April next no officer of the Government, member of Congress, or other person entitled by law to the franking privilege shall, by reason of such privilege, be entitled to receive through the mails any mail matter free of postage, except public documents printed by order of Congress; but all mail matter directed to any such officer, member of Congress, or other person shall (unless duly franked or otherwise declared by law free matter) be charged postage as in other cases.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 89, noes 38.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. SPALDING called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that the bill be laid on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. FERRY, to strike out the second section of the substitute, upon which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 123, nays 56, not voting 43; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Archer, Delos B. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Banks, Barnum, Beatty, Beck, Benjamin, Blaine, Blair, Biles, Boutwell, Boyden, Boyer, Brownell, Buckland, Buckley, Burr, Roderick E. Butler, Callis, Cargis, Chanler, Churchill, Cobb, Coburn, Corley, Cornell, Cullom, Dawes, Delano, Dockery, Dodge, Thomas D. Eliot, James T. So the amendment was adopted.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the substitute, as amended, will be agreed to, in lieu of the original bill.

There was no objection.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill,

Mr. FARNSWORTH called the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I call for the reading of the bill as amended.

The bill, as amended, was read. It provides that it shall not be lawful for any officer of the Government, member of Congress, or other person entitled by law to the franking privilege, to exercise that privilege otherwise than by his or her written autograph signature upon the matter franked; and all letters or other mail matter not thus franked by the written signature of a person entitled by law to exercise said privilege are to be charged with the rates of postage which are now, or may be hereafter, established by law.

The bill was passed.

Mr. FARNSWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REMOVAL OF POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

Mr. FARNSWORTH, from the Committee on Reconstruction, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1746) for the removal of certain disabilities from persons therein named; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, provides that, with the concurrence of two thirds of each House, all legal and political disabilities imposed by the United States upon the following named citizens of the several States mentioned, in consequence of participation in the rebellion, be removed:

Of Virginia.—Albemarle county: John E. Early, Ira Garrett, William Wertenbaker, John Wood, Jr., Andrew J. Brown, William T. Early, D. W. Burnley, Ezra M. Wolfe, Thomas W. Wood, J. H. Rives, John H. Bibb.

Claiborne parish: James H. Maxwell, John L. Lewis.

New Orleans: J. E. Trudeau.

Mississippi—Claiborne county: Joshua S. Morris.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I hold in my hand vouchers for all these names. They are not so very numerous. The Clerk has read the name of each State and county, which has taken some time. Nearly every one of those men from Virginia is vouched for and recommended by the State Republican committee of that State, which my Republican friends ought to regard as a pretty good backer; and as for my Democratic friends, they never doubt the loyalty of any man who is vouched for by Republicans, I am sure. There are a few names of persons that have been recommended by members of Congress. The committee, I believe, have been exceedingly circumspect in regard to this list of names. There is a large number that we have not acted upon; and the names that we have reported we were unanimously agreed upon as of persons about whom there can be no sort of doubt.

Mr. MULLINS. I wish to ask whether any of these men have petitioned for themselves, or are they here by the petition of others?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Every one of them has petitioned for himself.

Mr. MULLINS. One further question. Are they all now in office or all desiring office?

[Laughter.]

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I have no doubt they all desire office, for that is a desire that is very prevalent at this time. But that they are all in office I very much doubt. I think very few of them hold office.

Mr. MULLINS. Only one more question. I see Shenandoah county in the list. Mosby figured largely in that region. Is he brought in here? [Laughter.]

Mr. FARNSWORTH. No, sir; his name is not in. We will be very happy to consider a bill for his relief when my friend shall offer it.

Mr. MULLINS. Well, sir, Gabriel will snap his resurrection gun before I offer it. [Laughter.]

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BECK. I merely desire to say on behalf of the minority of the committee that there is not a man recommended here who is not as thoroughly a Republican as any gentleman on this floor.

A MEMBER. Mr. MULLINS included?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir; that gentleman included. [Laughter.] The reason the minority were willing this list should be reported now was because we were assured that another bill would be reported, in which a large number of persons of both political parties would be recommended for the removal of disabilities.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if it is absolutely necessary for a man to petition Congress on his own behalf in order to get his case considered by the committee?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. No, sir; I do not understand it is absolutely necessary he should do so himself. We regard it, however, as better evidence of a man's loyalty and disposition to accept the situation if he comes and asks for relief than if he stands upon his dignity.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I understood it was necessary he should petition on his own behalf.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. We have no rule.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. There is one other question I would like to ask. If Colonel Mosby was to petition the Congress of the United States for a removal of his disabilities, confessing his fault and professing himself a loyal citizen, would not gentlemen of the Republican party in this House be in favor of a removal of his disabilities?

Mr. MULLINS. I would have to see the blood run from his knees all the way from here to Mecca in penitent confession before I would do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARD. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me for a question?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WARD. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois whether there is any particular reason why the gentlemen whose names are reported in this bill as fit subjects for amnesty should receive this favor any more than the large mass of the men who were engaged in the rebellion? The gentleman has stated that they are vouched for by somebody, but he has not given us any reason why these gentlemen should receive this benefit.

Now, I think we should either do one of two things; we should either relieve all who were engaged in the rebellion of the disabilities imposed by the Constitution, or else we should be careful in our selection; we should know why it is that we extend this amnesty; we should have some report from the committee that would be satisfactory to the House of the reasons why this amnesty should be extended. I am unwilling to give this favor to any men who were engaged in the rebellion unless some specific reason is given why they should be made exceptions from the large mass of those engaged in the rebellion. If this thing is to be repeated daily of the committee reporting a number of names and the gentleman having charge of the subject moving the previous question, the House knowing nothing about the cases, we might as well make a clear sweep of it and extend amnesty to every one, including Jeff. Davis, Raphael Semmes, and John C. Breckinridge.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The gentleman from New York on every occasion, I believe, when a bill has been reported to relieve anybody of disabilities has made the same criticism as he has just made. I will read for his information and the information of the House the voucher in one of these cases, and if the House desires to hear them I have similar vouchers with a report in each case, which I now hold in my hand.

Mr. WARD. I simply ask the gentleman to state any reason, if he has got any, why these men should be relieved. He has given no reason as yet.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I do not yield to the gentleman. This bundle of papers, furnishing a report in each case, may be printed in the Globe if gentlemen desire it; but I will read to the House now a specimen of the cases which I have reported. Here is the case of Ira Garrett:

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., December 10, 1868.
To the Honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned respectfully prays your honorable bodies to relieve him of the disabilities imposed upon him by the fourteenth article of the Constitution of the United States, and the "reconstruction acts;" and as in duty bound he will ever pray, &c.

IRA GARRETT.

Judge Alexander Rives has my petition to Congress for a removal of my disabilities.

IRA GARRETT.

Remarks.

The following is an accurate statement of the offices held before the war, the acts committed in support of the rebellion, and the present political status of the above named:

Mr. Ira Garrett is seventy-six years of age—was elected clerk of the county court in 1831, and clerk of circuit court, of Albemarle, in 1852, and has continued to act in each court to the present time.

He gave no support to the rebellion other than sympathy, which was carried out by feeding the hungry soldiers, and attending to the wants of the sick.

He accepts the political situation of the country. He is now a Republican, and indorsed the reconstruction policy of Congress.

C. L. THOMPSON,
Member of Convention, Chairman Republican Committee, Albemarle County, Va.

JAMES T. L. TAYLOR,
Member Constitutional Convention.

Judge Alexander Rives has my petition to Congress to relieve me of my disabilities.

IRA GARRETT.

Now, that is a specimen of the whole. All the cases that I have reported are vouched for in a similar manner. The gentleman from New York can examine them if he wishes, or they can be printed if the House desires it. I move the previous question.

Mr. McKEE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. No, sir; I must insist on the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. FARNSWORTH moved the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. SHANKS demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WARD called for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was put; and on a division there were—yeas 97, noes 30.

So (two thirds voting in favor thereof) the bill was passed.

Mr. FARNSWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. HAMLIN, one of its Clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed House bill No. 1460, regulating the duties on imported copper and copper ores, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to House bill No. 1558, to amend an act entitled "An act to prescribe the mode of obtaining evidence in cases of contested elections," approved February 19, 1851, had agreed to the committee of conference asked by the House, and had appointed Mr. CONKLING, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, and Mr. VICKERS, the conferees upon the part of the Senate.

GOLD CONTRACTS.

Mr. JULIAN. I ask unanimous consent to introduce for consideration at this time the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law that existing contracts, and those which may hereafter be made, may be adjusted and paid in gold on the basis of the relative value of gold and United States notes.

No objection was made; and the resolution was received.

The question was upon agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that this resolution be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. JULIAN. I would prefer to have this subject go to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. SCHENCK. The Committee of Ways and Means have this subject before them now.

Mr. JULIAN. Very well; I will not object to its being referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The motion of Mr. SCHENCK was agreed to.

Mr. CHANLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has now commenced. The first business during the morning hour is the call of committees for reports, commencing with the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and of the War of 1812.

ISAAC PHILIPS, DECEASED.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and of the War of 1812, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1745) for the relief of the estate of Isaac Philips, deceased, who was a private in the revolutionary war; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill, which was read, directs that there shall be paid out of the pension fund, or out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Sally Philips, daughter-in-law of Isaac Philips, deceased, the sum of $500 in full of all claims for pension due from the United States to said Philips, Sally Philips having nursed and taken care of him in his declining years.

Mr. MILLER. It is, perhaps, proper that I should make a brief statement of the facts in this case. Isaac Philips was a private in the revolutionary war. By virtue of an act passed in 1832 he was placed on the pension-roll with a pension at the rate of twenty dollars per annum, which, by an act of March 8, 1857, was changed to a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, from the 4th of March, 1831, and a certificate issued for the pension due under the provisions of this act amounting to $1,976. A man by the name of Abial Sawyer had been acting for the old man, and claimed a power of attorney to collect his pension, but it only related to the first pension granted, to wit, twenty dollars per annum. Afterward a man of the name of Lawrence Bess, together with said Abial Sawyer, went to a justice of the peace in Tioga county, Pennsylvania, of the name of Henry Lord, and got out a blank power of attorney to have old Mr. Philips to empower him to draw the $1,976 pension, and stated that it was mere matter of form, and that it was not necessary to send for old Isaac Philips; that Sawyer would place the old man's mark to it, and under some pretense get two witnesses to witness the paper, and the justice to certify it in same manner as if the old revolutionary soldier had been before him. At that time the old man resided some two and a half miles from the justice's office, and was both deaf and blind. Sawyer and Lawrence then got a certificate of the clerk of the court of Potter county that Henry Lord, before whom the paper purported to be executed, was an acting justice of the peace. They then went to Philadelphia and drew from S. S. Anderson, agent of the United States for paying pensions there, the $1,976. The United States agent first took his affidavit that he had no interest directly or indirectly in the amount of back pension, and then paid the money to him in good faith.

Immediately afterward these men, Sawyer and Bess, went to the old man, Isaac Philips, and offered to compromise with him by giving him $222 of the $1,976 which they had drawn. Sawyer introduced Bess to the old man as a clerk in the Pension Office at Washington, and they told him that if he did not take the amount they offered him he would not get anything. The old man refused to take the amount they offered, but stated he was willing to pay what was right. Bess then left seventy-five dollars with the justice of the peace, which the old man afterward reluctantly took; and that was all that he received so far as the evidence adduced before the committee shows.

This old man went to live with his son, who was very poor and also old. Afterward, not being able to get the money Bess had received belonging to the old man for his pension, a prosecution was instituted in the district court of the United States for the western district of Pennsylvania at Williamsport against Lawrence Bess and Abial Sawyer for forgery, and on the 20th of June, 1860, the grand jury found a true bill for forging the power of attorney. In 1861 old Mr. Philips died, and afterward, on the 22d of September, 1863, said indictment came on to be tried, and the only defense seemed to be insisted on was the act of limitation of 80th April, 1790, which limits the prosecution to two years after committing the offense; and on that ground the court (Judges Grier and McCandless) directed an acquittal; and in that way, and that way only, they escaped punishment. Justice Grier stated that the court had no doubt, under the evidence, of their guilt, but felt bound, under the act limiting the time such offense must be prosecuted, to direct an acquittal. Old Mr. Philips went to reside with his son; and after the death of the son the old man continued to live with his daughter-in-law, who took care and attended him faithfully up to the time of his death, he being upward of ninety years old when he died.

Taking into consideration all the facts and circumstances of the case, and that the old man and his wife are both dead, and in fact nearly all his relatives are also dead, the committee have decided to recommend the payment of $500 to his daughter-in-law, Sally Philips, who is now old and very poor, for taking care of the old gentleman in his declining years and last sickness. Were he now living, there is no doubt he would justly be entitled to the whole amount of the money.

Mr. CULLOM. If I understand the gentleman's statement, the object of this bill is to pay some woman for taking care of a man who had a pension during his lifetime.

Mr. MILLER. No, sir; the object is to pay a relative of this old man that which would be justly coming to him if he were alive.

Mr. CULLOM. Pay it to whom?

Mr. MILLER. The proposition is to pay to his daughter-in-law, who took care of him, $500 of the pension money to which the old gentleman, if living, would be justly entitled. He had received in his lifetime the certificate for $1,976, which was paid on a forged power of attorney to Lawrence Ress. We do not propose to allow this lady an annuity; but simply to pay her $500 of the pension money justly belonging to her old father-in-law.

Mr. CULLOM. The old gentleman is dead.

Mr. MILLER. He is now dead.

Mr. CULLOM. Then this money is to go to the woman that took care of him during his lifetime.

Mr. MILLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CULLOM. That is what I said. It is a pension paid not to the party himself, but to somebody else.

Mr. MILLER. No, sir; the pension goes just where it belongs. The pension accrued to the old man during his lifetime, and it was a pension money to which he was entitled.

Mr. UPSON. Has the Government once paid the amount due on this certificate?

Mr. MILLER. No, sir; it was paid on a forged power of attorney to that scamp, Lawrence Ress.

Mr. UPSON. Is this lady in indigent circumstances?

Mr. MILLER. Yes, sir; she is very poor, and, as I have already said, nursed and took care of him till his death.

Mr. UPSON. Was the power of attorney forged by the attorney of the revolutionary soldier?

Mr. MILLER. Yes, sir; by a man that claimed to be acting as his attorney, under a power which had been forged. I will add, Mr. Speaker, that I have drawn up a lengthy report of eighteen pages containing all the facts connected with the case, and if any gentleman desires to read it he can do so, as it is now on file. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LOIS CLARK.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims and of the War of 1812, reported back a bill (S. No. 569) granting relief to Lois Clark.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay to Lois Clark, of Milton, Vermont, the sum of $750, being the amount due to her father, Abraham Lawrence, a soldier of the Revolution, as pension from March 4, 1831, to the day of his death, June 13, 1837.

Mr. HOLMAN. I raise the point of order that this bill contains an appropriation, and must receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. If it is insisted upon the bill must go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will reserve the point of order till I hear some explanation of the bill.

Mr. MILLER. I will state the facts of this case as I understand them. Lois Clark, now claiming the amount named in the bill, is the only surviving child of a revolutionary soldier who resided in the State of Vermont. He was entitled under an act of Congress to a pension. While he was—

Mr. BENJAMIN. I insist upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being insisted upon, the bill must receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole, to which it is now referred. The report accompanying the bill will be ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. MILLER, from the same committee, reported adversely on the bill (H. R. No. 195) to provide pensions for certain officers and soldiers of the United States who served in the war of 1812, in the Mexican war, and in the Indian wars, up to and including the Black Hawk war, and for other purposes; and the same was laid on the table.

CHARLES MOSS.

Mr. MILLER, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1695) granting a pension to Charles Moss, of Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of the applicant, a soldier of the war of 1812, who served with the first regiment of Pennsylvania militia, and pay him a pension of eight dollars per month during his natural life, commencing the 1st day of January, 1868.

Mr. WELKER. I would like the gentleman to state some reasons for granting this pension.

Mr. MILLER. This man was a soldier in the war of 1812. He is very old and crippled, and very poor, not able to make a living. He has been in that condition for several years. He presented his application for a pension once before. The Committee on Invalid Pensions reported a bill in his favor, and it passed the House, but failed in the Senate for want of time. It is a very meritorious case. The man resides in the town in which I do, and I know all about his condition. He did service for the country, as appears from the evidence before the committee, and it is as meritorious a claim as could be brought before Congress. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. MILLER, from the same committee, reported adversely on the following cases; and the same were laid on the table:

A bill (H. R. No. 216) allowing pensions to soldiers and widows of soldiers of the war of 1812;

Petition of John Grubb and others, of Virginia, soldiers of the war of 1812, praying for the passage of a pension law for the benefit of the soldiers of the war of 1812; and Petition of citizens of Lehigh county, Pennsylvania, for a general pension law for the benefit of surviving soldiers and widows of soldiers of the war of 1812.

AMOS ARMSTRONG.

Mr. MILLER, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 721) to increase the pension of Amos Armstrong, who was wounded in the battle of Queenstown during the war of 1812, with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill increases the pension to fifteen dollars per month during the residue of the life of the applicant.

Mr. MILLER. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ISAIAH DEWLING.

Mr. ARCHER, by unanimous consent, presented the memorial of Dr. Isaiah Dewling, of the United States Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

DANIEL HAUSER.

Mr. MULLINS, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and of the War of 1812, reported a bill granting a pension to Daniel Hauser, a citizen of North Carolina and a soldier of the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of the applicant on the pension-roll, and that he be paid a pension of eight dollars per month from the 1st of January, 1869, during the remainder of his life, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I raise the question of order upon that bill. It contains an appropriation, and must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. It is an appropriation bill.

Mr. MULLINS. I will move to amend it.
The SPEAKER. It cannot be considered in the House.

Mr. MULLINS. Well, I cannot see the necessity of the case which requires the gentleman to take that position.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order.

Mr. MULLINS. I hope the gentleman will withdraw it.

Mr. BENJAMIN. No, sir, I cannot. I think it better that we should consider these bills in Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that it is unusual to make the appropriation out of the Treasury. These pensions are paid out of the general amount appropriated for pensions.

Mr. MULLINS. I ask leave to withdraw the bill.

There was no objection; and the bill was withdrawn.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. MULLINS, from the same committee, reported adversely on the petition of Allen McClure and James Whaley, soldiers of the war of 1812, for relief; and the same was laid on the table.

GEORGE GIVENS.

Mr. MULLINS, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1746) entitled "An act granting a pension to George Givens, a soldier of the war of 1812;" which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of George Givens, a citizen of Pittsburg, Alleghany county, Pennsylvania, a soldier of the war of 1812, upon the pension-roll, and allow him a pension of eight dollars per month from the 1st of December, 1868, until his death.

Mr. PRICE. Is there a report in this case?
Mr. MULLINS. There is a written report, and I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read the report. It sets forth that George Givens, a native of Tennessee, now a citizen of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, enlisted in the twenty-fourth United States infantry, commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Gaines, served for eighteen months, and was honorably discharged on the 4th of February, 1816, and that he is now very old and infirm and unable to procure a living by manual labor.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I would ask the gentleman from Tennessee what reason there is for granting a pension in this case that does not apply to all the soldiers of the war of 1812? I do not see, from the report, that this party contracted any disease in the service that disabled him, or that he was wounded.

Mr. MULLINS. I will answer the gentleman. The petitioner in this case has arrived at a very mature age. He is now, as the petition states, old and declining. He took up arms in defense of his country when you were a boy; and now I ask you will you repudiate your debt to this old grandsire for saving your country and driving out the Indians and the British to give you the liberty and sunshine that you and I both enjoy? Why, the gentleman is joking, I am satisfied! [Laughter.] It is a meritorious case, and I ask the previous question.

Mr. UPSON. The name of this man's company and regiment ought to be inserted in the bill to identify him.

Mr. MULLINS. The name of the company and regiment are there in the report.

Mr. UPSON. It ought to be in the bill.

Mr. MULLINS. Well, put it in.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection it will be inserted in the bill. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MULLINS. I now insist on the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MULLINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Colonel WILLIAM G. MOORE, his Secretary, informing the House that the President had approved and signed the following bills and joint resolution:

A bill (H. R. No. 967) to provide for the removal of the remains of W. T. Coggeshall, late minister of the United States at Ecuador, to the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 1537) to repeal certain provisions of section six of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1867;

A bill (H. R. No. 1673) to relieve William H. Bagley, of Wake county, North Carolina; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 388) explanatory of an act to create an additional land office in the State of Minnesota, approved July 25, 1868.

DANIEL HAUSER.

Mr. MULLINS. I am instructed by the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and of the War of 1812 to report a bill granting a pension to Daniel Hauser, a citizen of North Carolina, and a soldier of the war of 1812.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Daniel Hauser, a citizen of North Carolina and a soldier of the war of 1812, and to pay him a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month from the 1st day of January, 1869, during the remainder of his natural life.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Is not this the bill that was referred to the Committee of the Whole a few minutes ago?

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent of the House the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MULLINS] was granted leave to withdraw the bill to which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENJAMIN] referred.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I did not consent to the withdrawal.

The SPEAKER. Leave was asked for that purpose, and no objection was made. The bill has been changed to obviate the objection made to it by the gentleman.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I raise the same point of order, that this is still an appropriation bill, and must receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order, upon the ground that this is not an appropriation bill, as it requires the pension to be paid out of the pension fund, which is appropriated in the annual pension appropriation bill.

The bill (H. R. No. 174) granting a pension to Daniel Hauser, a citizen of North Carolina and a soldier of 1812, was then read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I notice that the regiment and company are not named in this bill.

Mr. MULLINS. That is not necessary, as the regiment and company are set out in the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the bill, by inserting in it the regiment and company to which this man belonged.

Mr. MULLINS. I have no objection to that.

The amendment of Mr. HOLMAN was then agreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would inquire if there was satisfactory evidence before the committee that this person whom we propose to pension was loyal to the Government?

Mr. MULLINS. That is the evidence. I have been to the Department and hunted up the name of every solitary man upon whom I have had to report.

Mr. MAYNARD. Is my colleague satisfied that the fact is so?

Mr. MULLINS. I am entirely satisfied.

Mr. MAYNARD. What is the evidence that he did not join the rebellion?

Mr. MULLINS. The evidence was that, in the first place, he was too old, and that he had served his country in a former war, and was too honest to go back on his country.

Mr. MAYNARD. That may be good evidence to my colleague.

Mr. MULLINS. That is the fact as it appears upon the record. I have information here that this man was indicted for treason to the confederacy.

Mr. UPSON. If we are to give pensions to all the soldiers of 1812 we should do it by general law, or have some special reason assigned why this man should be selected for a pension. I move that this bill be recommitted to the committee.

Mr. MULLINS. I do not yield for any such purpose. There is no better man here, in my judgment, than this man Hauser. His loyalty is attested to by a witness who knew him. The men of the company to which he belonged are all dead. The papers are all in the Department, and I have examined them. I cannot see that to recommit this bill will do anything more than to delay action upon it. Here are men intimately acquainted with Mr. Hauser, who know that he was indicted by the southern confederacy for being loyal to the General Government.

Mr. UPSON. There are a good many surviving soldiers of the war of 1812 who would like to receive pensions. If we are to grant a pension in a case which has no peculiar circumstances to recommend it I do not see why we should not grant pensions to all these men.

Mr. MULLINS. I will state the circumstances of this case. This man, after being enlisted and while on his march to Norfolk, Virginia, was very suddenly attacked with rheumatism, and after being detained for several days was hauled in a baggage wagon a considerable part of the way to Norfolk, and finally completed on horseback his journey to the point of destination. He served until the close of the war—a period of eighteen months or two years—being more or less afflicted the whole time with rheumatism. When peace was declared he was still in the service, though lying prostrate; and he received an honorable discharge. He and the colonel in whose regiment he served had both to be hauled away from the point where they were discharged. Now I ask, in God's name, why should you not in such a case as this allow to a worn-out patriot a sufficient sum at least to bury him? I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; which was upon the motion of Mr. UPSON, that the bill be recommitted.

On the question there were—ayes 30, noes 44; no quorum voting.

Mr. MULLINS. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw this bill for the present.

There was no objection.

WILLIAM ADAMS.

Mr. MULLINS, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and of the War of 1812, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1748) granting a pension to William Adams, a soldier of the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll the name of William Adams, a citizen of the town of Franklinville, New York, who served as a soldier of the war of 1812, the pension to be at the rate of eight dollars per month from January 1, 1869, until his death, and to be paid out of the pension fund.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I call for the reading of the report in this case.

Mr. MULLINS. There is no written report.

I will state the circumstances of the case. During the war of 1812 William Adams served three months in the thirty-ninth New York infantry, and was honorably discharged. He is now very old and infirm, being subject to epileptic fits. He is eighty-five years of age, and his wife is seventy. They are both helpless.

Mr. UPSON. This bill does not specify the company and regiment in which this man served. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and of the War of 1812.

Mr. MULLINS. Mr. Speaker, I cannot see why it is that these attacks are made upon these very meritorious bills providing for men who fought for the country when she needed their assistance and when her friends were not so numerous as they are now, though she has enemies enough at the present time. Such treatment as these bills are receiving to-day is very poor encouragement to the men who have bled for this Government, who have sustained it by their chivalric arms, and never bowed to the dictates of kings and despots. In the dark hours of peril, in the time that tried the hearts of men, the gallant soldiers for whom these bills would make provision in their declining days came to the rescue of the Government; yet now, when their limbs are palsied with age, when they are tottering on the verge of the grave, it would seem that members here are willing that they should starve at our very gates and not be allowed a morsel of bread. I doubt whether they would give a drop of water to cool their parched tongues. The couch of death is ready for these brave and loyal men, and all we ask is that enough shall be voted to them for the purpose of burying them in gentility.

Mr. MAYNARD. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MULLINS. Certainly.

Mr. MAYNARD. What are the peculiar circumstances in this man's case which distinguish it from the great mass of cases of soldiers of the war of 1812?

Mr. MULLINS. I will leave the answer to my friend from New York; not that I am not able to answer, but because he was the gentleman who presented the bill.

Mr. VAN AERNAM. I am well acquainted with the old man, who served in the war of 1812, and know that for the last fifteen years he has been subject to epileptic fits, repeated every ten days or thereabouts. He is an object of charity. His wife is over seventy years old, and he himself is eighty-five. I know that it is a meritorious case, and I hope there will be no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. UPSON. Show wherein it is an exception to the general rule of those who served in the war of 1812. Do the records of the Pension Office show that this man performed any service?

Mr. VAN AERNAM. He served in the war for three months. He then went home from the field sick. He has received since then a land warrant of one hundred and sixty acres; but, of course, he is not entitled to a pension under the pension laws of the United States, and the committee therefore report, on account of the sickness with which he is afflicted, a special bill for his relief.

Mr. UPSON. Is there any paper from the Pension Office in relation to this case?

Mr. VAN AERNAM. There is nothing in the Pension Office, so far as I know, as he never applied to the Pension Office for a pension.

The SPEAKER. A communication from the Pension Office was sent by the gentleman from Tennessee to the Clerk's desk with the other papers accompanying this bill.

Mr. MULLINS. I have investigated the record of this brave old soldier of the war of 1812, as I investigate all such cases which may be referred to me, and I have reported in every ease all the facts for the intelligent action of the House. I have given the regiments and the companies in which these men served. Of course, there is nothing in the Pension Office about this man. If he could have got a pension under the general laws he would not, of course, have come here. It is because he cannot get a pension under the general laws that we propose to pass this special act.

Mr. UPSON. Most of the men who were soldiers in the war of 1812 are now very old.

Mr. MULLINS. That is the point I make.

Mr. UPSON. I want the gentleman to point out wherein this case is an exception to all others. If they are all alike we ought to pass a general law providing for all cases, and we ought not to pass special acts unless in exceptional cases. In what, I ask the gentleman, is this different from the generality?

Mr. MULLINS. Because the generality have not epileptic fits. [Laughter.] I do not know how quick members of the House may be struck with them; I cannot tell, but I know that I have the rheumatism, and I do not want to struggle with a man in the prime of life who is interposing to prevent us from passing a bill for the relief of an old man who fought for the country probably before the gentleman was born, certainly when he was a child. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 28, noes 88.

So the House refused to recommit the bill.

Mr. UPSON. Is the number of this man's company and regiment in the bill? For the safety of the Government and for the man himself it ought to be in the bill.

Mr. MULLINS. It is in the report.

Mr. UPSON. It ought to appear in the bill, and I move that amendment.

Mr. MULLINS. I do not object to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VAN AERNAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent to present a substitute for the bill to aid in ascertaining the value of public lands and for the endowment of a national college of mines, in order that it may be ordered to be printed.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

PUBLIC LANDS IN INDIANA.

Mr. NIBLACK, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to communicate to this House, as early as practicable, either during the present or the next Congress, a list of all lands in Knox county, Indiana which may be entered as public lands, or to which the title has not passed from the United States, with a particular description of each particular tract, as far as practicable, together with the aggregate amount of land estimated in acres.

DANIEL HAUSER.

Mr. MULLINS, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and of the War of 1812, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1748) granting a pension to Daniel Hauser, a citizen of North Carolina and a soldier of the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MULLINS. Mr. Speaker, I suppose there will be no objection to the passage of this bill. It is for the relief of a gentleman whose loyalty is beyond doubt. Notwithstanding he comes from a southern State, he is one of those who stood amid the fire and thunder of the rebellion led by Jeff. Davis, which broke harmless upon his head. He himself has stood with that little band of stalwart southern men who resisted the vile spirit of secession, and who were willing to give up their lives for the good of the country. He nourished, by every sacrifice, the tree of liberty planted by your fathers and mine. When you were not dreamed of he went out with others to fight the enemies of the country. Men watered with their blood that tree, under whose spreading branches we all now take shelter. He fought for the rights which we now enjoy when the oldest of us were young men; and now that he is old and in want himself he comes here and asks that this Government shall give him a small pittance in order to smooth his pathway to the grave. He has always been loyal to the stars and stripes, and he presents a case which we cannot reject.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the gentleman will give us some statement of the character of this man's loyalty.

Mr. MULLINS. That is easily done. He was proscribed by the confederate government for being loyal to the Federal Government.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MULLINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MULLINS. How much time is there left of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. Six minutes.

Mr. MULLINS. Mr. Speaker, under the general law providing for pensions it was impossible to embrace every one who fought in the war of 1812, and even some of those who fought in the war of the Revolution have not been included. There are exceptional cases which have great merit that have to be provided for by special acts; and if the gentlemen who oppose these bills could know the stories of sorrow and distress and suffering on the part of these brave old men who fought for us in the beginning of our career which are brought to the attention of the committee to which I belong, I am sure there is not a single man here who would make the least objection to the passage of bills for their relief.

The SPEAKER. There is no question before the House.

Mr. MULLINS. I ask unanimous consent to occupy the few minutes which are left of the morning hour.

Objection was made.

The SPEAKER. Reports are now in order from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. PERHAM. How many minutes are left of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. PERHAM. The Committee on Invalid Pensions have a great deal of business to report, and, as I understand the rule, any part of an hour occupied by the committee will be counted as a full morning hour against it.

The SPEAKER. The committee are allowed two morning hours for reports, and this will be counted as one of them.

Mr. PERHAM. I ask unanimous consent that this shall not be counted against that committee.

Mr. McCARTHY. I object.

Mr. MULLINS. I ask unanimous consent to occupy the rest of the morning hour.

There was no objection.

Mr. MULLINS. Mr. Speaker, having been for a few weeks past acting chairman for the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and of the War of 1812, I have endeavored to discharge the duty devolved upon me as an American citizen in granting relief to the survivors of those brave soldiers who have gone down in death in the glorious struggle for independence. I could not deny the small pittance asked for by those men who have upheld our rights when you, Mr. Speaker, and all the rest of us here were in our infancy. Whatever other gentlemen may choose to do I, for one, will reward the faithful services of these men to the United States, and will do everything in my power to smooth their pathway to the grave, so that for their few remaining years they may be relieved from all sorrow and distress by the bounty of this Government. For one I cannot find it in my bosom to deny any man who comes seeking relief here as a loyal child of the Government, and who upon the battle-field has risked his life against the enemies of the country. My voice, on the contrary, shall always be heard pleading in their behalf. And, sir, I trust that the time will come when all those who have fought for the Union cause will receive either through themselves, or their posterity where they have been smitten with death, the rich reward which their glorious services merit. I will never deny relief to the widows and orphan children of those who have died that the Union might be saved. This I will do for loyal men; but, sir, before I will go out of my way to reward treason or red-handed traitors, I trust that my right arm may fall from my body and my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth. While I will reward all those who are loyal I will not refuse altogether to grant some forgiveness to those men who show works meet for repentance. But, sir, I want it to be understood that I shall set my face like flint against those traitors who arraign themselves against this Government and in favor of secession, revolution, and disintegration, and who fought against the cause of human civilization and against the cause of God. We should reward the men who were true to the Government, and in every way foster the great cause for which they fought, for we do not know how soon the tocsin of war may again sound in our ears. If we refuse to loyal men, and stimulate and encourage treason and traitors, I say that I cannot but fear and tremble for the future of the Republic.

[Here the hammer fell.]

BRANCH MINTS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Director of the Mint, with drafts of bills relative to various branch mints, &c.; which were referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

REDUCTION OF CLERICAL FORCE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the House, stating what reduction can be made in the number of officers and employés, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

TRANSIENT PAUPERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Surgeon General of the Army of the United States, relative to the amount necessary for the support of transient paupers in the District during the fiscal year of 1870; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

NAVY DEPARTMENT CONTINGENT FUND.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in compliance with law, a detailed statement of the expenditures of the contingent fund of the Navy Department, of its bureaus, and of the southwest executive building for the year 1868; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

NORTH CAROLINA CHEROKEE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with an estimate of the appropriation required to carry into effect the act of Congress of July 27, 1868, for taking a census of the North Carolina Cherokee Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CALIFORNIA INDIAN CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, relative to the outstanding indebtedness on account of the Indian service in California; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SIXTY-FIRST ARTICLE OF WAR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, recommending the passage of a law repealing the sixty-first Article of War, which recommendation is concurred in by the General of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

TEXAS INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House resolutions of the Texas constitutional convention respecting the Indians on the frontier of that State; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

WHISKY FRAUDS, ETC.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask unanimous consent to submit to the House a letter from Mr. Green Clay Smith, in reference to the testimony of Mr. Fitch, alluded to in the report submitted by me from the Committee on Retrenchment, in order that it may be printed in the Globe.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

The letter is as follows:

WASHINGTON CITY, D. C., January 16, 1869.

DEAR SIR: My attention was recently called to the report you had the honor to submit to the House of Representatives December, 1868, in regard to "whisky frauds and administration of Internal Revenue Department," in which the following appears as being part of the testimony of Mr. Fitch and the conclusion thereon by the committee:

"Question. Did you have an interview with the President as to certain communications?"

"Answer. I did, and at the same interview the President sent for Mr. Binckley; that is where I met Mr. Binckley, and was introduced to him by the President. He says he was informed that the President would stand by us, and we would have his cordial and hearty support." As to the affidavit on which the President was to suspend Mr. Courtney and others, he said, "the original draft was made by me at the White House, at the urgent solicitation of certain parties who were there."

"Question. Who were those parties?"

"Answer. Mr. Yeaton, Captain Lewis, Green Clay Smith, Senator FOWLER, and a lady in Washington. These charges were predicated upon the impressions made on my mind by Mr. Binckley. The affidavit was founded simply on my belief, and not on positive knowledge, and the assurance that I received was that all this matter was to be kept private until the testimony could be brought out to sustain the charges. I had received such assurances from these parties that led me to believe they could be sustained."

"Question. You did not make that affidavit upon any knowledge or information of your own, but simply upon the impressions you received from the representations of others."

"Answer. Yes, sir; these impressions had been fastened upon my mind. Mrs. — said, 'You do this thing;' another said, 'you make these charges and they will be kept confidential by the President until such time as the facts can be maintained.' After returning to New York I made certain inquiries and became satisfied that the charges were unjust, and had determined upon returning to Washington to withdraw them."

"Question. State whether you had a conference with General Burbridge, and what was said between you and General Burbridge at that time."

"Answer. I talked very freely with General Burbridge about these matters from the outset."

"Question. So you mean to swear that you were employed as an agent, and that you were to be reimbursed for all your expenses and time in the investigation against Rollins and others?"

"Answer. Yes, sir; at Mr. Binckley's suggestion, who told me he would employ me as an assistant, so I could have some proper claims for reimbursement. When I first came here he referred to me as his assistant."

"What a terrible picture does this present of a base conspiracy, inviting the commission of crimes, even the blackest perjury, to destroy a faithful public officer—the reputation of an honest man! Can we wonder that the revenue and every other service of this Government is demoralized, when the President opens the door of the White House and himself becomes a party in such a conclave?"

In justice to those alluded to in the foregoing, I feel called upon to make the following statement of facts:

I met Mr. Fitch at the White House, I presume on the day he mentions. He came to me of his own accord, and read an affidavit in pencil, signed by himself, charging Mr. Courtney with certain misdemeanors and crimes in his office as United States attorney for a district in New York. When he was through with the reading I asked him if he was certain the charges could be sustained. He answered positively in the affirmative. I then said by all means he ought to make the matter known, and lay it before the President.

I remember seeing Senator FOWLER, Captain Lewis, and Mr. Yeaton at the White House the day I read the affidavit, but I assert most positively none of them spoke to me alone, together, or in the presence of Mr. Fitch in regard to the matter, nor did I ever know they had seen the affidavit until I read his deposition or testimony. There was no conference whatever held there or elsewhere, to my knowledge, upon the subject. I never heard Mr. Fitch speak to a "lady in Washington," Senator FOWLER, Lewis, or Yeaton, in my life.

I do not know nor did I ever see Mr. Courtney, nor did I ever hear any one speak of his misconduct but Mr. Fitch. I would further state that when this interview took place between Fitch and myself no other person holding office under the Government was alluded to.

I desire further to remark that I do not know, nor do I remember of ever having seen Mr. Binckley, who was intrusted with the investigations of frauds in New York. I never have directly or indirectly been connected with these charges against Government officers, and am personally perfectly ignorant of what has transpired save what has appeared in your report and the newspapers of the day.

I will say here that I had my preference for Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and did recommend General S. G. Burbridge, of Kentucky, for that place. For this I have no apology to offer, as he was a fellow-officer with me in the service from our native State, and had always been my personal friend; and in presenting his name I did not deem it necessary to reproach any officer of the Government.

I must say, in conclusion, that the President of the United States, as far as my knowledge extends and as I firmly believe, was actuated in all that he did alone by a just sense of duty, and whatever he said or did made no charges or spoke unkindly or spoke disparagingly of any of the officers under him.

I submit this communication to you that I may be placed right before the country, and as a matter of justice to those mentioned in your report; and I do hope, as I was not called before the committee to testify in this case, you will have this read before the House.

I have the honor to be, most respectfully, your obedient servant,

GREEN CLAY SMITH.

Hon. CHARLES H. VAN WYCK, Chairman Committee on Retrenchment, House of Representatives.

ELIZA DODGE, ETC.

Mr. BENTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1749) for the relief of Eliza Dodge, Mary Wheeler, Zilpah Stone, Harvey H. Chamberlain, Chauncey R. Berry, and Eliza J. Crawford; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

FINANCES.

Mr. SCHENCK. I introduced this morning, and had referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, a bill to strengthen the public credit and relating to contracts for payment of coin. I now move to reconsider the vote by which that bill was so referred. I do this with a view to bring a bill back into the House for action, for which I hope to have the authority of the Committee of Ways and Means. This I propose to do in a week or two when the business of the House will permit the consideration of the subject. I shall then submit some remarks myself in support of the bill, and allow some discussion of the subject, with a view to action by the House.

The motion to reconsider was entered.

UNITED STATES CENSUS.

Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a select committee of seven be appointed to inquire and report to the House what legislation is necessary to provide for taking the ninth census, as provided by the Constitution; and said committee have leave to report at any time by bill or otherwise.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DENVER PACIFIC RAILWAY.

The House then resumed the consideration of the regular order of business, being Senate bill No. 570, for a grant of land, granting the right of way over the public lands to the Denver Pacific Railway and Telegraph Company, and for other purposes, on which Mr. COVODE was entitled to the floor.

Mr. LOGAN. Before the gentleman proceeds I ask unanimous consent to introduce a substitute for this bill, and to have it pending and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

The substitute is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Denver Pacific Railway and Telegraph Company, a company incorporated under the laws of the Territory of Colorado, is hereby authorized to connect its road and telegraph with the Union Pacific railroad and telegraph at or near Cheyenne. Said company shall have authority to issue coupon bonds to the extent of ——— dollars per mile of road to be built, said bonds to run forty years and to bear interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually on the first day of February and August of each year in lawful money, the interest and principal to be payable at the Treasury of the United States, or at the office of the Assistant Treasurer of the United States at the city of New York, at the option of the Secretary of the Treasury, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. And the President of the United States shall appoint three competent persons as commissioners to examine said railroad; and as sections of twenty miles of said road are built in a good and substantial manner said commissioners shall so report in writing to the President, who, being satisfied with such report, shall approve the same, and cause it to be filed with the Secretary of the Treasury; whereupon the United States shall guaranty the payment of the interest of the bonds authorized to be issued as aforesaid, to the extent of ——— dollars per mile of road built; and it is hereby made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to indorse and registers such bonds for the United States, guarantying the payment of the interest thereof in such form as he may deem proper. And the indorsement of such bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury, on behalf of the United States, shall ipso facto constitute a first mortgage on said railroad, its rolling-stock, and furniture in favor of the United States, to the extent of the interest on said bonds. And it is hereby made the duty of said railroad company to have on deposit with the Treasurer of the United States, at least ten days before any semi-annual installment of interest falls due, a sufficient amount of money to pay such installment of interest; and upon failure to do so the President may cause the Secretary of the Treasury, upon sixty days' notice to said company, to take possession of said railroad, stock, and fixtures for and on behalf of the United States. And, for the purpose of making provision for the payments of the interest of said bonds, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to retain—

First. All sums of money due said company on account of transporting troops, munitions of war, and military and Indian supplies.

Second. All moneys arising from the transportation of the mails by said company.

Third. All moneys arising from the transmission of telegraph messages by said company for the United States.

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause semi-annual statements of the interest account to be made with said company, and any surplus money remaining after the payment of any semi-annual installment of interest shall be paid to said company. And for the purpose of making provisions for the payment of the principal of said bonds, so indorsed by the United States, the lands of said company heretofore granted by the United States for the construction of said road, or so much as lie along or on either side of said road as herein mentioned to be hereafter built, (except so much as may be necessary to the operating of said road, which shall be set apart for that purpose by the three commissioners aforesaid,) shall be as fast as every twenty miles of said road are completed, put into market to actual settlers at $2.50 per acre, under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. And all moneys arising from the sale of said lands shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon cause such money to be invested in said bonds, the same to be canceled and delivered to said company.

Mr. COVODE. Mr. Speaker, I purpose to occupy the floor with a few practical remarks, not to make any set speech, and then to yield to my colleague, [Mr. KELLEY.] I discover by the remarks of the chairman of the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, which he made yesterday, that he appears to cast a reflection upon the board of directors for changing their plan, and running to the southwest instead of making a connection with the Union Pacific railroad at the one hundredth parallel. I think it is only necessary for the House to understand the reason why this change was made to satisfy them that the board was wise in so doing. This Union Pacific railroad traverses the valley of the Platte and the valley of the Salt Lake, and it was to be expected that at some time the trade and travel of the country would be interrupted by snow. This Board, knowing that they were building a railroad not only for our own purposes, but one which would be the highway of nations, found it was possible to have the line so run that at all seasons of the year it would be free from interruption on account of the snow. They diverged, therefore, to the southwest. They did this in view of extending the line to the Pacific ocean. They did it in view of affording to the southern States now returning to the Union an opportunity to make connection with that road. They did it in order to allow the northern cotton States to make a connection with their road from Memphis, while the southern cotton States could make their connection from Shreveport or elsewhere. This road, taking the course the eastern division has done, will give a great thoroughfare from the middle and southern States across the continent, and secure to the commerce and travel of the world a road upon which they may pass at all seasons of the year. That is why they did it.

It is to be a great thoroughfare between the eight hundred million people in Asia and the two hundred million in Europe in their harmonious intercourse across this continent. And in making this divergence to the south they afford an opportunity for a road to start from the southwest, near Albuquerque, into Mexico, which some day will be of the greatest importance to the American people; for such a road will enable us to carry our institutions, our schools, our churches, our religion, and all our other means of civilization down into the interior of Mexico, and to return with trains laden with silver from mines there which are not now worked because of the want of facilities for reaching the markets of the world.

Mr. Speaker, it will be recollected that during the last generation the civilization of Great Britain has been carried into the interior of Africa and into the interior of India at the point of the bayonet. The missionaries which they sent out had to follow the bayonet in those days; but they have a different plan now, and that is the plan indicated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] in the amendment which he has proposed. They now guaranty the bonds of railroad companies, and under that plan of guarantying the bonds of railroad companies they have secured the construction of four thousand miles of railway; and these railways, while they carry civilization into every region of that extensive country, at the same time afford facilities for the transportation of their spices, cotton, and other products to market. This policy of England has been adopted because she admits that railroads are the great civilizers of the world.

I wish to say a few words in regard to the Union Pacific railroad. I am a friend of that road. I give the greatest credit to the men who invested their money in that great enterprise. They deserve it at our hands, and they should receive our applause instead of being denounced, as they have been, as thieves and scoundrels. I say this as one who helped to organize the first movement toward building the Platte Valley railroad. I took a party out, partly at my own expense, from Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, Indiana, and Wisconsin. Eleven years ago I procured legislation at Omaha, and went to the mouth of the Platte to organize the Platte Valley Pacific railroad. I was one of the projectors of that line. I am in favor of all these lines, for one single railroad track across this continent is nothing but a mockery. It will not accommodate the great traffic of the world to which I have referred. But my friend from Illinois, whom I have followed for ten years, like the shadow follows the substance, in every movement he has made to economize, yesterday took open ground against this railroad project, while he knows that the bill before the House makes no new grant of lands, but only transfers from one corporation to another a grant made by a previous Congress, and that to accomplish important results and great saving to the Government in transportation, and a saving of hundreds of miles of travel to reach Denver from St. Louis, or points south and east of it.

Why, it is known to this House that I have acted with the gentleman on all questions of economy; I followed him through the tellers.

I voted with him on all matters in which the credit of the country was concerned, and in which the question of economy was involved. But he is pushing the matter a little too far now, and I will show you why. The company has constructed a railroad ending nowhere, and now it wants fifty-four miles of subsidy to enable it to finish the road up to Cheyenne Wells. That is the proper point to diverge from to go to Denver; for with all the embarrassment the gentleman can throw around this bill, the only subsidy asked for in the bill is $16,000 a mile for fifty-four miles. The route from there to Denver, and from Denver to Cheyenne, amounting in all to over three hundred miles, has no subsidy, so that it will be seen that in constructing this road to Cheyenne Wells you will secure to the Government three hundred miles more of road without subsidy, and reach the coal that is so much needed, not only to supply the road, but also the country to the Missouri river.

That is not all. The most important matter connected with the question at the present time is the Indian question. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that we have no difficulties with the Indians near the Missouri river. The trouble is away back on the frontier at the base of the Rocky mountains. Now, in what situation does the Government find itself to-day? If it wants to move troops from one line of road to the other they have got to be sent five or six hundred miles down to the Missouri river, and then up or down that river to the other road, and out it five or six hundred miles; whereas when this road is completed the troops can be moved from the north or south in a few hours, or days at furthest, by this line of road three hundred miles, saving much travel and time. It will enable us to keep down the depredations of the Indians with one half the number of troops by the great facility it will give them in moving from point to point. It is therefore the interest of the Government to grant this subsidy, and in advocating it I am but following the lead of military men who have indicated that it is important that the road should be constructed.

Another thing. I am familiar with the geology of that country, and I know there is no coal on the Union Pacific railroad from the valley of the Des Moines river, Iowa, to the Black Hills, a distance of seven hundred miles. There is no coal on the Kansas Pacific road until you reach Cheyenne Wells and make this connection at the base of the Rocky mountains, where both coal and timber are found.

Again, this connection will enable us to take our machinery and supplies into the gold mining country, and thus increase the product of our mines enormously. Look, sir, at our financial affairs to-day. We are talking about coming to specie payments. In my judgment it is idle talk; and I am tired of reading the views of people on this subject that are pouring in upon us every day. I assert—and let gentlemen mark it and see if I am not right—that we cannot resume specie payment inside of five years without bringing on a crisis in this country. We have got to prepare for it. The productions of the South must be increased. We must have more exports; we must import less. I say we cannot resume specie payments in less than five years with safety; but as a means of coming to it by helping to make the balance of trade in our favor, the best thing we can do is to extend the Pacific railroad rapidly into the mining country, so that our people can go in there and increase the production of the precious metals; go into the plains and gather up the golden sands that have been washed from the mountains; go with heavy machinery into the regions where millions of tons of gold-bearing quartz rock are ready to be mined and crushed. With the additional facilities of railroads the production of those mines can be increased from $75,000,000 to two, three, or four hundred million dollars a year. So, then, instead of this being a burden upon the Treasury, it is the safest way of reaching specie payment.

The distinguished Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORRIS,] in his recent great speech, attempted to show that we had in this country four or five hundred million dollars of gold. I tell you, sir, it is a mistake. We have not much more than half that amount. We have it, it is true, in the mines, but not in circulation or in the banks or in the Treasury. But it is to enable us to have four or five hundred million dollars of gold in the country that I am in favor of opening the Pacific railroad. I want my friend from Illinois to say whether his hostility to protection and to the tariff has not something to do with his opposition to this bill? Is it because the iron to lay these roads is made in Pennsylvania? Is it because the chairs and spikes are made in Pennsylvania? Is it because the locomotives and cars to run upon the roads are built in Pennsylvania that we have encountered the hostility of my friend upon this measure? Mr. Speaker, I am for economy, but I want to get on the right track. I do not want five hundred miles of railroad built, and, for the sake of the $800,000 needed to complete it and make this connection, to throw it all away and render it useless; but after this short and important link is made I then desire to put a stop to increasing our indebtedness by adopting some other policy than issuing bonds.

Before I close I wish to ask my friend from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] where his great State would have been to-day without the land grants and aid to railroads to open and develop it? Where would have been his great city of Chicago had it not been for the land grants given to make their canal? I will also ask my friend, [Mr. PRICE,] the chairman of the committee, what would have been the condition of his State, Iowa, without the aid furnished by the Government to checker her territory with railroads? Had I time, I would try to show my friend from Illinois that his figures yesterday with regard to the value of lands granted to railroads were wild in the extreme. The idea of estimating the lands at five dollars per acre, while many of us have seen lands on the Pacific railroad that no man would give one cent per acre for hundreds of square miles; and if others have great value, was it not the construction of the road that gave it to them and doubled the value of the alternate sections for the Government? I will now yield to my colleague, [Mr. KELLEY.]

Mr. KELLEY. Before proceeding to discuss the bill before the House I ask leave to do what I have never done in eight years of congressional life—take two or three minutes for a personal explanation.

Mr. RANDALL. I shall object, unless I can have an opportunity of replying.

Mr. KELLEY. I shall have no objection to my colleague having the length of time that I occupy to reply to me.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I make no objection.

Mr. COVODE. Before my colleague proceeds I wish to say that it is my intention to let debate upon this bill run for a reasonable length of time, so as to allow its friends and opponents to be heard, and then I shall demand the previous question.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, near the close of the last session the House adopted a resolution instructing the Committee on Naval Affairs to inquire into the legality and regularity of the purchase of certain tools by Chief Engineer Zeller, of the Philadelphia navy-yard. The Naval Committee, under the instruction of that resolution, appointed a sub-committee of three of its members to proceed to Philadelphia and make the examination; which they did, collecting a large amount of testimony, and making a personal examination of the tools. The adjournment was too near to permit the preparation and presentation of a report, but when Congress reassembled the sub-committee was ready with its report, or nearly so, and submitted it to the committee, together with the voluminous testimony. The Naval Committee instructed the chairman of the sub-committee, myself, to make the report to the House, and ask that it be recommended and printed, so that each member of the Naval Committee could examine it during the recess, that we might be prepared to act upon it at the close of the recess. Accordingly, I was recognized by the Speaker, and made the motion, when, to my surprise, my colleague from the first district [Mr. RANDALL] objected. That was on the Wednesday preceding the holidays. Waiting until the Friday before the recess, I renewed the request for leave to report under the instructions of the committee, and my colleague from the Berks district, [Mr. GETZ,] in behalf of an absent colleague—I suppose my colleague from the first district—objected. Thus, the report and evidence could not be printed. I find in a paper yesterday, the Evening Telegraph of Philadelphia, an elaborately prepared article, evidently written by somebody familiar with all the facts connected with the purchases in question, in which the passage occurs which I will ask to have read at the Clerk's desk. It charges the committee with falsely aspersing the character of the engineer corps of the Navy, but with withholding the evidence in the case from the public while acting thus unworthily.

I make this statement simply to call attention to the fact that the committee have been diligent in their efforts to get the whole matter before Congress, and to the further fact that the committee is now meeting from day to day listening to the arguments of two able counsel employed by Chief Engineer Zeller and Mr. John Roach, and that they cannot again offer the report until the engineer, who is in that article said to be injured by our withholding the evidence, and the contractor, from whom he bought the tools, withdraw their counsel, or they conclude their very protracted arguments. I now ask the Clerk to read the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Without taking any sides in this quarrel, we merely desire to give a fair statement of the matter as it stands. If Chief Engineer Zeller is guilty of the charges brought against him he should be court-martialed and dismissed the service; if he is innocent, and is endeavoring to manage the affairs of his department in the navy-yard in the best interests of the Government, he is entitled to a complete and emphatic explanation."

"Having stirred up this matter, our Congressmen owe it to themselves and their constituents to make good their accusations to the letter. The case stands thus: Judge KELLEY has brought certain charges against the engineers of the yard, but he has as yet produced no evidence to support his statements. The engineers are supported by a large mass of sworn testimony from persons who are competent to judge in the matter. It now remains for the Committee on Naval Affairs to exhibit what evidence they have in their possession."

Mr. KELLEY. It will be perceived that the reason the whole matter is not before the country is that Mr. Zeller and Mr. Roach, of whom he bought the tools, are preventing it. That is all I desire to say; and now, in fulfillment of my agreement, I yield to my colleague, [Mr. RANDALL.]

Mr. RANDALL. I have for the first time heard this article read, and I have never seen it. I desire to reply simply to one point in my colleague's remarks, and that is to the point as to where my objection came in; and I will say to him and to the House that under similar circumstances I would do the same thing again. I will tell him why. The resolution to which he has referred was a resolution of inquiry got up by himself, as I believe, for no other purposes than those of a political character, to bear upon the recent election. Having utterly failed, as I believe, in his endeavors in that respect, he comes before this House and brings in what I am led to believe is a most unfair and unjust report—a report not in any manner approved by the committee. On the contrary, the committee are now considering the facts which he has represented, I think, in a partisan manner. I am told, and I really believe, that the investigation has been unfair. I have been told by men who have been examined before that committee that they were not allowed to give full answers to the questions propounded to them, but were stopped in the middle of sentences and not allowed to go on.

That is the reason that I objected. I want both sides to be heard before any man's character is taken away to suit the whims and caprices of any one.

Mr. STEVENS. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENS. I desire to say that the statements the gentleman has made—founded undoubtedly upon information he has received outside of this House—has no foundation in fact.

Mr. RANDALL. I can give the gentleman my authority.

Mr. STEVENS. No witness has been stopped in his answers before the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. I can produce, in print, the statement of a witness that he was not allowed to fully answer the questions put to him. That is the reason, and the only reason, why I objected. As that article says, if this man Zeller has been guilty of any misdemeanor let him be court-martialed and cashiered. But I have no idea that the character of a man who has served long years in the Navy shall be taken from him by any politician, be he a high one or a low one.

Mr. KELLEY. Very well; the country will now understand why the evidence is not before the House.

DENVER PACIFIC RAILWAY.

The House resumed the consideration of Senate bill No. 570, for a grant of land granting the right of way over the public lands to the Denver Pacific Railway and Telegraph Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I had not expected to take part to-day in the discussion of this bill, but will take the place, for a few minutes, of a gentleman who is indisposed but who expected to address the House at this time. I desire to correct some of the statements made yesterday by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN.] Though he does not definitely allege that this bill involves new land grants, yet that would be the impression made upon the mind of any one cursorily reading the report of his speech. Sir, this bill makes no new grant of land. Whether it will be passed or not, the Union Pacific Railway Company, eastern division, has a title to all the land referred to in this bill. But the bill authorizes the transfer by that company to the Denver Pacific Railway Company of the land along the line between Denver and the point of junction with the Union Pacific railway at Cheyenne. Therefore, all the arguments of the gentleman as to the amount of land granted and all his prayers to Congress to withhold further grants, are irrelevant to the question now before the House.

So, too, with regard to the details he gave us of the history of the early legislation relating to this road, and the contest with Mr. Larned, who claims to be its president. The litigation of Mr. Larned has been going on now for seven years, or rather his alleged claim has been proclaimed for that time. It has finally been brought before the Judiciary Committee of this House, and that committee, in a formal report, has told us that they have examined the matter, that there is nothing in it upon which Congress can act, and that it raises no question that cannot be decided in the courts. If the claim be not a mere black-mailing claim, as this company alleges it to be, I ask why, in the long series of years since it was first set up, has it never been carried into any civil court? I want to do what is right. I do not want either Congress or the people to be swindled, nor do I want Congress to be used as an instrument by which bad men may swindle the corporations created by Congress. Let Mr. Larned, if he has a legal claim, go to the courts and vindicate it. They are open to him, and have jurisdiction over the case he sets up, as the Committee on the Judiciary has told us.

Again, as to the value of the lands granted to this company, you are told by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN]—who hears me, though he is not upon the floor—that they amount in value to $23,000,000; and he read you, from the advertisements of the company, a glowing description of them. Sir, had this grant been made through entirely new lands the company might possibly have received the number of acres which the gentleman indicates. But they were not new lands; along the eastern end of the line, where the lands were really valuable, some settlements have been made. There were Indian reservations there. There were two or three Kansas towns, and the settlements concentrated about them.

And thus bodies of the choice acres from the most valuable part of the land grant were taken from them. The lands so glowingly advertised were bought by this company under compulsion of an act of Congress. They were bought from the Delaware Indians, and the price paid for them was $1 28 per acre; and that purchase was, as I have said, made under an act of Congress compelling the company to purchase them. The Pottawatomie reservation, embracing three hundred thousand acres more of the same lands, was offered to the company at the same price, and they declined it, having bought the Delaware lands simply because the law required them to make the purchase as part of the contract insisted upon by Congress.

The gentleman from Illinois, I know, did not mean to be unfair. No man honors more than I do his sturdy perseverance in guarding the Treasury; yet I cannot help seeing that in the vehemence of his nature he often takes partial and one-sided views; that having committed himself, not by public declaration but in his own convictions, to a given side of a question, he accepts as true any statement that seems to sustain his view. And so he would lead Congress and the country to believe that the entire body of land granted to this company was fairly described in that glowing advertisement. I turn to the testimony of one who is familiar with the land—one who has done as much to guard the Treasury of the country as the gentleman from Illinois, for his great deeds were largely instrumental in saving both the country and its Treasury. Let William T. Sherman say what is the value of a great part of these lands. I find, in a letter written by him on March 4, 1866, to General Grant, urging the completion of this road to Cheyenne Wells, this description of the lands:

"Without the aid of additional subsidy the road will, however, probably stop at Fort Wallace, which is in the midst of that wide tract of prairie devoid of wood, coal, and everything useful, except buffalo grass."

That is where it does stop; and, as if he feared he had not been sufficiently impressive on this point, he recurs to it, and says:

"Still, to them and to us the termination at Fort Wallace will be very awkward; because the point is simply nowhere, being a mere naked spot in a limitless wilderness."

Much of the land is not at the present time of any commercial value. The building of this road will give it value. The gentleman from Illinois says it is worth $23,000,000. In this assertion, Mr. Speaker, he gives us the most powerful argument I have yet heard for granting the limited subsidy proposed. The Government holds alternate sections along the line of the whole route, and before the road was built to Fort Wallace the most eastern of them were of little, and the rest of no market value. But as they alternate section by section, those held by the Government must also have become worth $23,000,000. Thus, by loaning its credit on a well secured mortgage to the amount of $6,300,000, the Government has in three years and a half added to the commercial value of a comparatively trivial part of its public lands more than twenty-three million dollars. If the Government had to pay every bond it would still, by this showing, be the gainer. But the bonds are adequately secured; and the company, by its earnings from Army transportation, has not only paid the interest on the bonds issued, but left in the hands of the Government the nucleus of a sinking fund for their absorption.

I argue this matter as a question of economy. I assume that U. S. Grant, William T. Sherman, Philip Sheridan, and Winfield S. Hancock know something about the land and the expenses of the Indian war, which seems to have become chronic. I take their letters as my guide. For waging the supplies of the Army and marching troops over the country penetrated by this road the cost would have been three or four times what the company has charged for carrying them with railroad expedition, and one dollar out of every two thus carried has been retained by the Government as a fund with which ultimately to extinguish the bonds, if these earnings shall amount, as they have hitherto done, to more than the interest upon them.

Sir, there are general considerations that influence me in taking my present position. Colorado and the whole Rocky mountain region of our country, that region which is cultivated by irrigation, can never be populously settled till we build railroads into it. In a new country, settlement is ever upon the water-courses. It was true, until railroads were built settlements followed natural highways—navigable water-courses.

A distinguished Senator from Nevada explained in my hearing that he was a member of the Naval Committee because he represented a State and a section of country that is without a navigable river, and in which a bateau would be of no use. The only way to induce population to go to that mountain country is to penetrate it with railroads. Give to Denver the opening door of the gold and silver-bearing region of our country, railroad connections with the northern and eastern States by the way of the Union Pacific railroad and with the central belt and southern States, by completing this road, and you give to emigrants the chance to pour into that region. The effect of railroads upon the prosperity of an interior State was strikingly illustrated by General Hiram Walbridge, in a recent address before the national convention of Boards of Trade, from which I make a brief extract, which will not be less pertinent because it relates to Illinois. General Walbridge said:

"The results achieved in a single State will be found, on examination, to be quite as striking as is the aggregate for the whole nation. There were in the State of Illinois in 1851 two hundred and fifty miles of railway, the cost of which was about seven million and a half dollars. The tonnage of these roads, only just opened, could not have exceeded one hundred thousand tons, having a value, say, of $15,000,000. At the close of 1867 there were three thousand two hundred and fifty miles of railroad in operation in the State, having a tonnage traffic of at least five million tons, possessing a value of at least $750,000,000. The cost of the roads equaled $130,000,000. The value of the commerce transported over them in one year equaled very nearly six times their cost. In 1851 the number of pounds of merchandise transported by these roads equaled about two hundred pounds per head of population. In 1867 the tonnage transported exceeded four thousand pounds, or two tons per head. The value of the tonnage per head in 1851 was about fifteen dollars; in 1867 it was equal to $330 per head. This unexampled increase was wholly due to the construction of railroads, as there has in the mean time been a very large increase in the tonnage on the water-courses of the State. It will be borne in mind that the tonnage of railroads of this State consists almost entirely of the products of agriculture, which will bear transportation for only a comparatively small distance over ordinary roads. These products are now forwarded, on an average, twelve hundred miles before reaching a market."

"The population of Illinois now makes one fifteenth of that of the whole country. It now defrays one fifteenth of the whole burdens of the General Government. Its proportion of the Federal taxes equals $24,000,000 annually. Its ability to pay this vast sum is almost entirely due to the railroads that have been constructed within it during the past fifteen years. Toward their construction the Federal Government never contributed a penny. It did, however, in 1850 make a valuable land grant to the State in favor of the Illinois Central railroad, which secured the speedy construction of this great work and gave a wonderful impulse to the construction of other important lines. The additional price charged for reserved lands yielded to the national Treasury the same sum that would have been realized if the grant had not been made."

What has been done for Illinois with great advantage to the whole country can be done for its immense gold-bearing region, and with greater general benefit. By lending this company the comparatively small amount of credit needed we will give people and capital a chance to go there, and stimulate the creation of a system of local roads extending from Denver through the valleys which surround it. But without such aid this never will be done, or not for many years.

The gentleman from Illinois queried as to whether the subsidy proposed is $16,000 a mile or $32,000. The law fixes that. Sixteen thousand dollars a mile is all that can be given east of the Rocky mountains, and the point at which the Rocky mountains begin has already been adjudged. It is at Cheyenne, a point two hundred and seventy-five miles west of Cheyenne Wells; to which Sherman and Sheridan and Hancock and the quartermaster general desire us to enable the company to build this road. Therefore, the subsidy asked for is $16,000 a mile, or $800,000 in all; and I believe that had this bill been passed at the last session of Congress it would now be a matter of absolute economy to the Government. The expense of carrying all the freight that goes by line No. 2, except to two small forts, and all which goes by the northern route toward Denver would have been reduced two thirds if this road had been built as contemplated, as is shown by the letters of General Easton, quartermaster of the military division.

Now, sir, this $800,000 of subsidy is to aid build more than fifty-four miles, on which the bonds are to be a lien. It is to give effective power to those who already have land grants for the purpose to build three hundred and thirty odd miles of road. By giving them this subsidy of $800,000 you will make it clear to capitalists that any private capital they put into the road will become productive. You will make it apparent to the people of Denver that they are to have a through connection to the Atlantic by two main roads, and to the Pacific by one. You will make it clear to the capitalists of St. Louis that the branch which terminates, as Sherman shows you, in a limitless wilderness without wood or coal or water, is to be a through route connecting Denver and Cheyenne with St. Louis, Chicago, and San Francisco, and you will enable the company to obtain the capital with which to make a road all the way through and give value to their own lands and the alternate sections of the Government. But, sir, it involves even a higher economy than that.

Mr. PRICE. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. KELLEY. I will yield for a question, but not for a speech.

Mr. PRICE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] whether he does not know that in July, 1866, this Union Pacific, Eastern Division, Company came here and asked Congress to allow them to diverge from the line fixed by the act of Congress, and run up the Smoky Hill route, and agreeing, if allowed to do so, that no greater subsidy in bonds would be asked for than would be allowed them if they made the connection at the one hundredth meridian, as fixed by the original law; and that, if permitted to do so, they would make the connection with the Union Pacific railroad at a point not further than fifty miles west of the meridian of Denver? And whether a law was not passed at that time in exact accordance with that request, which law is in force at this day?

Mr. KELLEY. I do not propose to give up the whole of my time to the gentleman for the purpose of having the debate in the Senate read. I propose to go on and answer the question in my own way and to the best of my ability.

Mr. PRICE. It is the debate in the House.

Mr. KELLEY. As I understand this road was originally to run up the Republican fork, though it had the right to take its present route. It could not have the Smoky Hill route surveyed because of an Indian war, and it was compelled to select its route, limited as it was by the theater of that war. The law required that the map should be filed by a certain day, and it filed one of a route on the Republican fork. But when the war ceased and it became possible to survey the Smoky Hill valley, it came to Congress and asked permission to change its route, because the Secretary of the Interior held that the filing of the map settled the route absolutely. The appeal to Congress was from a ruling that was purely technical and was believed to be subversive of the interests of the Government as well as of the country.

General Sheridan, in a letter to General Grant of May 2, 1868, says:

"I know that peculiarly it would be to the advantage of the Government to help this road; certainly as far as Fort Wallace, and also to Fort Lyon. But in addition, it almost substantially ends our Indian troubles by the moral effect which it exercises over the Indians, and the facility which it gives the military in controlling them."

And again:

"No one, unless he has personally visited this country, can well appreciate the great assistance which this railroad gives to economy, security, and effectiveness in the administration of military affairs in this department."

If these statements, and that of General Sherman to which I have referred, are correct, it is a matter of great economy, not only of money but of life, that the road should be on this route, but that it should, even though we have to help it by a loan of credit, go on to Cheyenne Wells, where there are wood and water and coal. A railroad to that point will economize the resources of the Government in every respect.

But, sir, the great matter of economy in this would be its effect upon the Indian war. General Sheridan tells us that the construction of this road would practically terminate it. Along the three hundred miles already built there has been no Indian war. Not a rail has been disturbed. No Indian war has disturbed the Union Pacific railroad; but within the fifty-four miles for which this subsidy is asked Indian hostilities prevail. Traveling from the present point of terminus, Fort Wallace to Denver, the whole line is marked with new-made graves of the victims of Indian butchery. Build this road and travel and trade will pass as safely from Fort Wallace to Denver as they now pass from the initial point of this road to its terminus in the "limitless wilderness."

How much are we spending every year among the Indian tribes near to the point to which we ask to carry this road? Far more than the entire subsidies asked. The granting of this subsidy will, by stopping Indian hostilities, save in one year more than the principal sum; while the saving in transportation, as is shown in the letters from the quartermaster, General Easton, will be more than the interest on the whole amount of bonds issued to this company. As a measure of humanity, as a measure of economy, as a means for developing the mineral regions of the country, I believe that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURNE] would better subserve his great purpose of protecting the Treasury and restoring the credit of the country by advocating than by opposing the bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. VAN TRUMP addressed the House. Without completing his remarks he gave way to Mr. KERK, who moved that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By the SPEAKER: A memorial of the Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, praying that the fifty per cent. clause of the bankrupt law for the benefit of creditors shall not be further extended.

By Mr. HARDING: The petition of Otis Hull, a soldier of the ninety-ninth regiment of Illinois volunteers, for relief.

By Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania: The petition and document of Ellen Keener, asking for $100 bounty.

By Mr. MOORE: A petition of owners and masters of vessels of Alexandria, Coon river, Norfolk, and Richmond, Virginia, with accompanying papers, praying the intervention of Congress to protect all engaged in navigation from illegal exactions by State and municipal corporations.

Also, petitions from owners and masters of vessels of New London, Connecticut, and Port Republic, New Jersey, praying the intervention of Congress to protect all engaged in navigation from illegal exactions by State and municipal corporations.

By Mr. ORTH: A petition of citizens of Delphi, Indiana, on the subject of tax on manufactures.

By Mr. HOLBROOK: A memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Idaho, asking an appropriation for the survey of the boundaries of the Fort Hall and Nez Perces Indian reservations in the Territory of Idaho.

By Mr. PRICE: The petition of C. F. Johnson, for protection by Government of loyal citizens in the State of Mississippi.

By Mr. SPALDING: The petition of J. Whitesey Walton and others, in relation to the northern Pacific railroad.

By Mr. STEWART: The petition of Wellington & Cox, P. W. Engs & Co., Park & Tilford, and others, merchants of New York city, for amendment of section fifty-six, act July 20, 1868.

Also, a petition of New York merchants for reduction of tax on sales of liquors, and making all taxes on sales of merchandise uniform.

By Mr. STEVENS: The petition of Richard M. Bouton and Harriet F. Fisher, for compensation for the exclusive use by the Government of the United States of their invention for making and charging percussion caps.

By Mr. WELKER: The petition of Caroline A. Trofford, for a pension.

Also, the petition of Edward Hayes, of company F, eighty-ninth Massachusetts volunteers, for pension.

Also, the petition of Fisk Mills, asking the examination and adoption of his group of statuary, representing the emancipation of slavery, for the pediment of the south wing of the Capitol.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 21, 1869.

Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with an estimate of the funds that will be required to enable the Indian department to relieve the immediate and pressing wants of the Sisseton and Wahpeton Sioux Indians, on the reservations at Lake Traverse and Devil's Lake, Dakota Territory, and also the amount necessary for the next fiscal year to properly care for them and to enable them to commence farming operations at the earliest day practicable; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, submitting an estimate of an appropriation required for supplying deficiencies in the appropriations made for the Sioux of Dakota, the Arickarees, Gros Ventres, Mandans, Crows, and Yanktons, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, and for subsistence purchased for the Poncas; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1549) to restrict and regulate the franking privilege was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of citizens of New Jersey, praying that women be granted the right of suffrage; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of H. V. Boynton, asking for the extension of the eight-hour law to other than Government employes; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Robert D. Brown, praying for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of N. P. Young, praying the removal of the political disabilities imposed on him by acts of Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VAN WINKLE presented the petition of Charles W. Statham, of Virginia, praying the removal of the political disabilities imposed on him by acts of Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. POMEROY presented a petition of citizens of Ohio, praying that women be granted the right of suffrage; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Connecticut, praying that women be granted the right of suffrage; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SAWYER presented the petition of Meta Nimitz, praying the restoration of property sold for taxes; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 8.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope the morning business will be gone through with first.

Mr. STEWART. I will give way to the morning business after the resolution is taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent to consider the motion at this time. Does any Senator object?

Several SENATORS. What is it?

Mr. STEWART. It is the constitutional amendment.

Mr. VICKERS. I have a number of reports to make.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When Senators rise to offer morning business the Chair must consider that they object to the consideration of other business. Reports of committees are in order.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of J. H. Merrill, a captain in what was known as the naval brigade, praying compensation for his services, reported adversely thereon, and moved that it be indefinitely postponed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of J. B. Braden, William S. Comb, and S. P. and P. F. Hodges, praying compensation for articles furnished by them upon a requisition of the military authorities in September, 1862, to put one of the grist mills at New Ulm, Minnesota, in running order, reported adversely thereon, and moved that it be indefinitely postponed; which was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 728) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," reported it with an amendment.

Mr. VICKERS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 745) to repeal the usury laws of the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 743) to provide a penalty for violating the laws of Congress or the ordinances of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and of the levy court of the county of Washington, District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to take up and pass Senate bill No. 781, simply authorizing the landing of a telegraphic wire on the shores of the United States. It will not take a moment.

Mr. NYE. I hope we shall be allowed to go through with the morning business. I desire to introduce a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the motion cannot be entertained at this time.

Mr. NYE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 815) granting a pension to Julia Whistler; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CHANDLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 816) to regulate the exaction of tonnage tax upon Spanish vessels; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWARD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 817) supplemental to an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for the services of George Morell in adjusting titles to land in Michigan; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 818) to regulate the payment of the tonnage tax; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. POOL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 819) for the relief of William A. Moore, of North Carolina; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWARD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 820) additional to an act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget's sound, on the Pacific coast, by the northern route; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONKLING asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 821) to prohibit secret sales or purchases of gold or bonds on account of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROSS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 822) authorizing the Secretary of War to pay certain certificates issued for fortification purposes in Lawrence, Kansas; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

INDIANS NORTH OF NEBRASKA.

Mr. POMEROY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to furnish the Senate, if in his judgment the same be not incompatible with the public interest, with a copy of the report of Brevet Major General William S. Harney, (as commander of the Indian district north of the State of Nebraska,) concerning the character and conduct of the Sioux and other Indians congregated and settled under the stipulations of treaties made by the peace commission, and executed during the year 1868.

TRANSPORTATION OF PRISONERS.

Mr. SUMNER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be instructed to consider whether any further legislation is needed to regulate the transportation of prisoners convicted and sentenced in the District of Columbia when on their way to some distant prison where the sentence is to be performed.

ROBERT COLLEGE.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, any recent correspondence on file in the Department of State in relation to the establishment of the Robert College at Constantinople.

STATE PASSENGER TAXES.

Mr. MORTON. I move to take up, for the purpose of reference, Senate bill No. 798, to punish the collection of illegal taxes on passengers.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To what committee does the Senator move to refer the bill?

Mr. MORTON. To the Committee on the Judiciary; and on that motion I desire to be heard for a very short time. That the Senate may understand the character of the bill, I ask the Secretary to read it before I make the few remarks that I intend to submit this morning. The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill to punish the collection of illegal taxes on passengers.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it shall be unlawful for any officer or agent of any railroad or other corporation created by authority of any State to pay to the government of said State, or to any agent or officer thereof, any sum of money as a tax upon passengers or for the transportation of passengers into said State or out of it, or across its territory, and that any agent or officer of any corporation as aforesaid paying money as aforesaid to any State government, or to any officer or agent thereof, for the purposes aforesaid, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000 nor less than $1,000.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That any person pretending to act by or under the authority of any State who shall collect or receive from any person or persons, or from any railroad or other corporations, any sum of money on behalf of such State as a tax, price, or condition, upon passengers coming into, going out of, or through such State, or for the transportation of passengers into, out of, or through such State, shall forfeit and pay to the United States the sum of $2,000, to be collected by action of debt.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the circuit and district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction for the trial and punishment of all misdemeanors and actions arising under the first and second sections of this act, and the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction in all cases arising under this act.

Mr. MORTON addressed the Senate. [See Appendix.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on referring the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President—

Mr. SHERMAN. The morning hour has expired.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired. The bill will be referred, however, if there is to be no debate upon it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. There is to be further debate if I can get the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business of yesterday is before the Senate.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I desire to have an opportunity of answering the argument which has been made by the Senator from Indiana before this bill is referred. The argument, as well as the bill introduced, is in aid of the railroad interests of New Jersey and antagonistic to the State of New Jersey. The railroads will be very much obliged to Congress for passing a law that their taxes shall not be collected, while they possess the franchises with which they are now invested. As this bill directly affects the treasury of the State that I in part represent, I desire the opportunity of being heard either now or on some other occasion. I am ready to proceed now to discuss the question.

Several SENATORS. Go on.

Mr. CATTELL. I hope permission will be given to my colleague to proceed with his remarks at this time, and I therefore make that motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust that we shall go on with the regular order of business. I have no objection to the Senator making his speech at any time; but the railroad bill is now the regular order, and I hope we shall go on with it.

Mr. SUMNER. I will ask the Senator from Ohio whether the railroad bill cannot be put aside informally without losing its place, so that the Senator from New Jersey can make his reply?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not at all necessary to do that. The Senator from New Jersey can submit his remarks on the railroad bill.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. No; I will make them on this bill.

Mr. CATTELL. I hope permission will be given to my colleague to proceed. The somewhat unusual course of making an argument upon the reference of a bill has been taken to-day, and as the State which I in part represent is directly interested, I trust that my colleague will have an opportunity to reply now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I certainly have no disposition to prevent his replying now, if it can be done by unanimous consent informally without displacing the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business can be passed over informally by unanimous consent. Does any Senator object?

Mr. GRIMES. I object, because I think the bill now under consideration is of a great deal more public importance than the one which comes up as the unfinished business. Therefore I am ready to vote to continue the consideration of the bill now before us.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to the unfinished business being laid aside informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is objected to, and it can only be done by a motion.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to lay aside the pending order and all prior orders with a view to continue the consideration of the bill introduced by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us understand each other. The Senator from Iowa now states distinctly that he makes this motion in hostility to the pending bill for the charter of railroad companies. I have no objection to its being laid aside informally so as to enable the Senator from New Jersey to reply to the Senator from Indiana; but, as a matter of course, the postponement of the bill at this time for any purpose of that kind is its defeat. I trust, therefore, that it will not be postponed for any such purpose. If it is done it is a substantial defeat of the bill for this session. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SUMNER. Before the vote is taken, I wish to appeal again to the Senator from Ohio to allow the unfinished business to be laid aside informally.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not the slightest objection in the world to that. I have indicated my willingness to lay it aside informally, but the Senator from Iowa is not willing that it should be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That question has been settled.

Mr. GRIMES. I wish to say that the objection I have to allowing it to be laid aside informally is simply because it gives the Senator from Ohio entire control of the legislation and action of this body during the day. If we lay it aside informally to allow one Senator to speak, then it is at his option whether it shall be laid aside for another Senator. I object to that kind of proceeding. I want the Senator from New Jersey to have an opportunity to be heard, and then let everybody have a chance to bring up his business as well as the Senator from Ohio, after the Senator from New Jersey shall have concluded.

Mr. SHERMAN. I want it distinctly understood that the Senator from Iowa objects now to hearing the Senator from New Jersey on this bill, a very ordinary courtesy which is commonly granted. I have no more power over the matter than anybody else; I do not exercise any power. I could object to the Senator from New Jersey going on, but I do not choose to do it. The Senator from Iowa does; and for the purpose of displacing this bill and preventing any vote being had at this session upon it, because that is the effect as a hostile movement to the bill that is pending and now the unfinished business, this motion is made which will certainly prevent the passage of the bill if it is agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. I feel great anxiety for the passage of the bill introduced by the Senator from Ohio; but for that reason I prefer that we should proceed with the question now before the Senate. The decision upon the bill introduced by the Senator from Indiana will in a great measure affect the vote, in my estimation, upon the bill presented by the Senator from Ohio. It is a question belonging to it. If we do not act upon it now we shall have the question about the interference with States presented on every occasion with regard to the great question, which is the greatest before us, in my opinion, of extending railroads by this Government. I am satisfied that we shall gain time and do good to the passage of the bill introduced on the subject of railroads by now hearing the Senator from New Jersey, because he will discuss the whole question; and I take it unless we do so we shall have this whole question with regard to the rights of the States and of the General Government to interfere with passengers in the States brought before us. I shall vote to allow the Senator from New Jersey to be heard.

Mr. ANTHONY. I voted with the Senator from Ohio yesterday to take up this bill, and I desire to see it keep its place; but, at the same time, I wish to accommodate the Senator from New Jersey. There is no difficulty at all in reconciling this difference. Let the bill of the Senator from Ohio remain the order of the day as it is now, and let the Senator from New Jersey reply to the Senator from Indiana upon that bill. It is a cognate subject, and there is no sort of impropriety in the speech being made on that bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not the slightest objection to that.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let the Senator from New Jersey have the floor and discuss the subject on that bill.

Mr. POMEROY. I desire that the Senator from New Jersey should have an opportunity to reply to the remarks of the Senator from Indiana; but I do not want anything done by common consent. I want a vote.

Mr. GRIMES. That is the point.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Senator from New Jersey has the floor he has the right to reply without anybody's consent.

Mr. POMEROY. No, sir. It is now one o'clock, and the unfinished business comes up, superseding the bill on which he desires to speak.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is before the Senate, unless displaced by motion or by common consent.

Mr. SHERMAN. And the Senator from New Jersey has the floor.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator from New Jersey can make his reply to the speech of the Senator from Indiana with great propriety on the bill now before the Senate, and therefore I shall not vote to displace it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have only to say that the remarks I have to make would have been well nigh concluded had I been permitted to go on. I do not propose at all to discuss what is known as the air-line bill, but carefully to avoid the discussion of the question whether Congress has or has not the right to charter railroads in States, and also to avoid the other question, whether, if it has the right, it is expedient to exercise it. Those questions I shall steer clear of, and confine myself, if possible, to defending the treasury of the State of New Jersey.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on postponing the order of the day and all prior orders for the purpose of continuing the debate on the bill under consideration.

Mr. SUMNER. I desire to remark that I have great anxiety to listen to my friend from New Jersey. I feel that he has a right to be heard now, but I am unwilling to displace the regular order for that purpose. If it comes to a vote I shall vote for the regular order.

Mr. CONKLING. I should be glad if the Senator from New Jersey could have his convenience answered without the formality of a vote upon the question now pending, or upon any question. That seems, however, not to be possible. The bill, which is the unfinished business, presents questions which every member of the Senate can see are special in their relations to the Senators from New Jersey, and the honorable Senator, who very naturally wishes to reply to the animadversions of the Senator from Indiana, avows an indisposition to take part now in the discussion of the air-line railroad bill, as it is called. He has his reasons for that, and they are good, undoubtedly. Now, the question is whether he shall be prevented at this time from submitting the remarks he wishes to submit, or whether he shall be compelled to submit them by way of discussion of a bill the discussion of which he frankly avows his desire to avoid. Thus it seems to me that a very palpable question of courtesy is presented to the Senate, because it is practically whether this business shall be laid aside by a vote or whether the Senator from New Jersey shall be prevented altogether in his purpose. He chooses, for reasons of his own, not to debate the bill which is the unfinished business. Then I feel constrained, as a matter of courtesy, to vote that he have the only remaining opportunity, and I shall vote in that way.

Mr. SHERMAN. I intend, so far as I can, to prevent the bill providing for railroad facilities from Washington being defeated on a question of precedence. There is no man in this Senate who would do more on a question of courtesy for the Senator from New Jersey than I would. Now, the Senator from New Jersey can, without displacing this bill at all, go on and say all he desires to say on the bill of the Senator from Indiana, because it is germane to the identical question before the Senate. The question of the power of taxation by a State of a railroad is intimately connected with this very subject of debate. But if, under a desire to give to the Senator from New Jersey an opportunity to make his reply to the Senator from Indiana, an attempt is made to crowd off this bill and prevent the action of the Senate on a question of such vital importance, then it is no longer a question of courtesy.

Mr. STEWART. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that the very question of taxation by the States is covered by his bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly; and the Senator from New Jersey can go on and discuss that question now without the slightest objection. He says he does not wish to discuss the power of Congress to charter railroads. Very well. But the question of taxation is in this bill also, because the bill contains a provision that the new company shall not be taxed by the State of New Jersey except upon property owned by it in that State, so that the very question of the mode and manner and power to tax by a State is in this bill. Therefore there is no reason for postponing it. The Senator from New Jersey may very properly decline to discuss portions of this bill, such as the question of the power of Congress to build a railroad; but under the bill now before the Senate he can discuss the question of taxation as far as he desires. If the Senator should be allowed to make his speech on the bill of the Senator from Indiana, and then a vote should be taken on the question of the reference of that bill, the result would be that this railroad bill, which after great labor I have called before the attention of the Senate, will be displaced on a point of etiquette. Certainly, the Senator from New Jersey does not wish to place the friends of the bill in that position. If he wishes to make his remarks on this bill he can do so, and they will be perfectly germane to it. But if this is a hostile movement to the bill—and it is clearly so, I think—it seems to me the Senate ought to vote it down. No friend of the bill has objected to the Senator from New Jersey proceeding. The Senator from Iowa does it clearly as an antagonistic motion, availing himself of the additional strength he can get on a question of courtesy to defeat the bill. That is the purpose. We are all advised now, and can vote understandingly. Of course, he has a right to do it.

Mr. CATTELL. I apprehend it is a question of taste with my colleague whether he will prefer to speak on the question before the Senate with the bill before it, or to address the Senate on that subject with an entirely different bill before the body. I understand from him that he has no disposition to press himself upon the attention of the Senate at this time, and especially as it has been resisted by the friends of the other bill, and that therefore he is willing to ask the Senate to listen to him in the morning hour to-morrow, and if that shall be the pleasure of the Senate it will be agreeable to him.

Mr. SUMNER and others. Very well.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio to postpone his bill for half an hour.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not the slightest objection to that, so that it is not postponed generally to lose its place. The Senator from Iowa made the motion.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will ask the Senate to allow me to-morrow morning in the morning hour to make what few remarks I have to make.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the motion to postpone withdrawn?

Mr. GRIMES. If the Senator from New Jersey prefers to speak to-morrow I withdraw my motion. I wish to say, however, that the Senator from Ohio has no authority for declaring that the motion I made to postpone this bill was an antagonistic or hostile motion. I have given no expression on the floor of the Senate to any opinions I may entertain as to the passage of this bill or the propriety of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator says it was not, I will withdraw that remark with great pleasure. I took it to be so.

Mr. GRIMES. When the proper time comes I shall express what views I have on the subject; but I prefer doing it myself, and not permitting the Senator from Ohio to become my mouthpiece.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business of yesterday is the bill (S. No. 554) to promote commerce among the States and to cheapen the transportation of the mails and military and naval stores.

SUFFRAGE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

Mr. WILLIAMS. With the consent of the Senator who has charge of that bill, I wish to give notice that when the amendment to the Constitution reported by the Committee on the Judiciary comes up for consideration I shall propose, as a substitute for the new article they offer, the following:

Congress shall have power to abolish or modify any restrictions upon the right to vote or hold office prescribed by the constitution or laws of any State.

I move that this proposed amendment be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 721) to increase the pension of Amos Armstrong, who was wounded in the battle of Queenstown, during the war of 1812;

A bill (H. R. No. 1695) granting a pension to Charles Mans, of Lewisburg, Pennsylvania;

A bill (H. R. No. 1745) for the relief of the estate of Isaac Philips, deceased, who was a private in the revolutionary war;

A bill (H. R. No. 1747) granting a pension to George Givens, a soldier of the war of 1812;

A bill (H. R. No. 1748) granting a pension to William Adams, a soldier of the war of 1812;

A bill (H. R. No. 1749) granting a pension to Daniel Hauser, a citizen of North Carolina and a soldier of the war of 1812; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1746) for the removal of disabilities from the persons therein named.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, in favor of the transfer of the control and management of the Indians from the Department of the Interior to the War Department; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, submitting a statement of the contracts and purchases of the ordnance department during the year 1868; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Commissioner of Patents, transmitting his annual report for the year ending December 31, 1868, upon the state and condition of the Patent Office; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the house of representatives of the Territory of New Mexico, in favor of an appropriation for increasing the salaries of the two translators in the employment of that Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, submitting a statement of the contracts made by the quartermaster's department during the last six months of the year 1868; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting a draft of a resolution declaring the collection of a penalty of fifty per cent. of the direct tax in certain cases illegal; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills received from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. No. 721) to increase the pension of Amos Armstrong, who was wounded in the battle of Queenstown during the war of 1812;

A bill (H. R. No. 1695) granting a pension to Charles Mans, of Lewisburg, Pennsylvania;

A bill (H. R. No. 1745) for the relief of the estate of Isaac Philips, deceased, who was a private in the revolutionary war;

A bill (H. R. No. 1747) granting a pension to George Givens, a soldier of the war of 1812;

A bill (H. R. No. 1748) granting a pension to William Adams, a soldier of the war of 1812; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1749) granting a pension to Daniel Hauser, a citizen of North Carolina and a soldier of the war of 1812.

The bill (H. R. No. 1746) for the removal of disabilities from the persons therein named was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CHARTERING OF RAILROAD COMPANIES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 554) to promote commerce among the States and to cheapen the transportation of the mails and military and naval stores.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The select Committee on Railroads in the States reported some amendments to this bill which have not yet been read. They will now be read.

The Chief Clerk read the first amendment, which was in section one, line five, to insert the name of "John P. Kennedy;" in lines seven and eight the names of "A. T. Stewart," "Jesse Hoyt," and "Marshall O. Roberts;" in line ten the name of "John M. Forbes;" in line twelve to strike out "Shouler" and insert "Schouler;" and in lines thirteen and fourteen to insert the name of "William Dennison."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twenty-one of section three to strike out the word "one" and insert "three," so as to read:

And whenever an amount of not less than $3,000,000 shall have been subscribed in good faith to said capital stock.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section ten, line fourteen, to strike out the words "have the right to;" and after "freights," in line fifteen, to strike out "to the city of Washington;" so as to read:

Such connecting lines shall sell through tickets, check through baggage, and transport freights in such manner and upon such terms as are customary between connecting lines of railway.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section eleven, after the word "act," in line seven, to insert "and in which the validity of any franchise conferred by this act is denied;" so as to read:

That if any suit or proceeding, either in law or equity, or any criminal prosecution shall be commenced in any State court against the New York and Washington railway company, their successors or assigns, or any person authorized or employed by them, for any act done, or omitted to be done, in and about the construction of the railway hereby authorized under and by virtue of this act, and in which the validity of any franchise conferred by this act is denied, &c., the case may be removed to the United States Circuit Court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section fourteen, line five, to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to read:

It shall be fully completed and equipped in two years from and after the election of the first board of directors.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VICKERS. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio who reported this measure and opened the discussion has seen fit to introduce subjects to influence the judgment by exciting the prejudices of Senators. I regret that he did not confine himself to the subject-matter of the bill and its legitimate relations. This bill is to incorporate three railroad companies to construct railroads through several States without their consent, and from the drift of the argument of the Senator from Ohio the constitutional power of Congress is large enough, or may be expanded, to embrace every need that may arise in our future history. The Constitution, which our fathers made with limited and defined powers, is now, according to the construction of the Senator, endowed with attributes and capacities commensurate with the wants and circumstances of the country at any period of her existence. That I may not do the Senator injustice, I quote from his speech:

"Yet that the general principles and powers they have ingrafted in the Constitution, like the teachings of the Bible, meet all changes, all time, all diversities of condition, wealth and population, and applied with a liberal and fair construction regulate agencies and things of which they had no conception, in harmony with their central idea of a local government for local purposes merely, affecting only the people of the State; a national government for general purposes, affecting the people of different States."

Surely such an accommodating Constitution can never require amendment, and the provision to amend was gratuitously inserted. But what would Alexander Hamilton think, if he could visit the country and in the Senate Chamber hear the annunciation of doctrines like those which have been uttered by the Senator from Ohio, while, with the Federalist in his hand and looking at the forty-fifth number, he read that which he had written while on earth:

"The powers delegated by the proposed Constitution to the Federal Government are few and defined. Those which are to remain in the State governments are numerous and indefinite. The former will be exercised principally on external objects, as war, peace, negotiation, and foreign commerce; with which last the power of taxation will, for the most part, be connected. The powers reserved to the several States will extend to all the objects which, in the ordinary course of affairs, concern the lives, liberty, and properties of the people, and the internal order, improvement, and prosperity of the State. The operations of the Federal Government will be most extensive and important in times of war and danger; those of the State governments, in times of peace and security."

The subject under the deliberation of the Senate, and the powers claimed for the General Government by the bill, are of the most momentous consequences to the States and to the proper adjustment of rights between the two forms or systems of government. In a state of insurrection or war which may imperil the existence of the national Government, in some great and unexampled emergency, the temporary exercise of doubtful or unconstitutional power may be tolerated, because of the importance of the ends to be accomplished; but in a period of profound peace, after the din of battle and shock of arms, and when the Government is overcoming its diversion from the line of constitutional power—is adjusting itself to its normal and true condition, to its healthful action and proper sphere in the wonderful and grand system of complex governments under which we live—it is no time to be trying experiments, or to bring into collision the constitutional functions of the States and of the nation, and which must necessarily involve a conflict of jurisdiction and lead to litigation and discontent. As a mere question of expediency it would be judicious to defer action upon doubtful questions till matters of vastly more moment to the public shall be determined. The subjects of the finances and retrenchment, of specie payments, the partial relief of the people from enormous and oppressive taxation, and our Indian relations, are of vital interest to the country, and claim the primary attention of Congress. The session is to be limited, and after these measures shall be considered and the appropriation bills passed there will no time be left for our action upon questions of internal improvement.

It is now proposed to exert the alarming and dangerous power of making or authorizing to be made railroads through the States, to take their soil and construct works of this nature with all their appurtenances without their consent. It is claimed, according to the title of the bill, under the general authority to promote commerce among the States. A power to regulate does not imply a power to create. On the contrary, it refers to something that exists; a substantial, existing thing, having a tangible form; but which for the ends of good Government may need such restraint or control as shall best subserve the purposes and interests of the people. To regulate is to adjust by rule or method; to reduce to order, to dispose according to order. The thing to be regulated must have form, dimensions, substance, before the power to regulate can be exercised. The powers of the Federal Government are few, definite, and explicit; they are confined within narrow limits, and all other powers are denied by the Constitution except such as are incidental and absolutely essential to execute the specific powers.

The power to borrow money necessarily involves that of executing the necessary securities for its payment; the last is a consequence of the former. But the power to borrow does not imply that of creating a national bank as means of providing for its payment. The one is not the natural or necessary sequence of the other. To provide and maintain a navy would confer no such power. The power to raise and support armies is expressly given; then follows, as a consequence, the power to make rules and regulations for the Army. But under the power to regulate commerce it is proposed to exercise a substantive and distinct power—to enter upon the territory of a State, to take its soil by the agency of corporations without its consent, and then to regulate, as a consequence, the trade and commerce thus created; to create under the power to regulate, and then to regulate the thing created under the general power to regulate commerce. By this means the incidental power is made of primary importance, of the same character as a specific grant, and possessing all the elements of an original, express power, with implied and ancillary powers.

In the case of Gibbons against Ogden, in 9 Wheaton's Reports, 196, referred to by my colleague, Judge Marshall, in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court, said:

"It is the power to regulate, that is, to prescribe the rule by which commerce is to be governed."

Not the power to create commerce by building of ships, canals, and railroads, but to prescribe rules and regulations by which commerce is to be governed, just as rules and regulations are prescribed for the armies of the United States. Why, Congress cannot establish a ferry, whether it be between different parts of the same State or between different States. In the case of Conway and others against Taylor's executors, in 1 Black's Reports, the Supreme Court held that the power to establish and regulate ferries is not included in the power of the Federal Government to "regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes;" also "that the authority to regulate ferries has never been claimed by the General Government, has always been exercised by the States, never by Congress, and is undoubtedly a part of the immense mass of undelegated powers reserved to the States respectively."

So jealous were the States of their rights that they insisted, as a measure of precaution, upon the adoption of the ninth and tenth articles of amendments to the Constitution; by the ninth, that the enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people, and by the tenth article that the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the States respectively or to the people. The Constitution speaks of the enumeration of certain rights, of a definite and distinct enumeration, and then denies to the General Government any other power. Nothing can be clearer than that the intention of the organic law is to guard against constructive power, and to restrain the exercise of implied powers to the natural and necessary execution of the powers granted, and without which they could not be used. But the power to regulate commerce has no natural or legitimate connection with the construction of railroads and canals in and without the consent of the States. The power was exercised of regulating commerce before railroads were known; it was fully exercised upon then existing objects; and the power to construct railroads as instruments of commerce never entered into the conception of the framers of the Constitution. Mr. Madison, one of the wisest of the Convention, and whose interpretations of the Constitution have always commanded the highest respect, in a letter to Reynold Chapman in 1831, to be found in the fourth volume of Madison's Works, page 148, writes:

"It may be remarked that Mr. Hamilton, in his report on the bank, when enlarging the range of construction to the utmost of his ingenuity, admitted that canals were beyond the sphere of Federal legislation."

And on page 149 he adds:

"Perhaps I ought not to omit the remark that although I concur in the defect of powers in Congress on the subject of internal improvements, my abstract opinion has been that in the case of canals particularly the power would have been properly vested in Congress."

Even General Hamilton, in his most latitudinarian construction of the Constitution, did not think that the general power to regulate commerce was elastic enough to be made to reach canals. In the Convention which framed the Constitution it was thought by some that canals would be greatly conducive to the extension of commerce; yet for fear that the insertion of the power might be the means of defeating the Constitution, it was purposely omitted.

The forty-second number of the Federalist, written by Mr. Madison, in speaking of the defect of power in the existing confederacy to regulate commerce between its several members, and of the proposed authority to do it in the Constitution, said:

"A very material object of this power was the relief of the States which import and export through other States from the improper contributions levied on them by the latter. Were these at liberty to regulate the trade between State and State, it must be foreseen that ways would be found out to load the articles of import and export, during the passage through their jurisdiction, with duties which would fall on the makers of the latter and the consumers of the former."

It will be seen that the commerce spoken of is that between the States, not in the States. Congress has not and never has claimed the power to interfere with commerce between different sections of the same State. This is virtually, if not expressly, conceded by the Senator from Ohio. It is only when trade is about passing from one State to another and through it that the power of Congress to regulate it is brought into action. It arises only and springs out of the extension of commerce from one to another State. From the quotation from the Federalist it will be discovered that the regulation of trade spoken of is to prevent improper contributions and exorbitant duties from being laid on goods carried from one to another State. As Congress was to be invested with the regulation of foreign commerce, and as the products of foreign countries would have to be exported from the cities on the sea-board to other States for consumption, it was proper that the power should be given to prevent imposition of high duties on goods sent to States and Territories remote from sea-ports and navigation. There was no other motive, no other reason, no other necessity for investing Congress with this power over commerce between the States; and we are not now, because of alleged inconveniences or advantages, to interpolate the Constitution or to stretch it to embrace powers which were never designed to be conferred.

But what is it to be regulated? Mr. Madison, in a letter to Professor Davis, and to be found in the works of the former, says:

"In citing the Constitution the word trade was put in the place of 'commerce,' the word 'foreign' made it synonymous with commerce. Trade and commerce are, in fact, used indiscriminately both in books and in conversation."

The regulation of trade is by duties and restraints, so as to encourage it between the States; not by building factories and engaging in manufacturing; not by constructing railroads and canals within the territory of States without their agency or consent, to take the lands of their people and pass them into the hands of strange corporations, which the Senator from Ohio admits act for their own interest. If railroads can be made through a State without its permission may not canals also be dug by the same authority? They are more appropriate instruments of commerce than railroads; they can transport articles of great bulk and value with more advantage. If there is not constitutional power to construct a canal, there can be none to make a railroad. Mr. Madison, the great expounder of the Constitution, in a letter to Edward Livingston in 1824, wrote:

"My impression with respect to the authority to make them (canals) may be the stronger perhaps (as I had occasion to remark as to the bank on its original discussion) from my recollection that the authority had been repeatedly proposed in the Convention and negatived, either as improper to be vested in Congress, or as a power not likely to be yielded by the States."

And in a letter to Martin Van Buren in 1826, upon the same subject, he writes:

"If it be thought best to make a constitutional grant of the entire power, either as proper in itself or made so by the moral certainty that it will be constructively assumed with the sanction of the national will and operate as an injurious precedent, the amendment cannot say less than that 'Congress may make roads and canals with such jurisdiction as the cases may require.'"

It thus appears that not only Mr. Madison was decidedly of opinion that no such power existed as to make canals, but that the subject was introduced into the Convention and discussed but always rejected, principally because it was deemed a power of such vast magnitude that the States would not ratify the Constitution if it was incorporated in it.

The honorable Senator from Ohio stated that the power of regulating commerce between the States had been exercised in the Wheeling bridge case. The acts of the Virginia Legislature, which authorized the construction of that bridge, provided that if it obstructed the navigation of the Ohio river it should be deemed a nuisance; and in the compact between Virginia and Kentucky, which was sanctioned by Congress, it was expressly stated that the use and navigation of the river Ohio, so far as the territory of Virginia or Kentucky was concerned, should be free and common to the citizens of the United States. The bridge interfered with the free navigation of the river; and as steam vessels from Pennsylvania, in their intercourse with other States, were interrupted in their voyages by the bridge, the Supreme Court decided accordingly. But there is nothing in the case which recognizes any power in the General Government to construct works of internal improvement in the States. The case of the State of Maryland against McCulloch, to be found reported in 4 Wheaton, only decided that the Bank of the United States had a right to establish a branch in Maryland, and that the Legislature of the State had no right to tax the branch thus established. The bank was created as a fiscal agent of the Government, and as necessary to the collection and disbursement of its revenues; and if a State had the right to tax the agent of the Government it might tax it out of existence. There is nothing in the case alluded to which can give color to the claim, set up by the Senator from Ohio, on the part of the Federal Government to construct railroads through the States without their consent.

The Senator from Ohio speaks of the city of Washington as the capital of a great nation, and that free access to it and egress from it in all directions should be secured to its citizens and all who visit the seat of Government. I agree with him in the importance of adequate communication with this city, and that every facility should be afforded to all whom business or pleasure shall bring within its limits. These considerations are of high importance, and there can be no doubt that if they do not now exist to their full or desired extent, they will, in a reasonable time, and without making any strain upon or infraction of the Constitution by an invasion of the reserved rights of the States. Any alleged inconvenience or length of route or delay incident to all railroad traveling only touch the question of expediency, and not that of constitutional right. However desirable it may be to the citizens of Washington or to Congress or to visitors that other means of intercourse may be brought into existence the constitutional difficulty remains, and the implied constructive power of the Government can receive no legitimate aid from such considerations. Formerly the communication between Baltimore and Washington was by stage and wagon, a distance of forty miles. The statesman of a former age did not complain nor endeavor to extract an argument for political power from the inconvenience to which they were subjected. Maryland is of small territorial extent, with less perhaps at the time than half a million of population, an agricultural State; with limited means, but with a generous and enterprising spirit, she embarked nearly eight million dollars in the work which has secured to Washington a railroad and a canal which afforded all the facilities aided by enterprising companies which the people then desired. It was uncertain at the time whether she would ever be reimbursed for the adventure which she made; railroads were not then the success which they have since become.

If, having run the hazard of loss, after conferring upon the District such a boon, shall she now be reproached because it yields to her a revenue in excess of what was anticipated? The Senator from Ohio has charged corporations generally with being influenced by selfish motives. What company, corporated or unincorporated, or what capitalists, whether engaged in mining, manufacturing, commercial, or in any other department of business, are not influenced by like considerations. The exclusive jurisdiction of Congress over the ten miles square cannot, as the Senator contends, enlarge the power given over commerce. The authority of Congress would be the same if no such District had been provided. The jurisdiction is confined to the limits of the District. In the forty-third number of the Federalist the principal reason assigned for the exclusive jurisdiction is that the proceedings of Congress might be interrupted with impunity and that body dependent on a State for protection. In Madison's works, in the third volume, in a letter to Judge Roane, he writes:

"The exclusive jurisdiction over the ten miles square is itself an anomaly in our representative system, and its object being manifest, and attested by the views taken of it at its date, there seems a peculiar impropriety in making it the fulcrum for a lever stretching into the most distant parts of the Union and overruling the municipal policy of the States."

The ken of this political philosopher seemed to penetrate the future, and with almost the spirit of prescience he could see the march of central power into the very heart of the States.

The charter granted by Congress to the corporation of Washington authorized the drawing of lotteries for effecting any important improvement in the city which the ordinary funds or revenue would not accomplish. The State of Virginia enacted a law prohibiting the drawing of lotteries and sale of lottery tickets in that State unless the lottery was authorized by that Commonwealth. The Cohens, in the city of Norfolk, sold tickets of the lottery authorized to be drawn by the corporation of Washington city. They were indicted and fined under the law of Virginia, and the case was taken up by them to the Supreme Court of the United States, which affirmed the judgment of the State court. This was a direct attempt, by means of this fulcrum and lever, to stretch its authority into the territory of a State. There is, therefore, nothing in the jurisdiction given over the District, nor in the simple fact that Congress sits in the city of Washington, that can give to the subject any greater importance than if Congress sat in the city of Philadelphia.

The portion of the eighth section of the Constitution which empowers Congress to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the express powers confers no authority which the Government would not have possessed without the insertion of those words, because when a power was expressly given to do a certain thing all the means necessary to its execution were implied and contained in the grant. In the thirty-third number of the Federalist, written by Alexander Hamilton, who always gave the largest and most liberal interpretation to the Constitution, it is said:

"What is a legislative power but a power of making laws? What are the means to execute a legislative power but laws? What is the power of laying and collecting taxes but a legislative power or a power of making laws to lay and collect taxes? What are the proper means of executing such a power but necessary and proper laws? The Declaration itself, though it may be chargeable with tautology or redundancy, is at least perfectly harmless."

It is thus seen that the insertion of the power to employ the necessary means is a mere redundancy, and does not in any sense enhance the powers of the Government, although Mr. Madison, in a letter to Mr. Jefferson, said:

"In truth, the great temptation of 'utility' brought home to local feelings is the most dangerous snare for constitutional orthodoxy."

And in a letter to Mr. Ritchie, in 1825, he said:

"It has been impossible not to observe the license of construction applied to the Constitution of the United States, and that the premises from which powers are inferred often cover more ground than inferences themselves."

And as an illustration of the extent of implied power as manifested by the bill before the Senate I may add that the inferred power is greater than the power granted.

The Senator from Ohio admits that in the act of Congress authorizing the construction of the Cumberland road the assent of the States through which it was to pass was provided for. I understood the Senator to say, although I do not read it in his published speech, that in the Cumberland road bill the consent of the States was asked because the Government desired the aid and coöperation of those States. I do not so read that bill; it passed Congress in 1806, and contained a provision that if the President received and accepted, and did not reject the report of the commissioners who were appointed to survey and make out the road, he was then "authorized and requested to pursue such measures as in his opinion shall be proper to obtain consent for making the road of the States through which the same has been laid; and which consent being obtained he is furthermore authorized to take prompt and effectual measures to cause said road to be made. There is no aid to be given by the States except their consent, and by the very terms of the act that consent is made indispensable; this is a virtual and unconditional surrender by Congress of the power now claimed.

I find on examination of the laws for the admission of Ohio into the Union, passed in 1802, that three propositions were submitted to the judgment of that State; a portion of the third is as follows:

"That one twentieth of the net proceeds of the land lying within the said State sold by Congress from and after the 30th day of June next, after deducting all expenses incident to the same, shall be applied to the laying out and making public roads leading from the navigable waters emptying into the Atlantic to the Ohio, to the said State and through the same; such roads to be laid out under the authority of Congress with the consent of the States through which the said road shall pass."

This is another and explicit precedent of the recognition by Congress of the assent of the States as a necessary preliminary to the exercise of the power to make roads by the General Government.

The power claimed to make or authorize to be made railroads and canals through States without their assent is one of immense magnitude, and strikes at the foundation of State sovereignty and vital constitutional rights. To concede such a power would be to surrender the last vestige of dignity and honor on the part of the States, and to constitute this Government at once a consolidated one with unlimited powers. It would break down all divisions of power, all barriers between the two systems, and annihilate all State power unless used in subserviency to the national will. The checks and balances of the Constitution—the beautiful symmetry and framework of the general and State constitutions, which have been the theme and admiration of statesmen and of patriots and of the whole American people from the year 1787, will be marred and broken in its essential attributes. General Jackson, in his veto message of the Maysville road bill, was influenced not as the Senator from Ohio has supposed, because the work commenced and ended in the same State. The message says:

"The constitutional power of the Federal Government to construct or promote works of internal improvement presents itself in two points of view: the first, as bearing upon the sovereignty of the States within whose limits their execution is contemplated, if jurisdiction of the territory which they may occupy be claimed as necessary to their preservation and use; the second, as assuming the simple right to appropriate money from the national Treasury in aid of such works when undertaken by State authority surrendering the claim of jurisdiction."

He denied the power in both aspects, and vetoed the bill. President Monroe, in his special message upon the bill entitled "An Act for the preservation and repair of the Cumberland road," declared emphatically that Congress did not possess the power, and that the States individually could not grant it. But this message was quoted by my colleague [Mr. WAYNE] on yesterday, and I forbear, therefore, to comment upon it.

If any enlarged implied power was intended to be bestowed would it not naturally be looked for in the parts of the instrument which provide for laying and collecting duties and imposts, to regulate commerce, to maintain a navy, and grant letters of marque? Would it not be inferred that to execute these powers the Government would have the right to condemn land for the erection of light-houses to prevent shipwrecks and loss of life; that the war power, to raise and support armies, and to insure the common defense, would include the right to take land upon which to erect forts and fortifications, and without which bulwarks of protection could not be erected? But yet so jealous were the States of central power and of any appropriation of their soil or invasion of their territory, even for these mighty purposes so closely allied to the success and preservation of the General Government, so tenacious of its integrity and so determined to preserve inviolate their right of eminent domain, that in the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution, after enumerating the specific powers granted to the General Government, it is then declared as a power granted "to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such District, not exceeding ten miles square, as may by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress become the seat of Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same may be for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings." The right is to be acquired only by consent of the States.

Can there be a more striking example and illustration of the true intent and meaning of the framers of the Constitution in reference to the subject of implied power, of the spirit and the rule by which constructive power should be restrained and confined whenever the territory of a State is to be approached by the Federal Government? Is it not the key which unlocks and explains the true measure of the claim of implied powers? Can it be supposed that the sages who formed that organic law would have thus guarded with extreme vigilance and caution the rights of the States, and have left in the terms to regulate commerce an open door for the admission of vast, indefinite, and substantial powers, which would subject the territory of the States to the occupation, use, and appropriation at the will of the General Government? Would not such a presumption impute to those great and good men the wonderful work which their wisdom and statesmanship enabled them to consummate? I find, by reference to the statutes of Maryland, that the General Government did, in pursuance of this constitutional provision, apply to the Legislature of my State for permission to procure land for light-houses. In 1820 the land for such purposes, at North Point and Bodkin Island, were ceded, or cessions provided for; in 1824 Thomas's Point, and also part of Poole's Island, and in the same year Cedar Point and Point Lookout and Smith's Island.

Can it be possible for the mind to conceive that, to establish or erect works of vital importance to commerce, and such of a military character as should be essential to the defense of our rivers, harbors, cities, and coasts, the assent of the States should be absolutely indispensable, and that the States would surrender their soil to the Government of the United States at discretion to make railroads and canals; to make internal improvements at pleasure; to construct rival works, and destroy the value of such as were authorized by the States, and of others in which she has millions invested?—the right to erect toll-gates on such roads; to fix the tolls irrespective of the wishes or interests of the people; to intersect and cross and injure works completed or in progress; to cut up and disfigure the physical features of the country without regard to State interests; to summon juries, condemn the lands, erect depots, buildings, and stations wherever and however it may choose, without even consulting the State or her functionaries; to incorporate companies, composed of strangers, to go upon your lands, make as many roads as they please, however destructive to the works of the State and of her people; in a word, to exercise plenary power over the territory of the States—can it be possible that the late war has so obliterated every line and removed every landmark of the States which have always been their pride and boast? Was it for this that the Constitution was framed? Was the power to make canals rejected because of the well-grounded apprehension that its insertion would defeat the instrument when submitted to the people; that now, in the eighty-second year of our national political existence, the power to make canals and railroads shall be exerted independently of the States? Would not such an exercise of power be an insult to the framers of the Constitution, to their memory, and to the memories of the men who voted for and adopted it?

The right of eminent domain or the power to take private property for public use is in virtue of the sovereignty of the Government; it is a part of the sovereignty. In the public territory of the United States this right resides in the Government; but when a new State is formed out of such territory and received into the Union that right, held temporarily by the United States, passes to the State thus admitted. This principle is explicitly declared in the case of Pollard's Lessee vs. Hogan, in 3 Howard's Reports, 212, by the Supreme Court of the United States, and that the right of eminent domain is a part of the sovereign power of a State.

It will not be denied that the States have a right to take private property for public use, making just compensation, and that the right exists because of their sovereignty. Sovereignty over the same subject-matter cannot exist in two Governments. It cannot exist in two or more Governments when its exercise may bring them into collision. The one or the other must be supreme. This right of eminent domain is essential to the proper existence and operations of the State governments; the objects of local governments, the improvements of the State, their progress and advancement are inseparably connected and bound up in this attribute of sovereignty. But the right of eminent domain is not necessary to the existence or administration of the General Government; it has no duties which call for its exercise except in times of invasion or of war. Its powers and functions were ordained and limited by the States. Mr. Madison, in the forty-fifth number of the Federalist said, as already quoted, that—

"The powers delegated by the proposed Constitution to the Federal Government are few and defined; those which remain in the State governments are numerous and indefinite."

The honorable Senator from Ohio, kindling with enthusiasm as he progresses to demolish all the barriers which protect the rights of the States, says:

"Now, therefore, is the proper time to assert the authority of Congress to regulate commerce among the States by authorizing new lines of transit; by encouraging competition, improvement, and enterprise; by making the construction of railroads as free as the construction of merchant vessels and blacksmith shops."

We know that every man in the community has a right to build a vessel and a blacksmith shop. He interferes not with the rights or interest of another; he takes no man's materials and condemns no man's property. And yet the Senator would permit all associations, companies, or individuals to go upon the territory of a State and convert its property to their use, regardless of the wishes or interest or rights of the owners, that the right to build railroads should be as free as the air! Is this the doctrine of the statesmen who framed the Constitution? Are such views to be found in the Federalist, or in the writings of Hamilton, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, or Jackson, or of record in the annals of congressional legislation?

Some of the reasons assigned by the honorable Senator [Mr. SHERMAN] for the exercise of this power are: that the profits of the Washington road are grossly out of proportion to the cost of the branch! Is not this a most extraordinary motive to influence the Congress of the United States to exert this high and doubtful power? The idea of making rival works to reduce the profits of a railroad company is a novel one. Corporations, the Senator says, are selfish; and yet he would create as many as there are ships and blacksmith shops, that they might all become selfish and make their own interest their chief object; not that the public convenience and interest are to be moving causes to the construction of new roads; for he says:

"It is therefore natural that dissatisfaction should occur with the present exclusive transit, even if it yielded only a fair profit on the capital employed, and furnished direct, convenient, and cheap communication."

Here is a distinct avowal that neither the directness of the route, its cheapness and convenience, can satisfy the community while other persons are prohibited from constructing roads whenever and wherever they may choose.

It would seem to me that the efforts of the Senator to show that the profits of the Washington branch were too great, that the route was not direct, convenient, or cheap, was a work of supererogation, and he might as well have relied on the avowal of dissatisfaction, because there was but one route. It has somewhere been said that "though one be as pure as ice and as chaste as snow he shall not escape censure."

It will be remembered that the Baltimore and Ohio railroad was built many years since, when railroads were experiments and capitalists hesitated to invest; that for many years it paid a comparatively small profit; that before its construction the stage and the wagon were used as agencies to transport passengers and merchandise from Baltimore to Washington and vice versa; that the present route from Washington to New York is the shortest that can be made unless you bridge the Chesapeake and Delaware; that the travel is made in about seven and a half hours, and an improvement by the company is now being considered which will lessen the time twenty minutes and prevent delay in Baltimore. It will also be remembered that the State of Maryland, with a population at that time of probably less than half a million, an agricultural people, and with limited resources, advanced her means and pledged her credit to aid in the construction of the road; that she stipulated for one fifth of the passage money. I have heard it stated that the State of New Jersey had created a monopoly, and Delaware had placed a capitation tax upon passengers, that Pennsylvania had required a remuneration of the Erie road in the form of a rent, and that in Illinois the Central railroad pays a per cent. of its gross earnings into the treasury.

Maryland also subscribed $500,000 to the main stem and $7,000,000 to the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, which had a terminus in the District of Columbia; that to pay the interest on the debt thus created, mostly to connect Baltimore and the Ohio with Washington and Georgetown, she had to resort to taxation of a character which was oppressive to her people. She thought not of repudiation, but under the lead of her then distinguished Governor levied stamp duties on all private securities, conveyances, &c., and taxes on legacies, collateral inheritances, on executors and administrators and trustees' commissions, and on the real and personal property of the State. She preserved her honor inviolate, and no stain ever attached to her bright escutcheon. The Chesapeake and Ohio canal has been unproductive, and now there is due my State for interest upward of eleven million dollars. Will the Senator from Ohio inform us if the eight per cent. on her investment in the main stem is excessive, and whether the deficit on the canal investment should not be an offset to what he considers unreasonable receipts from the Washington branch road? If that requisition be unconstitutional, as the Senator alleges, it may soon be judicially so decided. She receives about five per cent. every six months on her subscription of stock. But for the enterprise and public spirit of Maryland and of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company acting in conjunction it is possible that we might yet have the stage coach to ply between the cities of Baltimore and Washington, to convey honorable Senators and Representatives to and from the seat of Government, as was wont in the days of Clay, Webster, and others of great renown.

I am no friend of monopolies, nor am I here as the advocate of any railroad company; but when individuals and a State embark their means to a large amount in an enterprise or work which may prove a failure, which may never reimburse principal or interest, does it seem proper or just that after the hazard of loss and by good management they realize a profit that a rival company, availing themselves of the experience and success of the former, should step in and take from them their hard and merited earnings? If they abuse their privileges the law will reach and correct such abuses; but it is a question doubtful in morals whether, under such circumstances, many rival companies should be permitted to reap their advantages; at all events the question is one for the consideration of the power that created them. I know of no refusal on the part of the Legislature of Maryland to redress wrongs or to sustain the cause of right. She is not a State that loves monopolies, nor is she selfish or unjust, but has granted many railroad charters, and, I believe, has never refused when properly applied to. She receives nothing from the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, and allowing her interest on the $7,000,000 of stock and the $11,000,000 of interest due to her from the canal company, the annual loss to the State of interest is $1,080,000, being more than the whole gross earnings of the railroad company on the Washington branch in a single year.

The Senator from Ohio says that Maryland obstructs free communication between the capital and the great body of the people. Did the honorable Senator weigh well the expressions which he used? Is he not aware that Maryland capital and enterprise made the only railroad to the city of Washington; that her people are now taxed to pay the interest on the debt incurred for that object? Is he not also aware that Maryland many years since chartered a company to construct a railroad from the Potomac to Baltimore, and subsequently authorized the company to carry a branch to the District of Columbia; that the want of capital alone prevented the commencement of that road for many years, but that it is now, under the control of the energetic Governor of Maryland as its president and the enterprising board associated with him, in a rapid progress of construction, and will soon be completed; that the Legislature of Maryland, when requested, enlarged the corporate powers of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad to enable it to make a road from Harper's Ferry to the District of Columbia, called the Metropolitan road, for the especial accommodation of western travel? This branch is to be made, not with the capital of the District, but from the earnings of the former company, which will lessen the dividends to the State of Maryland and to Baltimore on their stock. The Connelville road is being built by Baltimore capital and enterprise, making a shorter line with the Metropolitan than by any other route from Washington to the West and Northwest, and a road is also constructed from toward Philadelphia to the Susquehanna river, and a Maryland charter authorizes its continuance to Baltimore; also, the Pennsylvania Northern and Central, within our State lines. The State of Maryland has not hesitated to give her consent, by chartering companies, to construct railroads and canals. She now has an unproductive capital of $19,000,000 in such works. It is not possible that Baltimore can be jealous of Washington; there are always two sides to a question; but if there are any inequitable discriminations, they should be discontinued, and the capital of the nation enjoy as many advantages as may be extended to the most favored places. No doubt it will be done. I have heard that the instance of the freight from Baltimore being charged at a higher rate to Washington than to Alexandria was accounted for by the fact that the empty cars and the labor of lading and unlading were furnished by the Alexandria road. However, there can be no doubt that a just arrangement should be made to the mutual advantage and satisfaction of both cities.

The complaint that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company declined to reduce the fare to the Government may be explained by the fact that from the location of the road it was particularly subject to the destructive raids and operations of the confederate forces, and in fact that it did suffer most serious and frequent losses by having its track torn up and destroyed, its bridges burned, and its cars demolished; and that with wonderful promptitude the company from time to time repaired the work with its own means and kept it for the important uses of the Government and a necessary line of communication between the seat of Government and the West.

In answer to certain inquiries made by me of a most intelligent officer of the company, I learned that portions of the track were destroyed every year during the war, the first occurring in May, 1861, and the road was not opened for use between Harper's Ferry and Cumberland, a distance of one hundred miles, till April, 1862. The track, buildings, bridges, engines, and cars destroyed are estimated at $800,000. During the war about one hundred and twenty miles of the track were destroyed, between twenty and thirty bridges, including some of the most costly on the route, as Harper's Ferry bridge, which is about one thousand feet in length and has been permanently rebuilt; that the cost of repairing the road in all respects so as to cover every damage done to the property, permanent or movable, during the war, is estimated at $3,500,000. In reply to my question of loss in freight and travel during the suspension of business during the war, occasioned by the insurgents, the estimate is given at $10,000,000. During the period of the war the number of soldiers and persons connected directly and indirectly with the Army and transit each way are supposed to amount to a million and a half of men. No road, probably, suffered so severely, and none rendered more important services to the Government.

It was with a degree of surprise that I heard the honorable Senator [Mr. SHERMAN] assign as a reason for chartering a company to construct a road from Washington to New York via Baltimore that certain disorders had been committed in the latter city. No one can regret more than myself any violation of law or breach of the peace, and the citizens of Baltimore equally participate in that feeling. They are an intelligent, enterprising, generous people, of great public spirit and moral worth. Riots and violence have occurred in other cities and towns of the country; but such occasional ebullitions, however much they may be deprecated, do not seriously impair their character. The Senator does not propose to locate the contemplated road at any distance from Baltimore city, so that proximity will not exist, and consequently the new road will be as near the scene of disorder as the present one. I regret that the Senator introduced these topics into the discussion of a great constitutional question, because they neither help the argument nor enlighten the judgment.

Maryland as a State has ever been characterized for her toleration of opinion and for civil and religious freedom. Founded by a colony of Catholics, both that sect and the Protestants have been tolerant and liberal. She was among the first to remove disabilities from the Jews. Her participation in the revolutionary struggle forms a bright epoch in our country's history. The Maryland line was always looked to to cross bayonets with the enemy; it was in the hardest fought battles of that dark period; and the names of her Howards, Gists, Smallwoods, and others are inseparably connected with the valor and glory of the Revolution of 1776. In 1812, when war was renewed with our ancient enemy, but now I hope steadfast friend, the gallantry and patriotism of her people were constantly displayed. When the Government of the United States wanted money to conduct that war, at its very commencement the Legislature of Maryland by law authorized the banks of the State to loan to it one third of their capital; and after this city had been captured, and the Capitol building had been fired, when the pulse of the nation beat quick and its heart almost failed, all eyes were turned to Baltimore, which was to be assaulted by the conquering troops that had humbled our pride by the destruction of our Capitol. When the commercial metropolis of Maryland was invested by land and water by the formidable naval and military forces of Great Britain the heroism and firmness of Maryland soldiers saved the honor of the nation and infused new hopes and vigor into the hearts and hands of our countrymen. Men voluntarily left their homes and traveled a hundred miles to engage in the defense of Baltimore.

It was during the dark and gloomy days and nights of the bombardment of Fort McHenry that the patriotic Key, detained unwillingly on board an English ship, from the decks of which he could, through the smoke and flame of battle, descry the flag which bore the stripes and stars still waving at the staff, and which gave hope to his throbbing heart—it was then that fresh inspiration of patriotism was breathed in his bosom, and he sent forth from his ardent lips on the pure air of his native State the memorable and never-to-be-forgotten words and sentiments which have immortalized and consecrated the Star-Spangled Banner, the recollection of which did much to cheer and sustain our soldiers in the late civil war and to keep firm to their allegiance many who would have gone to the southern cause. During that lamentable conflict of arms Maryland sent fifty thousand men to the armies of the Union, paid $5,000,000 as bounty to her soldiers, and lost $30,000,000 in the emancipation of her slaves, which beggared many of her men, widows, and orphans. She sold her bank stocks to pay her troops, and her people are now laboring under taxation to pay the interest on her war debt.

Mr. SPENCER. I move to amend the bill before the Senate by adding to the first section the following proviso:

Provided, however, That the Baltimore and Potomac railroad may be adopted as a part of the road between Washington and Baltimore contemplated by this act, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon between the New York and Washington Railway Company and the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company.

Mr. SHERMAN. If that amendment is to be adopted it ought to come in at the end of the second section.

Mr. SPENCER. Very well.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection myself to the amendment authorizing the new corporation to contract with the Potomac company, which is a new company also authorized by Congress, to make that a part of the line. I do not see any special objection to it. Senators can judge of it as well as I can.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama to the second section of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is one amendment reported by the committee which the Secretary tells me was overlooked and not read. I ask that that be acted upon now.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was in section six, line four, after the word "length" to strike out the words "and the rails shall be of American iron or steel manufacture."

Mr. CAMERON. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment. We are able to make all the iron in this country that is required for all our railroads.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is hardly worth while to call the yeas and nays now.

Mr. CAMERON. I withdraw the call.

Mr. POMEROY. The amendment before the Senate I understand to be an amendment requiring this road to use American iron.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is to strike out the provision requiring it to be built of American iron.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not desire to take any part in the discussion of this bill, but I think that provision ought to be stricken out. We have adjusted the tariff upon railroad iron to our internal revenue, tax upon American manufactures of railroad iron, and they are now in the markets of the world, and in the markets of this country competing with each other, as they ought to be. Now, to put into a bill, as we have in several bills that have passed Congress, a requirement obliging the company to buy American iron is, in the first place, against the interest, as I think, of the revenue of the country; and secondly, it is against the enterprise which we are trying all over this country to encourage and foster. I think that our tariff on railroad iron now amounts to about eleven dollars per ton. It was eight dollars, but I think it was raised last year, and railroad iron imported into this country now pays a higher duty than ever before. If the companies who are to construct these roads can afford to pay that duty, and prefer the European iron with the duty, why not let them go into the open market and buy it? Why confine them to American iron and then allow the American manufacturers to charge them any price they have a mind to charge because they have got to pay it? It is against the genius of trade and commerce in this country. I understand the chairman of the committee to say that the committee recommend to strike it out.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. POMEROY. I thought it was moved by some one else. If the committee have moved to strike it out I will vote with the committee. If I do not vote with them on anything else I will vote with them on that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to amend section twelve of this bill so as to provide that a property tax may be levied on the property of the road at not a higher rate pro rata than is levied by the laws of the State upon the property of all other roads constructed in the State under the laws thereof.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the provision now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not at all. The provision now is:

And no property tax shall be levied on the property of said road at a higher rate pro rata than is levied by the laws of said State upon the property of all other roads constructed in said State under the laws thereof.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection if the Senator simply wishes to affirm that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to have the assent of Congress given to the levying of such a tax.

Mr. SHERMAN. It ought to be followed by a negative condition that no higher tax shall be levied.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That precedes this.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio whether the bill is so drawn as to prohibit the States from taxing the stock of the company?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all. A property tax may be levied on the property of this railroad precisely like the tax on other railroad property.

Mr. FESSENDEN. "The property of the railroad" would not cover the point. There will be stockholders in this company. Many of the stockholders may reside in a particular State. Why should they not pay a tax on their stock in this road precisely as stockholders in banks pay a tax upon their bank stock?

Mr. SHERMAN. This does not prevent it at all.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The power should be specifically given just as it is in the bank act.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator will see that it now reads:

And no property tax shall be levied on the property of said road at a higher rate pro rata than is levied by the laws of said State upon the property of all other roads constructed in said State under the laws thereof.

This does not affect at all the right of the State to tax the property of a citizen in the stock.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It should be specifically given.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it is clear now; but if it is necessary we can put that in.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It gives rise to a question whether they are to pay any tax at all.

Mr. MORTON. I ask the Senator from Maine if the State is allowed to tax the property of the company, and then to tax the stock which represents the property also, whether that is not taxing twice?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will answer that in this way: suppose a large stockholder in this company resides in the State of Maine, and the road itself does not touch the State of Maine at all, should he not be taxed for the stock which he holds? It is so with regard to a bank. You tax the property of the bank situated in a State in the ordinary way, and in addition to that the stockholders are specifically taxed in the places where they reside. So it is with regard to railroad corporations. In my State the property of the railroad is taxable, not the track, but all the station-houses, engines, and everything of that sort; and in addition to that, the individual stockholder may be taxed on his stock in the road. It should be so in this case, in my opinion.

Mr. MORTON. I am not doubting the propriety of the suggestion, but simply want to know if the stock represents the property, as it certainly does, and you first tax the property and then tax the stock that represents the property, whether that is not double taxation?

Mr. FESSENDEN. The mere property of the road is a very small portion of it; but the stock may be very valuable outside of all that. The railroads in all the States are taxed in the same way. But there should be a limitation undoubtedly. The section should be so drawn as to provide that the tax shall be at the same rate as the tax upon other property of a similar description in the State; and then that will be sufficient to guard against abuse.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Oregon send his amendment to the desk?

Mr. SHERMAN. While the Senator is preparing that amendment I desire to submit an amendment. I am directed by the select committee to move to strike out the last two sections of the bill. Senators object to having different corporations included in this bill. The select committee therefore instruct me to move to strike out the last two sections, so as to confine the bill to the one road between Washington and New York.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Oregon is withdrawn for the present, and the question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio. The matter proposed to be stricken out will be read.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is hardly worth while to read those two long sections. The sixteenth and seventeenth sections of the bill provide, one for a railroad toward Cleveland, and the other for a railroad toward Cincinnati. The committee propose to make the bill simply a charter for a road from Washington to New York, striking out the other two sections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee, striking out the sixteenth and seventeenth sections of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to insert at the end of line six in the first section, after the word "Delaware," the following names: "Ward Hunt, George Opdyke, Thomas Buchanan, jr., C. P. Huntington," of New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I propose to modify the amendment that I offered to the twelfth section by striking out in line seven of that section the words, "and no property tax shall be levied on the property of said road at a higher rate pro rata than is," and inserting "but other taxes may be levied upon said road in the same manner and to the same extent as taxes are;" so that the section will read:

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That the said line of railway, with the ferries, crossings, bridges, and roadway hereby authorized to be constructed, shall be deemed and considered a national public highway and post road, and no tax or transit duty shall be imposed by virtue of any State authority upon the traffic of said company, its freight or passengers; but other taxes may be levied upon said road in the same manner and to the same extent as taxes are levied by the laws of said State upon the property of all other roads constructed in said State under the laws thereof.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suggest to the honorable Senator to insert after the words "property of said road" the words "and stock owned therein," or something of that sort, so as to cover the point I suggested.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is a tax upon the stockholder, and it seems to me it is not necessary; because, as a matter of course, they are taxed with other citizens.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The amendment of the Senator from Oregon is a tax upon the road itself. Now, I wish it to be expressed "upon said road and upon the stockholders therein."

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to this road and its stockholders paying the same tax as any other road and its stockholders in the same State.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What I desire to accomplish is to put this road upon precisely the same footing as other railroads are put upon by the laws of any State through which it may pass, so that there may be no distinction in that respect between this road and any other road.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then, insert after the word "road" the words "and its stockholders."

Mr. CONKLING. Before we vote upon this amendment I wish some Senator who has thought of it would enlighten us upon a question which goes beyond the form and, in a certain sense, beyond the substance of the amendment. This legislation is to be justified, if justified at all, I take it, largely upon the language of the Constitution empowering Congress to establish post offices and post roads. One of the sections of this bill does establish this as a post road. If I understand the effect of that, the road as soon as it shall exist will exist as one of the instrumentalities, in the language of a leading case, of the Government of the United States, or of the United States. Now, it has been very broadly and uniformly decided—and I think the distinction which has arisen in the national bank cases does not impart the force of the decision to which I now refer—that State taxation shall not and cannot visit the instrumentalities of the Government of the United States. Those decisions, as I understand, proceed upon the effect of the Constitution and not upon the absence merely of a congressional license to the States to tax. In other words, if I am right in supposing that a road like this would be, as the Mint, as the dockyard, as the post office, is exempt from State taxation, that exemption would arise from the vigor of the Constitution itself. Now, I should like to know what effect is to be produced by licensing (if I may so say) the States to impose the taxes implied by either form of this amendment. I should like to know whether effect can be given to the taxing power of the States in this way, and if so how far, and to take hold of which class of the assets of the road, and to fall short of subjecting to State taxation which other class of assets or franchise or whatever may represent value.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CONKLING. With great pleasure.

Mr. FESSENDEN. When we declare that any railroad constructed by State authority and owned as a State institution shall be a post road, as I believe is done by our laws, we make it an instrumentality of the Government just as much as this is. Does that declaration, that it is a post road, take it out of its liability to State taxation in the case of an existing road constructed under State authority?

Mr. CONKLING. No, sir; I answer as a matter of fact rather than of law. I should think not; but I assume for the purpose of the query which I propose that a distinction exists between that case and a case in which Congress directly exercises the power to create, and in which Congress alone does create a corporation, the power to bring which into existence is based for this purpose wholly upon the idea of establishing or creating a post road. Now a route exists over which stage-coaches or railway carriages travel, and for certain purposes which, one by one, have been found desirable, the Government adopts that in a certain sense as a post road, declares it a post road. That is the case which the Senator from Maine puts. I do not suppose that case would fairly give rise to such a question as I ask, but my supposition is that the case before us is an entirely different one from that. But if there be doubt about that, then I should like to be enlightened upon that as a part of the question which I propose, whether the legislation we are about to adopt, if this bill shall pass, does not constitute a case between which and such a one as the Senator proposes there is a distinction, and if the distinction exists, then by what reasoning it is that we by enactment are to clothe the States with the power to visit taxation upon a subject to which complete immunity is attached by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, it seems to me there is no doubt about the power of the United States to allow any of its instrumentalities to be taxed. No doubt the bonds of the Government could be taxed if Congress felt disposed to allow it, and authorized the States to tax them. It is not desirable for this Government to build railroads through the States and place them on a different footing from other railroads already constructed. In the first clause of this section there is a prohibition against the State levying certain kinds of taxation. We want to be free from the passenger tax which has been so much complained of, and which the Senator from Indiana has this morning given us a very able discourse in regard to. We do not wish that tax imposed; but further than that it is not desirable to place this road upon any different footing from other roads in the same State.

So much as to the policy. As to the power of Congress to authorize the States to tax it, there can be no doubt. Congress is to judge how it will use its powers. This has been done in regard to the national banks, and there is no question as to the power of Congress to limit the use of its instrumentalities in carrying on the Government in its own way and to allow the States to exercise functions that they otherwise would not have the power to exercise. Inasmuch as we desire to prohibit the passenger tax and put that prohibition in the first part of the section it is best for Congress to show a disposition not to interfere in regard to other taxes.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Mr. President, my reading on this subject is not very new, and I have not very great confidence in my recollection about it; but the impression I have on my mind is that the question suggested by the honorable Senator from New York can hardly arise. The questions which have been raised in reference to that matter rather refer to a tax in the nature of a tax on the franchise, the exercise of the power, the thing itself; in other words, the power to do that which it is permitted to do under the charter or permission of the Government, and not to a tax upon any property that it may have or anything that it may use, and a tax upon which would be in the nature of a tax on property like all other property in the State itself. Therefore, I do not see how the question which the honorable Senator has suggested could arise at all. The power under the Constitution is one which is held for the purpose of protection; and if there is no necessity for that protection, if Congress so thinks, I should have no question that the power might be awarded. In other words, in granting a charter to a company for a purpose which may be considered useful to the Government, even an instrumentality to the Government, if it is not exclusively an instrumentality of the Government, there can be no difficulty whatever in saying that that power is granted under certain conditions and subject to certain limits and certain liabilities; and if the power granted is taken advantage of by the company, if they assent and all parties concerned assent that the thing may be done, I cannot see that there is any possibility of doubt in relation to the law on that point.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to inquire of the honorable Senator from Maine whether he holds that some object which clearly would fall within the category to which I suppose this might belong—I will take for illustration the mint in a certain State—might be subjected, by license from Congress, to State taxation. I ask him whether in the case of a subject of taxation already belonging to the instrumentalities of the General Government it is optional with Congress to insist upon and preserve its immunity from State taxation, or to waive it, as Congress sees fit?

Mr. FESSENDEN. That raises an entirely different question. I have no doubt that Congress in such a case as that even, the case of the mint, might subject the property itself which was used in accomplishing the purpose of the Government, if it saw fit, to State taxation. I remember that many years ago, perhaps twenty or thirty years ago, the question was argued before the Supreme Court of the United States whether the custom-house and the land on which it stood in the city in which I reside were subject to State taxation. A tax was imposed upon that property. I remember it the more distinctly because at that time I was city solicitor and I had occasion to argue the question and present it to the district court below. I did not argue it in the Supreme Court. Upon that question, whether there was any right to tax that land and the building on it, the jurisdiction never having been conveyed, the property being situated in our city, the court was equally divided, and no judgment was rendered. The city, however, waived the right.

Now, in the case of the Mint, the power under which it is established is one exclusively delegated by the Constitution to Congress and is to be exercised by the Government itself. It has nothing to do with anything outside of it; it is exclusively an instrumentality of the General Government. Perhaps it would not be competent in that case for Congress to submit the power, the right, the exercise of the power, the exercise of the right to a State to tax the Mint if it was exercised or carried on within the limits of that State. That is one question; but I apprehend it is a very different question when we are granting privileges and reserving—for that is the amount of it—certain rights to the Government of the United States, as connected with the exercise of these privileges. We make a corporation; we give to that corporation certain powers of benefit to itself and the right to exercise them. Now, because we do that, and the exercise of that power results in certain benefits to the United States, we having the right to use it to a certain extent for our benefit, to hold that we cannot make a bargain with the corporation and say in the charter that we grant that they shall be subject to certain liabilities to the States as well as to the United States would seem to me to be carrying the idea suggested by the honorable Senator from New York to an extreme. Therefore, as I said before, I think there is no similarity between the cases.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, at this point it strikes me as very important to inquire to whom will the property really belong after its condemnation? Will it belong to the corporation created by this act of Congress absolutely in its own right, or will that corporation be a quasi trustee of the United States? It is a very important question, and I submit to the Senate that in passing a bill of this kind the language ought to be very seriously considered. If Senators will look on page 11 of the bill, at the sixty-seventh line of the eighth section, they will discover that after the condemnation of property by a justice of the Supreme Court and a decree in favor of the company, "the said corporation, its successors and assigns, shall be legally and equitably seized and possessed of such real estate and other property." If it stopped there there would be no question that the property became immediately vested in the corporation; but these words are used: "shall be legally and equitably seized and possessed of such real estate and other property for and in behalf of the United States."

Mr. SHERMAN. Read on. Read the next clause.

Mr. WHYTE. "And to the use and for the purpose hereinbefore described." Then why include the name "and in behalf of" the United States at all? Will it not hereafter raise some question in regard to the responsibility of the United States in connection with this railway? Is it not better to leave the property in the possession of the corporation, if Congress has power to grant an act of incorporation? Why should there be any doubtful clauses in the bill? The property condemned for the road is to be vested in the corporation in the name and "for and in behalf of" the United States, and a preceding clause provides that the corporation, when it is necessary, shall enter upon and take possession of real estate in the name of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not see, myself, the slightest objection to striking out those words. I do not think they change the legal meaning of the language the Senator has read, and if the Senator moves to strike out those words I shall not make any objection. It cannot change the effect of the section. I may say that this section was copied substantially, and I think verbatim, from the Pacific railroad law of 1864, where provision was made for condemning land. If that confuses my friend from Maryland the words can be stricken out. There is, however, an amendment now pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I accept it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon, as modified.

Mr. HOWARD. I ask for the reading of the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed in lines seven and eight of the twelfth section to strike out the words "and no property tax shall be levied on the property of said road at a higher rate pro rata than is levied;" and in lieu thereof to insert "but other taxes may be levied on said road and its stockholders in the same manner and to the same extent as taxes are levied."

Mr. HOWARD. I beg to inquire of the honorable Senator from Maine whether it is the purpose to allow the stock of the company as such to be subjected to State taxation?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Precisely; that is the object; just as stock in the national banks is subjected to State taxation.

Mr. HOWARD. Well, sir, suppose Congress should impose an additional tax upon this stock, as they might do, I suppose, then it would be subjected to double taxation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The same power that gives this authority can take it away again if it sees fit to do so in consequence of its desire to levy other taxes for the benefit of the United States.

Mr. HOWARD. I suppose there can be no doubt about that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. None at all. As the amendment stands now it puts this road precisely as the national banks stand; and that is that although the State cannot tax the franchise, cannot tax the exercise of the power, or anything of that sort, yet it may tax the individual who owns a certain number of shares precisely as it does other individuals holding property of that description. A state may tax the banking house, for instance, or the stations and depots and real property of the railroad corporation, just as other property is taxed. That is the object, and I think it is proper.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I prefer the clause to stand as it is, rather than to alter it. As it now stands it reads:

And no property tax shall be levied on the property of said road at a higher rate pro rata than is levied by the laws of said State upon the property of all other roads constructed in said State under the laws thereof.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The reason of the change is this: it is very doubtful whether that provision as it stands, being merely negative, would be sufficient to subject this property to State taxation. It is very clear to my mind that it ought to be taxed to a certain extent; and in order to accomplish it the specific power should be given, and hence the change that is proposed to be made. Otherwise you may allow this great corporation to enter the States and hold any amount of property free of tax. A man in Maine living off the road, hundreds of miles from the road, may hold stock in it and invest largely in it, and yet he may not be subject to be taxed by his State on that property.

Mr. HOWARD. I concur entirely with the honorable Senator from Maine as to the propriety of imposing State taxation upon the property of this corporation. I have no objection to that; but I think that the doubt which he speaks of does not in fact lurk in the clause to which he refers. It seems to me the implication is very plain that it will be the right of the State through which the road passes to tax the property of the corporation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In this form it is put beyond all doubt.

Mr. HOWARD. It strikes me that the clause does not need any such amendment. It declares that no tax shall be levied on the property of said road at a higher rate than is levied by the laws of the State on the property of all other railroads in the State. The implication it seems to me is perfectly irresistible that it contemplates State taxation and no other taxation ex vi termini. I have no doubt myself that in incorporating this corporation we can impart to it such faculties and such liabilities as we see fit. We are creating an artificial being known as a corporation; and if we have a right to constitute it at all, we have a right to impart to it all the faculties, all the incidents, and all the liabilities that we may see fit. I have no doubt about that; but it seems to me that we should not go so far as the Senator has gone in the amendment he has offered. I think the clause is sufficiently plain already.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The amendment simply saves all question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to insert the words "property of" before "said road," so that the language may correspond with that of the succeeding portion of the section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then there must be another change. It now reads "upon the property of said road and its stockholders." You do not mean the property of the stockholders except the stock?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The property of the road and its stockholders.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Say "upon the property of said road and upon its stockholders."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the section read as it will stand if amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. If amended as proposed, the twelfth section will read:

That the said line of railway, with the ferries, crossings, bridges, and roadway hereby authorized to be constructed, shall be deemed and considered a national highway and post road, and no tax or transit duty shall be imposed by virtue of any State authority upon the traffic of said company, its freight or passengers; but other taxes may be levied upon the property of said road and upon its stockholders in the same manner and to the same extent as taxes are levied by the laws of said State upon the property and upon the stockholders of all other roads constructed in said State under the laws thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move to amend the bill by inserting after the word "empowered," in line two of section eight, the words "with the consent of the Legislature of the State or States through which said railway may be located;" so as to make the section read:

That said corporation is hereby empowered, with the consent of the Legislature of the State or States through which said railway may be located, to purchase, lease, receive, and hold real estate, &c.

Mr. President, this raises a very important question, perhaps raises a question which opens up for discussion one of the main points in the bill, the power to create this corporation. I had intended to address the Senate on the subject of this bill, and especially upon this branch of the question; but I am not prepared to go on this evening and to complete what I desire to say on the subject without detaining the Senate longer, perhaps, than they would desire to wait to-day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will give way I will move an adjournment.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. We cannot get on if we are to adjourn at half past three o'clock daily. Perhaps some other Senator may desire to go on. It will not do to be adjourning at half past three o'clock at this period of the session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is getting toward four o'clock, and it is not often that such a privilege is asked.

Mr. WILSON. If Senators will allow me, I desire to take up a House bill which is on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to adjourn is pending.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have no objection to other business being done if this subject is to stand over until to-morrow and I can then have the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senate is disposed to allow this bill to stand as the unfinished business I shall not interpose any objection.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I understand that the honorable Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WILLEY] desires to offer an amendment and to address the Senate at this time. I will, therefore, withdraw my amendment, and give notice that I shall renew it to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. MORTON. I desire to submit an amendment to which I think there will be no objection. After the word "Massachusetts," at the end of the twelfth line of the first section, I move to insert as coporators "E. B. Martindale and William H. Terrell, of Indiana."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. In the fourth line of the first section I move to strike out the name of "J. Edgar Thompson" and insert "G. Dawson Coleman."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NYE. In line nine of the first section I move to insert among the coporators from New York the name of "Hiram Walbridge."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLEY. Mr. President, this bill involves a principle of the highest importance. The question of constitutional power to pass it demands the closest scrutiny and the most careful consideration. I confess that my mind is not free from doubt. I shall reserve a final decision on the question of power until it becomes indispensable to decide it. On the other hand, as it regards the advantage, and, indeed, necessity of convenient railroad connections with the capital of the nation, none can doubt. Until this day since the seat of Government was established here three fourths of the nation have been without railroad communication with its capital excepting by one route, possessing, until within a year, but a single track. It was but natural that the adjacent States, in building up their own cities and sections, should employ their capital and conform their legislation so as best to accomplish that purpose. It would have been expecting too much to suppose that they would seek to build up and improve a rival city outside of their jurisdiction and beyond the reach of their right of taxation. While, therefore, it is wonderful that the capital of the nation has remained so long without convenient railroad connections, it is not a matter of surprise, or, indeed, I think, of just complaint, that the States of Maryland and Virginia have not made them.

Under these circumstances it is possible that under the Constitution of this great country there is no rightful and legal power or authority of establishing and building or of authorizing the establishment and construction of the necessary and convenient means of access to its capital? May the citizens of the States respectively travel by rail to their capitals and the people of the nation be without the power to furnish the same facilities to reach the national capital? Have we no power to provide the means of military supplies and defense to the national capital furnished by railways, to say nothing of commercial and postal considerations? Perhaps it may be so. The arguments and authority of men learned in the law create some doubt in my mind. I defer a final decision on this point for the present. Perhaps I may have something to say in relation to this question during the further progress of the discussion.

I rise now to offer an amendment to the bill. If we are to enter upon the project of chartering companies to make railroads to and from this city, I think I can propose a route not included in the bill of equal necessity and importance with any of those which are proposed. I think I can show to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and to the Senate that it is possible, by making a road of less than one hundred miles in length, direct railway communication can be opened between this city and the valley of the Mississippi, in the direction of Cincinnati, St. Louis, and the Pacific coast, by a nearer and better route than any other now known.

Before offering the amendment, however, I beg leave to submit a few preliminary remarks, in order that the amendment when submitted may be understood and appreciated. I now merely state that I propose that a company shall be chartered to construct a railroad from Washington city to the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad, at or near Staunton, in Virginia.

Mr. President, the termini of the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad are Richmond, in Virginia, and the mouth of the Big Sandy, on the Ohio river. The whole distance by this route between these points is four hundred and five miles. It has already been made, and is equipped and in operation from Richmond to Covington, a distance of two hundred and five miles; and some of the heaviest work on it, west of Covington, has been done, and measures have been adopted which will, in all probability, secure its completion to the Ohio river in the course of two or three years. This road passes up the valley of the James river, through Charlottesville, through the Shenandoah valley, by the way of Staunton in Virginia, and by the celebrated White Sulphur and other little less celebrated mineral springs, and by the salines in the Kanawha valley, in West Virginia. It contemplates making a branch from the mouth of Scary, on the Kanawha river, where it leaves the valley of the Kanawha river in its course toward its terminus at the mouth of the Big Sandy; it proposes, I say, to make a branch from this point down the Great Kanawha, to its mouth, at Point Pleasant, a distance of forty-five miles, and there, crossing the Ohio river, it will pass through the State of Ohio only twenty-eight miles to form a connection with the Marietta and Cincinnati railroad.

From Richmond, its eastern terminus, a railroad is already made and is now in successful operation to Norfolk, a distance of one hundred miles, making the distance from Norfolk to the Ohio at the mouth of the Big Sandy by this route five hundred and five miles, and several miles less to the mouth of the Great Kanawha. Prior to the rebellion there was also made and in operation from Richmond to a place called West Point, on York river, a railroad of only some forty miles in length, making the distance from the Ohio to the Chesapeake only about four hundred and thirty or four hundred and forty miles. Another line has been surveyed with a fair prospect of there being a road built on it from Richmond to Newport News, a distance of seventy-five miles, thus affording three outlets by rail from Richmond to the Chesapeake and the Atlantic ocean. At Norfolk the harbor is unsurpassed by any along this continent. Its depth of water is twenty-eight feet, one foot deeper than the harbor at New York. There are also excellent harbors at West Point and Newport News, the former twenty-one and the latter twenty-two feet in depth.

Now, I wish Senators would refer to the maps of the country. If they will do so they will perceive that this Chesapeake and Ohio road, with its connections, which I have just named, with the Chesapeake bay and the ocean, lies on an almost direct line from the mouth of the Chesapeake bay, the center of the Atlantic coast, toward Cincinnati, St. Louis, and the eastern termini of the Pacific railways. It lies along a parallel midway between the rigors of a northern climate, so embarrassing to railroad operations in the winter time, and the humid and heated atmosphere of the lower southern latitudes, so apt to spoil so many articles of trade and commerce during the course of transportation. This road can never be seriously affected by the one or the other of these besetments of cheap, safe, and comfortable travel and transportation. It must be apparent, too, from a mere inspection of the map, that when our system of Pacific railways is completed, and the commerce of the East is crossing our continent, as it will be in a few years on its passage to Europe, it must pass over this road and be deposited along the shores of Virginia to await the demands of the world's commercial marine. It must be no less apparent that a large proportion of the trade and travel of the great Mississippi valley, seeking an eastern outlet to the sea-ports of the Atlantic, will select this route. Various considerations justify such a conclusion. First, look at the distances between the great cities of the West and the Atlantic ocean by this route as compared with other routes. I have before me a table of these distances furnished by a friend, which I suppose is substantially correct. I beg leave to read it in order to show how advantageous this route will be to St. Louis, Cincinnati, Chicago, Louisville, Lexington, and all the intermediate towns and sections of country that are seeking the shortest route to the sea:

Again, these striking advantages are greatly enhanced by the easy grades and curvatures on this road. Coming eastward there is, in all the five hundred and five miles from the Ohio to the sea, no grade exceeding twenty-nine and a half feet to the mile, and only ten miles reaching that grade. From the Ohio river to the base of the Alleghany mountains, a distance of two hundred miles, there is no grade exceeding twenty feet to the mile. The minimum radius of curvature on this road is one thousand feet, and of this only two and a half miles. Sixty per cent. of the road is straight. Compare these statements with the facts in relation to other roads. The maximum grade of the New York and Erie road is sixty feet, of the Pennsylvania Central fifty-three feet, of the Baltimore and Ohio road one hundred and sixteen feet to the mile; and the curvature of neither of these roads is so favorable, I believe, as that of the Chesapeake and Ohio road. These are important considerations, looking to speed, to safety, to economy, and to the wear and tear of machinery. It would seem as if Nature had been in a beneficent mood when she sunk down the grand range of the Alleghany mountains at the point where this road is located over them, and kindly bent the streams on either side to the same point, so as to afford a practicable and easy transit of the coming tide of commerce and communication between the mighty Valley of the Mississippi and the sea.

In considering the advantages which would result to this city and District from a connection with the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad at the point I have designated it will be interesting and useful to advert also to the character and productions of the immediate country through which it passes. In the first place, it would furnish the shortest, and indeed the only, practicable means of reaching the rich nati, Chicago, Louisville, Lexington, and all the intermediate towns and sections of country that are seeking the shortest route to the sea:

and inexhaustible coal-fields of Virginia and West Virginia. These are the most extensive and valuable, perhaps, of any in the world, consisting of the ordinary bituminous, the cannel, and the splint varieties. These coal-fields embrace an area of some twenty-five thousand square miles, or about one tenth of all the known coal area of the world. In many sections there are successive strata, one above the other, cropping out in the same mountain side, aggregating, in some instances, forty or fifty feet of coal capable of being mined without shafting. So far as I have been informed they embrace all of cannel-coal and splint-coal of any considerable value and extent in the United States. This latter variety is entirely free from sulphur, and for smelting ores is in its raw and native condition, as taken from the mine, superior to coke, and almost, if not entirely, equal to charcoal. I have been informed that cannel-coal now commands in the New York market from twenty to twenty-three dollars per ton. I am assured by the officers of the Chesapeake and Ohio road that when their road is completed they will be able to deliver cannel-coal in New York for ten dollars per ton; of course, for considerably less in Washington city, if the connection which I propose were made.

Nor are the deposits of iron, especially in that part of West Virginia, through which the route of this road passes, less abundant and rich than her coal-fields. It also passes by virgin forests of most valuable timber of almost every variety and almost illimitable extent. It traverses the entire region of the justly celebrated Kanawha salines. And so it will be seen that the connection I propose with this road will open to this city, and the completion of the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad, certain to be accomplished in a few years, will open to the whole country these rich resources of coal, iron, salt, and timber—commodities so essential to the comfort and prosperity of all. I beg leave in this connection to read an extract from a pamphlet which I have here. The statements which I read are, I am sure, entitled to full credit:

"The iron of Virginia and West Virginia is of the best kind. Its superiority is attributed to the copper which is found mixed in very large quantity in the ore, which renders it more ductile and increases its capacity for resistance and tension. The ores of Virginia and West Virginia are fully equal to the best Swedish and English. This fact has been proved by repeated experiments made by order of the Government of the United States. These beds of iron ore and veins of the richest coal are situated immediately on and along the line of this railroad route. Often the same mountain or hill contains the salts for fusion of the metal, as well as lime, argil, and wood for making charcoal. Thus all the material for the refinement of iron and its conversion into steel is found collected together in close proximity."

Now, let me invite the attention of Senators more particularly to the connections which this great route must in a few years necessarily make with the railroads of the West, Southwest, and Northwest. If you will cast your eye over the map of railroads west of the Ohio river you cannot fail to perceive that the termini of this Chesapeake and Ohio road, at the mouth of Big Sandy and the Great Kanawha, pointing directly toward Lexington and Louisville, in Kentucky, toward Cincinnati, and so toward St. Louis, indicate beyond controversy a speedy connection with all the great national thoroughfares concentrating at these points.

Now mark how little remains to be done to complete those connections! I have already stated that from one of the termini of this road, namely, that at the mouth of the great Kanawha, a route for a railroad has already been surveyed to the Marietta and Cincinnati railroad, a distance of only twenty-eight miles. The construction of this short link of twenty-eight miles will therefore perfect a continuous and almost direct road from the mouth of the Chesapeake bay to Cincinnati, to St. Louis, and, by the way of the Central Pacific, to San Francisco, forming connections thereby with all the intermediate systems of railways; or, as you must also perceive, by the other terminus at the mouth of the Big Sandy an easy and direct communication by rail may be made with Louisville. Already there is in process of construction, as I understand, a railroad from Lexington, Kentucky, to the terminus of the Chesapeake and Ohio road at the mouth of the Big Sandy; or there might be, and doubtless in a few years there will be, an intermediate connection made with the Ohio railways by the way of Ironton. Thus it will be seen that this great route to the sea, by supplying a few short and trivial links in the chain, will bind itself to the great system of western railways and afford the cheapest and shortest route to the ocean to nearly one half of the people and commerce of the Mississippi Valley. I need hardly remind the Senate how this road connects itself with that great national highway, the Ohio river.

A word or two now in reference to the amendment which I propose to offer. It asks that a company shall be chartered from the District of Columbia to the nearest practicable point of intersection with the Chesapeake and Ohio road which may be found east of Staunton, in Virginia. It is pretty satisfactorily ascertained that this connection can be made by the construction of not exceeding sixty or eighty miles of new road; thus shortening the present railway connections with Staunton by some thirty or forty miles. This being done, the capital of the nation will be placed in direct communication, by an almost straight line, with Cincinnati and Louisville, and so with St. Louis and the Pacific railways, and with all the principal cities of the West, Northwest, and Southwest. You see how easy it will be, in view of the facts I have mentioned, to consummate this great public convenience and benefit. Doubtless, in the course of two or three years, the travel and commerce of a large proportion of the Mississippi Valley, on their direct way to the Atlantic sea-board, will have approached toward Washington as far as the town of Staunton, in Virginia. Shall we hesitate, if we have the constitutional power, to supply this last little link in the great chain of western and southwestern communication with the capital?

Mr. President, I offer the following amendment as an additional section to the bill:

And be it further enacted, That H. D. Cooke, Moses Kelly, Hallet Kilbourn, D. L. Eaton, C. H. Nichols, William Helmick, W. W. Moore, Wright Rives, John O. Evans, J. H. Crocker, Thomas McNamara, D. C. Forney, N. Acker, Esau Pickrell, J. L. Kidwell, A. H. Herr, and Joseph Libbey, of the District of Columbia, and Lewis McKenzie, J. C. Underwood, and Joseph Sear, of the State of Virginia, and all other persons who may become associated with them under this act, together with their successors, are hereby created and erected into a body corporate and politic, in deed and in law, by the name and title of the "National Railroad South," and are hereby authorized and empowered to survey, locate, lay out, construct, equip, operate, use, collect tolls upon, and enjoy a continuous line of railroad with one or more tracks, and a telegraph line, with the appurtenances, from the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, to a point on the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad, in the State of Virginia, east of and as near to Staunton as shall be practicable; and by their said corporate name shall have perpetual succession, and shall be able to sue and be sued, to plead and be impleaded, to defend and be defended in all courts of law and equity within the United States, and may make and use a common seal, and may make and adopt by-laws for the regulation of its government. Said corporation shall have the power to execute mortgages and deeds of trust upon its property and franchises, real and personal; to borrow money and negotiate loans upon its bonds or other securities, and is hereby vested with all the powers necessary to carry into effect the purposes of this act. And the said "National Railroad South" shall, in the construction thereof, have all the powers and be subject to all the restrictions, provisions, and regulations herein prescribed as to the New York and Washington railroad so far as the same are applicable.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from West Virginia was not in the Chamber a while ago when, by direction of the select committee, I moved to strike out two of the railroads contained in this bill with a view to confine it to the one railroad from Washington to New York. As a matter of course, the Senate having adopted that amendment, the same reason ought to induce the Senate to refuse to put this new railroad on this bill. I am in favor of the road now suggested, and I know a good deal about the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad and can indorse much that the Senator has said, but I hope it will not be put on this bill. The bill is now confined simply to one road in order that the question of the power of Congress may be decided, and that the road of most pressing importance may be left alone to stand upon its own merits. I trust, therefore, that the Senator will not press his amendment.

Mr. WILLEY. As I stated, I have some doubt about the power of Congress to charter these corporations, and I should like to see that matter fairly and fully tested; and in order that the sense of the Senate may be ascertained, not desiring at all to complicate the matter, if the Senator from Ohio desires it I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. POMEROY. I have no desire to press this amendment, but I desire to say before the amendment is withdrawn that if the bill is to be confined to securing the building of a road we do not need, and cutting off all we do need, it shaves the bill of all that is valuable in it to me. We are very well accommodated between here and New York to-day, and it is the only route we are accommodated upon. Now the Senator from Ohio proposes to strip this bill of everything valuable in it and confine it to a road between Washington and New York, and then pass it in that shape. There were some features in the bill when it proposed to open new routes to Washington that I thought very desirable. I want several routes to Washington, and I thought the committee were going to give us a bill that would really benefit Washington, the capital of the nation. Now, by the direction of the committee, the Senator tells us, he has stricken out everything except the line from here to New York. You cannot very much improve on the line from here to

New York. We happen to be tolerably well accommodated between here and New York, and yet a new road between these two points is the only provision there is left in the bill.

Mr. President, in my opinion this amendment is of vastly more importance than the bill itself. The time is coming when the great valleys of the Mississippi and Missouri will want to get to Washington, if Washington is to remain anything more than a place merely for Congressmen to assemble in. I apprehend the time is coming when there will be some more importance to this city than the simple fact that it is the seat of Government for the national capital. I know of no reason why it may not be made a commercial business city that will invite the trade and commerce of the great valleys of the West. If we are going to legislate in this direction, exercising powers that have never before been exercised, why not do it on an enlarged and liberal scale? I do not want to die for what is not worth killing me for. I have some doubts about the exercise of this power, but if I have got to help to pass this bill and vote for it simply to facilitate communication between here and New York, and cut off communication from those sections of the country where we need something, it is not worth the paper on which it is written.

Sir, I am in favor of this amendment, and I am opposed to taking out of this bill every valuable thing in it merely to facilitate communication between here and New York, when I undertake to say you cannot get a shorter line than we have now got; you may improve the running of it. But I do not know any reason why we should carry on a war against men who are trying to accommodate us, and withdraw from this bill everything valuable in it to open communication to other sections of the country.

I was going to advocate and vote for the bill, but I repeat it is now stripped of every valuable feature except, as I said, to facilitate commerce between Washington and New York; and we have got too much commerce with New York now. We have got none with the West, the great heart of this country. There is no reason in the world why we should run over to New York any easier than we do now. We get to New York too often by far. New York is the last place we want to go to. This capital of the nation wants to be connected with the rest of the country and mankind, going as they are across this continent to the Pacific. We are building up empires in the West; and if we are only to have communication between New York and Washington our people will never hear of Washington.

I insist upon having a vote on the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia. I desire to vote upon it and to test the sense of the Senate upon it. We propose, if possible, not only to help this city of Washington, but to connect it with what is soon to be the great center of population on this continent—the valley of the Mississippi and Missouri and our possessions beyond. I have not listened to the clamor about removing the capital West; I do not believe a word in it; but I want the West connected with the capital, because this ought to be a city of towering magnificence; its shadow ought to extend over the land. Instead of opening communications where we have already got them, let us open some where we need them.

Mr. SHERMAN. I only desire to say a word in reply to the Senator from Kansas. He has a very good way of showing his friendship to this bill—by refusing to take it up! Now, let me say to the Senator from Kansas that if he is really desirous of passing bills to charter railroads to Washington he must take them one at a time.

Mr. POMEROY. Let us have one for a road that we need and not one that we do not need.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am in favor of all these bills; but Senators seriously object to the idea of putting three or four incorporations in one bill; and several Senators, who were perfectly willing to vote for either separately as a matter of the order of business utterly objected to voting for so many in one bill. We had enough of these combinations of various railroads in the Pacific railroad bill to satisfy me. I generally object to having more than one object in a bill. The Senator may be certain that if this bill is passed another bill will be passed for roads making connection northward, north-westward, and southwestward, so that all these various railroads may be accommodated. As a matter of course I am in favor of the proposition of the Senator from West Virginia; but I do not think it ought to be added to this bill. Let each of these bills stand on its own merits.

If the Senator says we have communication enough with New York, let him vote against the bill, as he would have done at any rate. I did not expect he would vote for it, as a matter of course. There is no railroad competition between Washington and New York. There is a vital necessity for competition. If the Senator does not wish another road to New York, as a matter of course he will vote against the bill. I will vote for the proposition of the Senator from West Virginia as a separate measure; I will vote for, and hope yet to see, a line constructed on the only natural route from Washington westward; that is, to the Point of Rocks, and thence by way of Cumberland to Pittsburg. One of the last sections in this bill provided for a line of railroad to reach the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad, the very one now suggested by the honorable Senator from West Virginia. If the Senate should choose to put these bills together I am perfectly willing to vote for them all together, although I think, as a matter of legislative policy, it would be better to pass them one at a time.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I ask the honorable Senator to allow me to offer my amendment and let that be pending, and then I will renew the motion for an adjournment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the motion withdrawn?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I now renew the amendment that I offered.

Mr. POMEROY. I give notice to the Senator from Ohio that I shall renew the propositions for the construction of these other roads to-morrow and press them to a vote. I am in favor of every one of them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inquire of the Senator from West Virginia whether he has withdrawn his amendment?

Mr. WILLEY. I am informed by several Senators that although they are in favor of this proposition, yet if I insist upon attaching it to this bill they will be constrained by considerations satisfactory to themselves to vote against it. I therefore withdraw it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I now renew the amendment that I offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move that the Senate do now adjourn?

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 21, 1869.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

APPOINTMENT OF MIDSHIPMEN.

Mr. NORRIS, from the Committee on Reconstruction, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1751) in relation to the appointment of midshipmen from the lately reconstructed States; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was reported. It directs the Secretary of the Navy to make appointments of midshipmen to the United States Naval Academy, on or before the 4th day of March next, from any State in which the election of members of the House of Representatives to the Forty-First Congress does not by law take place previous to the 1st day of July, 1869, upon the nomination of the members of the House of Representatives from such States in the present Congress; provided that no such appointment shall be made from any State not by law entitled to the appointment of midshipmen in the year 1869.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I rise to a question of order. Has that subject ever been referred to the Committee on Reconstruction?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It belongs to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. NORRIS. It has been referred to the Committee on Reconstruction, and is reported upon unanimously.

The SPEAKER. It was referred on Monday last.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to refer it to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. And demand the previous question on it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. NORRIS] is entitled to the floor. Does he retain it?

Mr. NORRIS. I do. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BLAINE. I understand the case to be this: the Committee on Naval Affairs are agreed in favor of this bill, but they are not in a position where it can be reported during this session. These southern States are just as much entitled to members of the Naval Academy as any other States, but they will be deprived of the appointment for an entire year unless this bill is passed. I do not see why any gentleman should object to it.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. According to the gentleman's statement the Committee on Naval Affairs not being likely to be called, they undertake to get the bill in by a flank movement, getting it reported by a committee that has no jurisdiction of the matter.

Mr. BLAINE. The jurisdiction is just as the House confers it. If the matter was referred to the Committee on Reconstruction that committee has a right to report upon it.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand by the rules of the Department nominations have got to be made within six months. Now Alabama will have no representation on this floor because the election will not take place in that time.

Mr. PETERS. These gentlemen want the same privilege that is accorded to Representatives of the other States, and if they do not get it by this bill they will not get it at all. My friend from Alabama, [Mr. NORRIS,] who is interested for his constituents, has been before the Committee on Naval Affairs, and although they would be glad to report a bill of this character, they say there will be no opportunity to do so this session, and so, as the next best thing, he has gone to the Committee on Reconstruction, and they have unanimously allowed him to report the bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If I can have the unanimous consent of the House I will modify my motion so as to authorize the Committee on Naval Affairs to report the bill back at any time; but the subject belongs to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the Committee on Reconstruction have no more to do with it than they have with the moon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state that leave to report at any time would require the unanimous consent of the House or a suspension of the rules. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that if the bill be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs they shall have leave to report it back at any time. Is there objection?

Mr. CHANLER. I object.

Mr. PETERS. The State of Alabama has got to get her share of these appointments by this bill unless the objection is withdrawn, or not to get them at all.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. What harm will that do her?

Mr. PETERS. They want to have pupils at the Naval Academy as well as the rest of us.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. What is the state of the question now?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. If it is not referred, can the House act on the bill now?

The SPEAKER. It can.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. Now, if the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. NORRIS] will insist on a vote instead of permitting discussion, I have no doubt that in five minutes from this time the bill will be passed almost unanimously.

Mr. PETERS. Well, let us put it through.

Mr. NORRIS. I demand the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will not make any further opposition in this case; but I enter a permanent objection to any more such bills being referred to the Committee on Reconstruction.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa; and it was disagreed to—ayes 36, noes 91.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. NORRIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON THE NEXT CENSUS.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment, under the resolution of the House of yesterday, of the following select committee on the next census: JAMES A. GARFIELD of Ohio, NATHANIEL P. BANKS of Massachusetts, WILLIAM B. ALLISON of Iowa, ADDISON H. LAFLIN of New York, DAVID HEATON of North Carolina, SAMUEL B. AXTELL of California, and J. S. GOLLADAY of Kentucky.

CLAIM OF JOSEPH ANDERSON.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the request of the Committee of Claims, information relative to the claim of Joseph Anderson, of Nashville, Tennessee, for lumber taken by the United States Army during the war; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF STATE DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in compliance with the acts of May 26, 1842, and —, 1836, a statement showing disbursements of contingent funds, balance unexpended, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, submitting estimates of appropriations required to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the Sioux and other Indians of Dakota for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868; also, a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, submitting estimate of appropriations necessary to fulfill the treaty of February 19, 1867, with the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Sioux Indians; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REMOVAL OF POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

Mr. SHELLABARGER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1752) to regulate the manner of applying to Congress for the removal of the political disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Reconstruction, and ordered to be printed.

ELECTION CONTEST—SWITZLER VS. ANDERSON.

Mr. COOK. I now will call up as a question of privilege the resolutions reported by the Committee of Elections in the contested election case of Switzler vs. Anderson.

The resolutions read as follows:

Resolved, That George W. Anderson is not entitled to a seat in this House as a Representative in the Fortieth Congress from the ninth congressional district of Missouri.

Resolved, That William F. Switzler is entitled to a seat in this House as a Representative from the ninth congressional district of Missouri.

The question was upon agreeing to the first resolution.

Mr. COOK. Mr. Speaker, this is the second report made by the Committee of Elections in this case. If I can have the attention of the House for a little while I presume I can present the points upon which this question turns, so that every gentleman may see what is the matter in dispute. On the 23d of March last the committee made a report in this case, after examining the testimony, in which they recommended the adoption of resolutions the same as those now reported. On the 16th day of July last, after the report had been considered in the House, the report of the committee was recommitted to the Committee of Elections, with instructions to examine the charges made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENJAMIN] against the contestant, with leave to send for persons and papers, and to report thereon to the House. That was so near the close of the session that it was impossible to make the examination and report thereon at the last session of Congress.

The charges made against the contestant, as the Committee of Elections understood, were charges of personal disloyalty, that he had rendered aid and comfort to the enemy, to those engaged in the rebellion against the United States. Although a full opportunity was given, by the adjournment of Congress, to each party to take testimony in relation to these charges, yet no testimony was taken by those maintaining the charge. At this session of Congress the matter came before the committee without any testimony having been taken in support of the charges against the contestant. The charges were based, to a certain extent, upon editorial articles in a newspaper of which the contestant was the acknowledged editor. The contestant furnished a copy of the files of his newspaper, and the committee have examined that file with care. The contestant has also taken a large amount of testimony for the purpose of rebutting the charges which were made against him in the speech made by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BENJAMIN.] I shall not call attention to that testimony, because the conclusion to which the committee have arrived makes it wholly unnecessary.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him for one moment at this point?

Mr. COOK. Certainly, for a question.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I desire to know from the gentleman making this report if the committee, according to the resolution of the House instructing them to do so, made any investigation of this matter? I understand from the remarks of the gentleman that he wishes to imply that the House imposed that duty upon the party making the charge. I did not so understand the resolution of the House. It was directory to the committee to make that investigation. I wish to know if the committee made any investigation of the matter?

Mr. COOK. I will answer that question. The committee, upon meeting after this matter was referred to them, gave notice to the parties of the question which had been referred to them, and that the committee would consider any testimony upon the subject which might be brought before them. The committee did not personally proceed to Missouri to take testimony, nor did they subpoena witnesses of whom they had no knowledge and could have no knowledge.

Mr. BENJAMIN. One word more, if the gentleman pleases. I do not know if the gentleman himself was present at the meeting of the committee, but other members were there who will recollect full well that I did appear before that committee and gave them a list of witnesses whom I asked them to subpoena, who would substantiate whatever charges I made in connection with this matter. I want to know if those witnesses were subpoenaed and examined?

Mr. COOK. No witnesses were subpoenaed by the committee, and I never heard or learned that the names of any witnesses were furnished to the committee.

Mr. UPSON. A moment, if the gentleman pleases.

Mr. COOK. Certainly.

Mr. UPSON. My colleague on the committee [Mr. Cook] will probably recollect that the committee reported a resolution to this House allowing the parties time to take testimony in relation to the matters charged by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BENJAMIN,] extending the time to allow them to take testimony in Missouri; and that time was made use of by one of the parties to take testimony; but the sitting member neglected to take any testimony, and only the testimony taken by the contestant has been brought before the committee for its action since the committee came together at this session. This, I think, is an answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BENJAMIN.] The committee did allow an opportunity to the parties to present evidence for the purpose of settling this question of alleged disloyalty, if any evidence touching upon it could be given by parties in Missouri cognizant of the facts.

Mr. COOK. That, I believe, is the state of the facts. The matter escaped my recollection at the moment.

Now, the committee after examining the file of the newspaper edited by the contestant, have come to the conclusion that there is nothing in that paper to sustain the charge. There are some articles which the committee deem injudicious, some which they deem mischievous in their tendency; but nothing which will bring the contestant within the rule which was adopted by the committee and confirmed by the House in the case of the Kentucky elections, which rule was as follows:

"While the committee entertained no doubt that it is the right and duty of the House to turn back from its very threshold every one seeking to enter who has been engaged in armed hostility to the Government of the United States, or has given aid or comfort to its enemies during the late rebellion, yet we believe that in our Government the right to representation is so sacred that no man who has been duly elected by the legal voters of his district should be refused his seat upon the ground of his personal disloyalty, unless it is proven that he has been guilty of such open acts of disloyalty that he cannot honestly and truly take the oath prescribed by the act of July 2, 1862; and further, that the commission of such acts of disloyalty to the Government should not be suspected merely, but should be proven by clear and satisfactory testimony, and that while more want of active support of the Government or a passive sympathy with the rebellion are not sufficient to exclude a person regularly elected from taking his seat in the House, yet whenever it is shown by proof that the claimant has by act or speech given aid or countenance to the rebellion he should not be permitted to take the oath, and such acts of speech need not be such as to constitute treason technically, but must have been so overt, and public, and must have been done or said under such circumstances, as fairly to show that they were actually designed to and in their nature tended to forward the cause of the rebellion."

One of the articles in the newspaper, and one upon which much stress was laid in the speech of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BENJAMIN,] containing the charges which we were directed to investigate, was the article in relation to the death of Colonel Ellsworth. It is proper for me to say that the contestant denies all responsibility for and all knowledge of this article published in his newspaper, and that he states he disapproved the article when brought to his attention. There was no evidence showing any responsibility on the part of the contestant for that article, except the fact that it appeared as editorial in the newspaper of which he was the acknowledged editor; and it is fair to state that the general tenor and character of the articles in the same paper were very different.

I now pass to a discussion of the questions which were considered in the first report of the Committee of Elections upon this case; and although the testimony is voluminous, yet the questions are simple and easily understood. The ninth congressional district in Missouri comprises ten counties. At the election held on the 6th of November, 1866, for member of Congress, in all the counties of the district, except the county of Callaway, George W. Anderson received 4,876 votes, and William F. Switzler received 4,698, making a majority for Anderson of 178 votes. The county of Callaway gave Mr. Anderson 163 votes, and Mr. Switzler 1,463 votes. If the vote of this county had been added to the others Mr. Switzler would have been elected by a majority of 1,122 votes over Mr. Anderson. The case, therefore, turned wholly upon the question whether the vote of Callaway county should have been counted or not. The secretary of State of Missouri, whose duty it is by the law of Missouri to cast up the votes given for members of Congress, assumed the right to determine that there had been no legal registration of votes in the county of Callaway. The first question to which I ask the attention of the House is whether he had the right to do this. I will briefly refer to the law of Missouri in this connection.

Mr. STOVER. Will the gentleman read the law?

Mr. COOK. I have not the law before me; but it provides that the Governor of the State shall appoint a supervisor of registration in each county, who is also the president of the board of appeals and revision. The supervisor of registration in each county is to appoint an officer of registration in each election district; and it is the duty of these officers to make the actual registration in the manner provided by law. When this is done, the superintendent of registration and the several district officers of registration, constituting a board of registration, are required to meet on certain days prior to the election to hear appeals from the several district registers, and generally to revise the registration in the several election districts in the county and act upon objections to any who may have been registered as accepted voters, the superintendent acting as the president of the board. When this is done it becomes the duty of the superintendent to furnish a copy of the registration to the secretary of State, by whom it is to be preserved in his office. The only other duty of the secretary of State is to cast up the votes when returned to his office. The law nowhere confers upon him the right to pass upon the legality of the registration or the legal qualifications of the voters after the return is made to the secretary of State; nor does it confer upon him any judicial or discretionary power whatever in relation to either of those questions. His duties are purely ministerial.

The registration of the vote of Callaway county was returned to the office of the secretary of State, as provided by law, with the following certificate:

"I hereby certify that the above and foregoing list of registration is a correct copy, as furnished me by the officers of registration, for the various election districts in and for Callaway county, Missouri."

There was something more appended to this certificate, of which I shall speak presently.

Mr. GRAVELY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question in regard to the law of the State of Missouri?

Mr. COOK. Certainly.

Mr. GRAVELY. I wish to inquire of the gentleman whether the registration law of Missouri does not require the registering officer of each county to send to the secretary of State a copy of the registration of the county, with his certificate as to whether the registration is legal or illegal; whether the law does not further provide that after the election the clerk of the county shall certify the vote to the secretary of State; and whether the law does not further provide that the secretary of State, taking this certificate of the registering officer and the certificate of the clerk, shall cast up the votes of that county?

Mr. COOK. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that the law of Missouri requires the superintendent of registration to certify whether the registration is legal or illegal. I understand that, on the contrary, the law requires the superintendent of registration, after the board of registration has met, to certify the registration as the registration of a certain district, and return it thus certified to the secretary of State, whose duty it is to file it in his office; and the only other duty of the secretary of State is to cast up the votes.

Mr. GRAVELY. I wish to ask another question. If the gentleman himself had been the secretary of State of Missouri and the superintendent of registration of Callaway county had sent him a list of names certifying that it was composed of children under the age of ten years, and that they voted for a certain man for Congress, would he have counted them or not?

Mr. COOK. I will answer that question no further than this: by the law of Missouri the secretary of State has no right to pass upon the legality of the registration, and no matter what I or anybody else would have done, I hold the law to be that his action in that regard was no more than the action of any other man in Missouri having no legal authority or jurisdiction of the matter.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I ask the gentleman if he is not aware that the law of the State of Missouri requires the superintendent of registration to append a certificate to the copy of the registration list, and if it does not also make that certificate evidence of the facts therein stated; and if in this case the superintendent of registration did not certify specifically that the registration of Callaway county was illegal in consequence of intimidation and other things that prevailed in that county at that time?

Mr. COOK. The law of Missouri did make it the duty of the superintendent to append a certificate of certain facts to the registration when he returned it. I understand that the law required him to identify the registration of that county, to certify that that was the registration of the county. He did assume to certify other facts, of which I shall speak presently.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I would like the gentleman to answer the other question as to the character of the certificate in that case.

Mr. COOK. I am going to speak of that in its order. I admit for myself that if a man was not legally registered in the county of Callaway he had no legal right to vote in the State of Missouri, and that the constitution and law of that State are both valid and binding. There was something more appended to this certificate of which I shall presently speak, but this was the fact, and the only fact, to which the superintendent of registration had the legal right to certify.

When the secretary of State assumed the right to determine that there had been no legal registration in Callaway county he assumed to decide a question he had no legal right to decide, and his decision concluded no one and determined nothing; the case stands precisely as it would stand if he had refused to cast up the vote of Callaway county, assigning no reason, and having no reason for such refusal. It seems clear, then, that the certificate of election should have been given to Mr. Switzler.

But it is said that this House should, without regard to the action of the secretary of State of Missouri, itself determine whether there was a proper registry of voters in Calla-way county, and whether the persons voting for Mr. Switzler in that county had a right to vote under the law of Missouri. This I believe to be true, and also for myself believe that the constitution and law of the State of Missouri are such as that State had a right to make, and are valid and binding, and if I could see from the evidence in this case that there had been no legal registration in that county, or that persons had voted for Mr. Switzler who had no legal right to vote under the constitution and laws of Missouri in sufficient number to have given him the majority apparent from the returns, I should have no hesitation in voting against his right to a seat in this House. And I admit also that no man had a right to vote at that election in that district who was not legally registered as a voter; and this brings before us the only remaining question in the case, which is: Does the evidence disclose such a state of facts as will warrant this House in declaring that there was no legal registry of voters in Callaway county, or that persons who had no legal right to vote, equal in number to the majority received by Mr. Switzler, did actually vote for him at that election?

Before considering the evidence upon the point in regard to those disqualified under the law, there are three facts which I will state and which are undisputed, and which ought to be considered in determining the question:

First. The Governor who appointed the superintendent of registration for Callaway county and the superintendent appointed were the political friends of the sitting member; the whole machinery of registration was in their hands.

Second. There was no actual force or violence used in any registration district in that county in connection with the registration of the voters.

Third. Each person registered was required to take the following oath:

"I, A. B. do solemnly swear that I am well acquainted with the terms of the third section of the second article of the constitution of the State of Missouri, adopted in the year 1855, and have carefully considered the same; that I have never, directly or indirectly, done any of the acts in said section specified; that I have always been truly and loyally on the side of the United States against all enemies thereof, foreign and domestic; that I will ever bear true faith and allegiance to the United States, and will support the Constitution and laws thereof as the supreme law of the land, any law or ordinance of any State to the contrary notwithstanding; that I will to the best of my ability protect and defend the Union of the United States, and not allow the same to be broken up and dissolved or the Government thereof to be destroyed or overthrown under any circumstances if in my power to prevent it; that I will support the constitution of the State of Missouri, and that I make this oath without any mental reservation or evasion, and hold it to be binding on me."

The only legitimate proof that men were registered who were not legal voters would be proof showing in such case that they were so disqualified. Such proof is given in perhaps a dozen cases, certainly not more. The registration may be shown to be illegal in one of two ways: first, by showing that the registry lists have not been authenticated and returned according to law; and second, by showing that, although the lists were returned and were properly certified, yet that the officers certifying erred in judgment in determining who were entitled to be registered or were guilty of fraud in registering the voters or in making the returns. It was not claimed before the committee in this case that the evidence shows that the registry lists of Callaway county were not properly certified and duly returned to the secretary of State, and the only question left is, is it shown that persons were registered as voters who had no legal right to be so registered, or to vote under the laws of Missouri? It is claimed that there was such a state of feeling in that county at the time the registration was made that the officers were intimidated, and did not and could not obtain evidence to ascertain who were and who were not entitled to be registered, and were afraid to refuse to register those whom they knew to be loyal. The proof actually made upon this question is as follows: the superintendent of registration for Callaway county, in addition to the certificate required by law, appended to the registered list the following:

"And I hereby further certify that the registration law in its letter and spirit was not carried out in any one of the election districts of said county; that such a system of intimidation and threatening was carried on by the disloyal, and those opposed to the law, as to deter loyal men from undertaking the registration in most of the election districts, and was consequently intrusted to men who most shamefully disregarded the law."

In the few districts where men could be had who were willing to register according to the law there was such intimidation and threatening used as to deter those who were willing to make objections to those they knew not to be entitled to registration as qualified voters, and, as a consequence, the law could not and was not carried out, as the certificates hereto appended show.

Given under my hand this December 12, 1866.

WILLIAM H. THOMAS,
Supervisor of Registration for Callaway county, Missouri.

This certificate was given in a matter about which the law did not require him to certify, and has precisely the same effect as evidence as the unsworn statement of any other man, and no more. No rule of evidence ever admitted before any tribunal could give any effect whatever to such a certificate. It was in the power of the superintendent of registration and the revising board to have withheld their certificates from the registry lists, and their duty to do so if they had legal evidence that the same were not legally prepared; but, having once appended the certificate which authenticated the list, they could not invalidate it by an authorized certificate. Before returning the list, Thomas made entries against the names of seven hundred and thirty persons registered as qualified voters. Thomas had no right to make such entries upon the list. They were not made in the performance of any duty imposed upon him by the laws of Missouri. Upon what evidence did he make these entries—upon his own knowledge or upon common fame? Certain it is that the law of Missouri did not give to Mr. Thomas the right to determine any such question by his certificate, or without giving to the parties interested the opportunity to be heard before their right to vote was thus summarily determined; and notwithstanding all that he knew or believed concerning these he allowed their names to remain upon the lists as qualified voters.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I ask the gentleman if he is not aware that the laws of Missouri require the Governor to make out the form of the registration list, and that in pursuance of that law he made the precise form that is used in this case with that column for remarks; and that the registration officer was required by law to make these remarks?

Mr. COOK. It is not my understanding of the law of Missouri that it confers any rights whatever upon the superintendent of registration to make any such entry against the name of any man.

Mr. UPSON. I would like to ask this question: if the names of every one of these persons whose vote is objected to in that registration list, being marked as disloyal or otherwise, were stricken out or not counted would it still affect the result? Would not Mr. Switzler be still elected?

Mr. COOK. Mr. Switzler would still be elected if the votes of every one of these men against whose names these entries were made by Mr. Thomas were stricken out; it would still leave Mr. Switzler several hundred majority.

Mr. MILLER. By what majority would it elect him?

Mr. COOK. There were 730 of these men, and Mr. Switzler's majority, counting the vote of Callaway county, was 1,120; so that he was elected by several hundred majority.

There is one other fact to which I wish to call the attention of the House, and that is that although these marks were made on the registration list by the superintendent of registration, yet the names of these men were by the superintendent and the other officers of the board allowed to remain upon the lists as properly qualified voters. Now, there is one point of view which is entirely conclusive upon this question. When the supervisor of registration registered, against the name of C. O. Atkinson, "enrolled disloyal in 1862; required to take the oath of allegiance"—when he made that remark opposite to his name, if he had the right at that time to pass upon the question he ought to have refused to allow the name to remain as that of a qualified voter upon the registry list; or if he had no right to determine that question, then he had no right to make the entry upon the list. It seems to be certain if he had not any right to pass upon the question or to make the entry upon the list, then it is no evidence; if he had a right to pass upon the question, then it was to him insufficient evidence, from the fact that he allowed the name to remain upon the registry list as that of a legal voter.

Mr. GRAVELY. In regard to that point I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. COOK. I will yield for a question.

Mr. GRAVELY. I would ask whether the testimony does not show that the superintendent of registration swears himself that he was compelled to put that man's name there for fear of his life?

Mr. COOK. The superintendent of registration did not put the man's name there at all; it was put there by another officer. He does not swear to any such thing. He could not swear to it; for he did not register the man, and it was not lawful for him to register him. He was rejected by an assistant register whom he appointed for that purpose.

The testimony of Mr. Thomas will be found in Miscellaneous Document, No. 39, commencing on page 19. He swears as follows:

"I was appointed supervisor of Callaway county after the resignation of Judge Ansell.

"Question. Did you appoint the township registrars?

"Answer. I appointed two of them only.

"Question. By whom were the others appointed?

"Answer. By Thomas Ansell.

"Question. State what difficulties, if any, you had in the execution of the registry law?

"Answer. I had some difficulty in getting men to serve as registrars whom I thought would faithfully carry out the law, but after the work commenced I had no difficulty, as I had nothing to do with it.

"Question. Did you certify the lists of registration up to the secretary of State?

"Answer. I gave the certificates that were appended to the registration.

"Question. In certifying to the secretary of State copies of registration of the different townships in the county, under the head of remarks, in designating persons as disloyal, as under bonds for disloyalty, and for other disqualifications as voters, upon what evidence did you act?

"Answer. In cases of bonded persons I took it from a list furnished me from the adjutant general's office; those under the head of remarks who were designated as enrolling disloyal were taken from an enrollment made by Colonel Krekel in 1862; under the head of other remarks there were very few of them. The remarks made of this last class were made upon my own knowledge, or facts generally admitted."

In other words, common fame!

"Question. Were these lists of disloyal persons made by Colonel Krekel, or copies of them furnished to the registrars?

"Answer. Yes, sir.

"Question. Were persons upon these lists as disloyal registered as qualified voters?

"Answer. I answer, yes; in the county about five hundred.

"Question. Was there a proper enforcement of the registry law in Callaway county?

"Answer. It seems to me as though every man ought to know it was not.

"Question. State whether there was a system of intimidation in this county to deter officers of registration from properly enforcing the registry law?

"Answer. Before the commencement of the registration there was a great deal of talk against the registration law, and threats that it should not be carried out, which created what I call a system of intimidation that deterred many men from undertaking the registration who were disposed to faithfully carry out the law.

"Question. What advice was given to the people concerning the law by the Conservative press, speakers, and candidates for office?

"Answer. Their advice was somewhat various; some advised confederate soldiers to open polls of their own; others advised their friends to go and take the oath and demand their right to vote, and vote, conveying the idea to my mind that they must do so peaceably if they could and forcibly if they could not. A great many persons advised the taking of the oath and registering, holding it to be unconstitutional and of no force."

In his cross-examination he testifies as follows:

"Question. In your certificate to the secretary of State, December 12, 1866, you stated that there 'was such threatening and intimidation used as to deter loyal men from making objections to the registration of the disloyal. State who it was that intimidated and threatened, and what they did and said?

Answer. It was the general talk throughout the county among the disloyal that they intended to have a "free election or a free fight," and they intended to register anyhow, or have a fuss over it. That kept men from going to the place of registration and laying in objections.

Question. Do you remember the name of a single citizen of Callaway county who threatened or deterred any one from going forward and making objections?

Answer. I often heard persons say that they would hate to undertake the registration of this county, and that the man who did it would find it a difficult job.

Question. Did you write this certificate which you signed and returned to the secretary of State with the enrollment of this county?

Answer. I did, sir.

Question. Was it not suggested, in whole or in part, by the secretary of State?

Answer. As well as I can recollect, I went to the secretary of State with the list of the registration, and while there I told him as near as I could the manner in which the registration had been done up in the county, when he replied to me that if this be the case and I could make a certificate to that effect he thought it probable the whole thing could be thrown out. This is about the substance of all I said to him on the subject. I left the registration with him, not knowing what he would do with it.

Question. What did you understand the secretary of State to mean by saying that it "might all be thrown out?"

Answer. I understood him to mean that he would consider the propriety of the step.

I have not time to read the testimony fully; but the testimony of Turner, Miller, Johnson, Cornell, McKinney, and others, reported between pages 12 and 21 of this report, is all the testimony taken to show that there could be no legal registration of voters in Callaway county. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that of the men who made the actual registration, John Vinson, A. B. Maupin, Thomas J. Ferguson, L. B. Hunt, J. D. Snedcor, and George A. Moore, all certify that they made a registration without hearing or knowing of any threats or being in any way intimidated in the registration. They were the men who made the actual registration, the men appointed by the superintendent of registration of that county, and yet the registration of the precincts made by them was thrown out equally with the registration of precincts made by other officers, upon the ground that the officers making the registration were threatened and deterred by threats of violence from making a fair and just registration; and yet these men who made the registration testify that they knew of no threats and heard of none, and that they were not afraid and were not intimidated in any way.

The testimony of Mr. John Vinson, one of the registrars of Callaway county, is as follows:

Question. Were you in any wise interfered with in the discharge of your duties by threats or intimidation of any kind?

Answer. I was not.

Question. Have you any knowledge of any system of intimidation and threatening, by the disloyal or those opposed to the registry law, to deter you or other loyal men from undertaking the registration, or deter any citizen from making objections to the registration of persons who applied for registration and who had no right to register?

Answer. I have not.

Question. In the discharge of your duties as registrar did you carry out in letter and spirit, and require those who applied for registration to conform to, the registry law?

Answer. I did, to the best of my knowledge and ability. Whenever citizens applied for registration I asked the bystanders in an audible voice if any of them knew any objection to the person's registering; if so, to come forward and state it. This was my invariable practice, and also to ask those who applied for registration if they considered themselves qualified voters under the constitution and laws of the State; and no man registered without first taking and subscribing the oath of loyalty.

Thomas H. Beeding, one of the registrars of Callaway county, also testifies to the same facts. The testimony of A. B. Maupin, one of the registrars of Callaway county, is as follows:

Question. Were you in any manner threatened, intimidated, or otherwise interfered with in the discharge of your duties as registrar?

Answer. I was not.

Question. In your opinion would objectors to applicants for registration have been in any danger of violence and insult from persons opposed to the registry law, or others?

Answer. I do not know that they would. I heard nothing of the kind.

Question. Is the certificate of W. H. Thomas, supervisor of registration, as set out in the answer of Mr. Anderson, contestee, [and which was read to the witness,] true or false, so far as your district is concerned?

Answer. I believe, so far as it relates to my district, it is false.

The testimony of Thomas J. Ferguson, one of the registrars of Callaway county, is as follows:

Question. As such officer were you in any manner threatened or intimidated or interfered with in the discharge of your duties?

Answer. No, sir.

Question. Did you, as registrar, carry out in letter and spirit the registration law, or allow any person to register who did not conform to said law?

Answer. I did carry out the law to the best of my ability, and did not allow any one to register who did not conform to it.

Question. Did you allow any person to register as a voter whom you did not regard as entitled to vote under the law?

Answer. I did not.

Perhaps the political sentiments of the men who give this testimony should be considered. Upon that point the testimony of Mr. Vinson is as follows:

Question. During the war were you not an outspoken friend of the Government of the United States and a Union man, and are yet?

Answer. I was, and am yet.

The testimony of Mr. Maupin upon that point is as follows:

Question. During the existence of the rebellion and up to this time were you a friend of the United States and advocate of the Government and a Union man, or not?

Answer. I was, and rejoiced at the overthrow of the rebellion.

The testimony of Mr. Ferguson is as follows:
